DIRECTIONS.

Correspondents will please direct all communications intended for the Editor to 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La. Communications, as intended for the Business Department should be addressed to the Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Write with ink, and only on one side of the paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after two weeks, notify us, and we will make it right. Papers will be continued unless subscribers order otherwise.

Glances at the World.

The Scientific American, in taking a retrospect of the year 1905, does not talk very hopefully of the Panama Canal. The editor says: "We shall not be charged with having an undue estimate of the importance of the Panama Canal, if we state that this is one of the most serious problems, political, commercial, or military, confronting this country to-day; nor shall we be accused of undue pessimism if we suggest that the way in which we have handled this great problem during the past few months has added nothing to our reputation for constructive and executive ability in a work of this magnitude. There have been resignations without number, including that of the Chief Engineer; we have appointed Boards of Control, only summarily to disband them; we have spent $10,000,000, even before we know what kind of a canal we intend to build, or by what particular method we will build it; and finally, after calling together an advisory board, composed of the most representative engineers of the world, in order that they may tell us just what kind of a canal we should construct, we are hysterically threatening to ignore their decision even before they have had time officially to render it. The Scientific American is of the opinion that there are just three things for the United States to do, if it is to maintain its national dignity and successfully carry through this gigantic work: the first is to accept without question the type of canal recommended by the Board; the second is to let the whole work by contract under the absolute supervision of a chief engineer; and the third is to vote him ungrudgingly the appropriations which are necessary to carry on the work upon the scale, and by the methods, that he shall determine. If this be done, the United States within a single decade, will possess a sea-level canal, deep enough and broad enough for any possible development in the size of the ships of the future, and capable of giving them unhindered passage from the Atlantic to the one tidal lock on the Pacific. Moreover, if these conditions are fulfilled, we are satisfied that a sea-level canal will be placed at the service of the country in practically the same time as one built with locks and having the same capacity."

In Manila it is evident that the relations of the Roman Catholic Church to its followers is not what is desired. The statement is made that "when Secretary Taft was in Manila lately, he called the attention of Papal Delegate Agius and the bishops to the fact that the promise of Pope Leo and Cardinal Rampolla that the money paid for the Friars' lands should be used for the Church in the Philippines had not been observed. To the bishops' complaint that there was delay in allowing them to resume possession of Church property, Secretary Taft is said to have replied that the rights of the Roman Catholic Church would be observed and protected when they were settled, either by agreement or by the courts. And he advised them to ask the Supreme Court to decide the question of their title to property claimed by the Independent Filipino Church founded by Aglipay." The bishops, according to the report, complained that Roman Catholic interests were not protected by the Philippine Commission, even by Judge James F. Smith, although he is a Catholic. Payment was asked for the occupation of property by American troops and financial assistance for the parochial schools. Secretary Taft answered that it was impossible to assist the parochial schools, because "it was contrary to a fundamental principle of the United States Constitution." However, the hope was expressed to Secretary Taft that "justice to the schools would be done when they are attended by a majority of the children." The Manila Roman Catholic prelates, it is clear, are determined to get this Government to support their schools, if it is at all possible, regardless of the Constitution. Again it has been demonstrated that the attitude of the Roman Catholic Church has not changed.—Central Christian Advocate.

It strikes us as a bit inconsistent for the secular press to stand for truth and righteousness and honesty, as does every respectable journal in the country, and at the same time make light of those who are a little more earnest and demonstrative than their fellows in denunciation of wrongdoing. This is particularly offensive when in connection with making light of the individual, there is an evident purpose to bring his doctrine into contempt. The rashness of the speaker is no excuse for casting doubt upon the truth of what he says. It does not promote the good things for which the papers stand, but the contrary. A certain preacher not long since denounced grafters and the big salaried insurance officers in unusual terms. His congregation, made up largely of very rich people, took offense, and, of course, the newspaper got hold of the facts. Now the preacher is notorious. Not content with telling how the preacher denounced the rich sinners—consigning them to future punishment—but they go on naming the rich sinners, and measuring the penalty to which they were supposed to be subject, by years, speaking all the while as if the preacher had done this thing himself. It was evidently an attempt to make light of serious things. The reporter who got up the matter may have intended to be funny, but a well-balanced editor, who has respect for the truth, should not have allowed such a caricature of serious things to appear in his paper.

The Legislature of Mississippi will soon convene, and the forces of the "Whisky Devil" are getting ready for a fight. The forces of righteousness will also be on hand. We copy the following from a dispatch to the Daily Picayune: "It is understood here that one or two whisky men have been to town during the past week, and that at least one of them has engaged board and lodging for the session of the Legislature. This gentleman is confident that there is going to be a great fight made on the whisky interests of the State, and he is lining up his forces for an earnest campaign. It has been stated time and again that the Prohibitionists, the White Ribboners and other workers in that field have made up their minds to secure constitutional prohibition if possible, and they will bend every energy in that direction. Some of the foremost men in the State are with the prohibition element this time, and it is confidently predicted that they are going to give the whisky contingent the fight of their lives. Constitutional prohibition was defeated last session by a very close margin, and the chances are that the whisky men are not so strong now as then. It is said there have been defections in the wet counties, where the 500 population law cut down the number of saloons very materially. Those villages that lost out under the law are now said to have turned prohibition, and some of them are demanding that whisky be run out of their large, as well as their small towns."

There is scarcely a township throughout our whole land destitute of a public school. As a neighborhood institution, the people know and appreciate it. But the great body of the people know little or nothing of the magnitude of the system—nor, indeed, of the educational development of the country. We can all form an idea by studying the figures as given out by Dr. Harris, the United States Commissioner of Education. The Commissioner says, as quoted by Zion's Herald that "the number of pupils enrolled in the common schools of the United States during the fiscal year 1905 was 16,256,038—or 20 per cent of the entire population as estimated by the Census Bureau. It is seen by this that the public school system reaches the people very generally. In the colleges of the country 118,029 students were enrolled; 1,370,244 pupils were enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, and 152,479 in normal and other professional schools and manual training schools. Besides the aggregate of 17,896,890 pupils thus accounted for, 603,101 students were enrolled in special institutions, more or less educational in their character and having more or less of a practical business aim. It is evident from the fact that 18,589,991 persons, most of them of youthful age, are engaged formally in the tasks and processes of "education," that the ideal of "knowledge for power" has taken a strong hold on the imagination of the American people."

A bit of interesting news comes from Washington to the effect that "the Blue Book" will soon be issued. The book is the official register of the United States, compiled by Chief Clerk Dawson, of the Deaprtment of the Interior. "A recapitulation of the employes in the different departments, the Government Printing Office and the offices of the District of Columbia, shows the total number of persons in the service in the City of Washington to be 25,481, receiving an aggregate compensation of $27,145,709. The employes are distributed as follows: Department of State, 120; Treasury, 6,301; War, 1,484; Justice, 346; Postoffice, 1,169; Navy, 668; Interior, 4,082; Agriculture, 1,609; Commerce and Labor, 1,394; Government Printing Office, 4,364; and Government of the District of Columbia, 4,044." Verily, Uncle Sam has an army of servants.

AN OFFICER INTERVIEWED.

Uder title of "An Officer Interviewed," Rev. R. O. Lowry, of Whitecastle, La., pays his respects to one sworn to enforce the law. We quote from Brother Lowry's Monthly Bulletin:

"In a recent interview with the Deputy Sheriff who resides in our town, he boldly stated that he didn't believe in the Sunday-Law, the Catholics didn't anywhere keep it, and I was meddling with what I had no business in trying to enforce it. I replied that if he didn't believe in America's and Louisiana's laws he ought to go back to Russia, or wherever he came from. It seems that they are not keeping the Sunday nor any other law there just at this time. And as for myself, I have every right of a Louisiana citizen, and I don't propose to have them trampled on by lawless people who don't believe in law and order. I am no imposter nor intruder in Whitecastle, and expect to see that the State laws protect my wife and children and the children over whom I am pastor from lawless insult. Why should I, as a free-born citizen, with native rights, sit down dumb and see some greedy, unpatriotic foreigners, naturally lawless and un-American, put their heels of anarchy on the sacred laws that secures to me my American rights and institutions of liberty? You may answer as you may, but as for me, I expect to stand by the law that protects.

"When citizens of other countries come to us to respect our laws and Christian institutions, they certainly demand every protection and brotherly love, for but a few generations ago we were all foreigners. But when they come here to butcher the safeguards of our American liberty and happiness, they need a course in the penitentiary to teach them that America is not as 'free' as they had supposed. When a Christian man, who believes in keeping law with a good conscience can't engage in a competitive business in Christian America without wicked men forcing him into Sunday lawlessness, it is time to call a halt and ask whither we are drifting?

"As to the charge our honorable deputy made against our Catholic co-religionists, I will let their leaders answer. That there are true and patriotic citizens among them, as among Protestants and Jews, I know, and don't suppose they would relish the charge of lawlessness.

"But are our laws safe in the hands of a man who is under oath to arrest any violator on the spot, with no further evidence than his own knowledge, and yet doesn't believe in the law? It's a wonder the Legislature didn't send a special committee to him to see whether or not the law about to be enacted agreed with his views of legislation! But as he didn't make the law, the honorable thing for him to do is to resign and cancel his oath of office and let some man who believes in American institutions assume the responsibility of enforcing her laws."

What Brother Lowry says of this officer may be said of others. In one of our towns where there are no open whisky shops the city fathers passed an ordinance forbidding the use of fireworks within "three blocks of the business part of town." The ordinance was fresh from the City Council; yet on Monday morning last the street in the very heart of the business section was strewn with the remains of fireworks, showing that no attention had been paid to a city law. It is thus that law officers and older citizens train a future generation of law-breakers. And yet men rise up and say "preachers meddle with business that does not concern them" when they call for law-enforcement.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Bible Cause.

To the Bishop and Brethren of the Mississippi Conference: Dear Fathers and Brethren—Your Board beg leave to make the following report:

Our Conference paid last year the sum of $1,203 to this great and useful institution. We have paid this year on a $1,500 assessment $1,301.40. From the above we deduct $2.45 for expenses. We regret that we are not able to do more in the support of this important institution, which has been the advance guard of our missionary host in preparing the way for their glorious work. The needs of society are extreme. It has expended its reserve fund and is threatened with indebtedness.

We, therefore, recommend that at an early date in the coming Conference year special days be arranged so as to have the presence of Dr. Geo. D. French at as many of these meetings of special arrangement as possible.

He has promised to visit our districts where he is wanted and can serve the best interest of the cause. We believe that it would be to the best interest of the Society to change that part of the American Revised Version of the Bible, which seems to encourage sectarianism, and the money sent at once to our Conference Treasurer. We recommend that the assessment for the year 1906 shall be the same as last year—$1,500—and apportioned as follows:

Meridian District	$225.00
Forest District	185.00
Seashore District	315.00
Jackson District	225.00
Brookhaven District	200.00
Natchez District	175.00
Vicksburg District	175.00

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR.

A recent editorial in these columns, based on an article in the Commercial-Appeal, giving a history of the origin of Vanderbilt University, moved the Rev. C. J. Nugent to write us the following note, which we gladly print:

My Dear Doctor: Your editorial, "Honor to Whom Honor," recalls to my mind the fact that the idea of a great central university for Southern Methodism was original with another, though it may have been so also with Dr. Johnson.

In 1870, at the District Conference of Columbus District, Mobile Conference, Dr. Larabee, educator, of Columbus, Miss., Chairman of a committee of which I was a member, wrote a report which included a scheme for a general system of education for the whole Church. It provided for parochial, district, annual conference institutions of ascending grades, culminating in a great university for the whole Church. It was adopted as a memorial, forwarded to the General Conference, soon to meet in Memphis that year, and a notice of it published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, if I remember aright.

REPORT ON SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Mississippi Conference.

Your Committee on Sabbath Observance, feeling that the duty of keeping the Sabbath holy, ought to be placed on high moral grounds, where it rightly belongs, would call the attention of the Conference to the fact that the violation of this law is an immorality just as much so as to violate the law which says "thou shalt not steal."

We are very much gratified at the reports which come to us here and there of a growing respect for the Sabbath, indicating a developing conscience on the subject.

After a somewhat limited review of the literature furnished by the Sunday League of America, we express the conviction that this is one of the most important movements of the age, and worthy of our heartiest sympathy.

The International Sunday Rest Congress held in St. Louis last year made new literature on this subject, which is now being published and circulated by the said League. We also suggest that the members of the Conference will find it valuable and worthy of patronage. We heartily commend the work done by the Sunday League of America in all parts of our great country.

Gladly do we welcome the coming and greatly appreciate the address of Dr. Edward Thompson delivered during our present session, and here notify him that our latch-strings hang always out to him, and we bid him welcome to all our privileges.

So important does our Church consider the work of the League that it has imbodied in the duties of a bishop that of appointing a preacher to its work as occasion may demand. Inasmuch as this is true, we indorse the proposition of the said League to set aside the week following Easter as Lord's Day week, and trust our pastors will all preach on the subject, and ask the people to pray for and teach their children their obligation to observe the Lord's Day.

Again, we exhort all professing Christians, and especially our preachers, to deny themselves conveniences and pleasures in an earnest effort to keep the Sabbath Day holy.

As these facts are before us, be it

Resolved, That we, as a Conference, pledge ourselves to a more earnest effort to develop the growing conscience mentioned, and to a greater consistency on our own part.

ANGEL CHILDREN.

Is there any happier woman in this world than that mother whose each successive little one seems to her but one more darling angel to continually lift her thoughts toward the sunshine of perfect happiness? But sorry is the lot of that poor mother to whom motherhood has ceased to be a cause of rejoicing, but has become instead a burden to be dreaded and looked forward to with melancholy and apprehension.

"About three months before our last baby was born (which is our fourth), writes Mrs. Nellie Carl, of Myrtlepoint, Coos Co., Oregon, "my health was very poor. I had been troubled for about eight years with female disease. I doctored with good physicians but obtained no relief, so I wrote to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, and was advised to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I did so, and am happy to say my health began to improve and I did my work up to the last, and felt splendid.

"I got along finely during confinement, and have the healthiest baby I ever saw. When he was three months old he weighed eighteen pounds; he is now seven months old and weighs twenty-four pounds. I can say I have had no return of my old troubles. I thank you very much for the good you have done me."

Any woman may write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., a statement of her case, which will be considered in absolute confidence by this physician who stands among the foremost specialists of the century in the treatment of women's diseases. He will send her (in a plain, sealed envelope) sound, sensible, valuable advice free of all charge.

Dr. Pierce's great thousand-page, illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser will be sent free, paper-bound, for 21 one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, or cloth bound for 31 stamps.

My Index to lamps and their chimneys tells all about lamps and lamp-chimneys. I will gladly mail it free to all who take the trouble of writing for it.

A bad chimney is dear at any price. The chimney makes the lamp.

My name is on it, if it is a MACBETH—that is for your protection—and mine, too. Address, MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

LETTER FROM REV. H. P. LEWIS.

One more Conference year, with all of its opportunities, whether improved or abused, is a thing of the past. What a solemn thought—gone, never to return! That unkind word, thought or deed made by you, my brother, is recorded against you. Think of it! I am more and more impressed with the fact as the years come and go, that we preachers and all ought to take heed to the words of our Savior and others when we are admonished to "take heed" to our ways, etc.

Our Conference session was an occasion of great joy and satisfaction to preachers and people. Most of our preachers were looking well. Brothers Black, Powell, and perhaps one or two others seemed a little under the weather. But few words of complaint were heard from anyone. People and preachers seemed to be in a splendid humor.

Our Bishop was at his best, both in the pulpit and chair. He is our "Mississippi Bishop," and we of the Mississippi Conference are proud of him. He came as near giving universal satisfaction in stationing the preachers for another year as any bishop we have had for many years.

It is difficult to please everybody. Some people, preachers and others, think more highly of themselves than they ought. Brother Highhead said to Brother Blank: "The mistake you made was in not spending a few weeks in Millsaps College, then a few days in Vanderbilt." Well, I have often thought we little fellows ought to be satisfied with anything we can get. For forty-eight years I have labored under the disadvantage of a lack of literary education. If I had my life to live over, I think I would spend at least five or six years in preparing for the work of the ministry. It is a fact that, as a rule, our educated men get the best appointments, and it ought to be so. I am perfectly willing to take a back seat, and let our educated, wide-awake, enterprising, up-to-date, young men, who come forth with a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost, take the lead. Our people demand an educated ministry, and they are right, provided they are truly called of God to preach the Gospel and have received the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and preach with the power and demonstration of the Spirit.

Let all of our young preachers ever be mindful of the admonition of our beloved Senior Bishop, when he said on one occasion: "Preach the Word; don't quote poetry, but preach; don't manipulate, but PREACH." And let that preaching be the GOSPEL.

Gloster is the biggest little town I ever saw. She entertained two Methodist Conferences at one time.

Bishop Cottrell, of the Colored M. E. Church of America, who presided, was introduced to our Conference on Saturday. He made a telling speech in favor of the Industrial School. He is laboring to establish at Holly Springs, Miss. We gave him $200 for his school. If a preacher has money when he goes to Conference, he is not likely to have any when he returns home.

But few changes were made in the Vicksburg District. H. J. Moore goes from Rocky Springs to Fanning in Jackson District. M. B. Sharbrough, transferred from the Pacific Conference, goes to Harrison. J. M. Lewis, formerly of Scott Circuit, Forest District, goes to Oak Ridge Circuit. These are the only changes made in the District. We reluctantly part with Brother Moore. At the same time we welcome Brothers Sharbrough and Lewis among us.

Now, what we need as much, or more, than anything else, is a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit. Let me make a few suggestions to my brethren of the District: Let us begin the work of the new year at the throne of grace. Let us consecrate ourselves anew to God and the work of the ministry. Let us be men of God right. Let us look for and expect large things. Our District did well last year—let us do better this year. Let us have faith in God and one another. Let us pray for and help each other.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Board of Education, No. 1.

The Board of Education has considered the matter referred to us, involving certain letters that passed between Revs. N. B. Harmon and M. L. Burton, of this Conference and a professor in Vanderbilt University, and beg leave to say that we believe this is a matter with which this Conference has nothing to do. If the brethren feel that they have any just ground of complaint against any officer of Vanderbilt University, they should, in our judgment, refer the matter to the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

EPWORTH LEAGUE BOARD.

To the Bishop and Members of the Mississippi Conference—Dear Brethren: We have had before us the report of our General Secretary, Dr. H. M. DuBose, and are gratified at the facts therein set forth. From it we learn of the far-reaching effects of this divinely-appointed organization in its development of the young life of our Church. More than 300,000 young people have been directly helped in their spiritual lives, and many of those who have given themselves for service in the foreign field during the past few years have come from the ranks of the Epworth League.

We report sixty-one senior leagues and sixteen junior leagues in the bounds of this Conference. We urge upon our pastors the organization of Mission study classes in both the senior and junior leagues as being of the utmost value for increasing missionary interest in the bounds of their pastoral charges.

We take pleasure in commending the Reading Course as being helpful and instructive, and we are glad to be able to report in this connection that more than 50,000 volumes of wholesome literature have been put into the homes of our people throughout the Church through the medium of the Reading Courses.

Your Board rejoices in the prosperity of the Epworth Era, our official organ, and note with pleasure its largely-increased circulation.

We call attention to the fourth annual session of the Conference League to be held in McComb City, Miss., beginning at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, April 26, and continuing through the following Sunday. Also to the Young People's Missionary Conference in June at Asheville, N. C., and the Seashore Epworth League Assembly at Biloxi, Miss.

We earnestly hope that as many of our pastors and young people as possibly can will avail themselves of the opportunity of attending at least one of these conferences, and thus get a larger vision of privilege and a new inspiration for service.

Your Board has appointed Rev. H. W. Featherstun, D.D., as the representative from this Conference in the management of the Seashore Epworth League assembly; and respectfully ask this Conference to confirm the same. Respectfully submitted,

THOMAS B. CLIFFORD,
For the Board.

REPORT OF BOARD OF MISSIONS.

To the Bishop and Members of the Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South: Dear Brethren—It is with devout thankfulness that we report to you the results of the year's labors in the department of the Church's work committed to us. Although the General Board of Missions had increased the assessment on our Conference for Foreign Missions, and in spite of the yellow fever and quarantines, which for over two months paralyzed business, we report over $200 in excess on Foreign Missions, and our ability to pay in full all claims against the Domestic funds.

The assessment for the year just closing was for Foreign Missions $10,400, on which we paid $10,621.57, an increase of $618.57 over last year. For Domestic Missions the assessment was $8,000, on which was paid $7,859.03, an increase of $392.03, making a total for missions on assessment of $18,480.60, which is an increase of $1,010.39 over last year.

We are also gratified to learn that the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is still doing a good work, and sincerely trust the day is not far distant when not a charge in our Conference will be without this vital agency in the world's evangelization.

During the year, through the efforts of the Conference Secretary of Missions, and the Chairman of the Board of Missions, Mr. Mott's book, "The Pastor and Modern Missions," was put in the hands of every pastor in the Conference. We feel sure the brethren of the Conference join the Board in expressing thanks to these brethren for securing for us this most timely book.

We most heartily commend the booklets published by the Board of Missions at the close of the first session of the Training School, and wish to express our sincere hope that a set of these booklets be placed in the hands of each church official in our Conference during the year.

We would again express our conviction that "Go Forward" should be placed in every Methodist family in our Church. One of the imperative needs of our Church is information on this important subject, and in no other form can we give our people so much that is fresh and convincing as will be found in this valuable paper.

Our Board has taken steps looking to the appointment of two representatives to the Training School this winter, and has elected our Treasurer, Rev. W. L. Linfield, to represent us at the Conference of representatives from the various Conference mission boards, which will meet in Nashville, Tenn., the last week in February.

We recommend that the Wednesday night prayer meeting following the first Sabbath in each month be devoted especially to the cau of missions.

The assessment for Foreign Missions for 1906 has been fixed at $11,000, and for Domestic Missions at $8,600, and is divided among the districts as follows:

	Foreign.	Domestic.
Brookhaven	$1,715	$1,315
Forest	1,510	1,155
Jackson	1,725	1,350
Meridian	1,550	1,225
Natchez	1,250	940
Seashore	1,950	1,635
Vicksburg	1,300	980

The Board has made the following apportionments to needy charges for 1906:

Beauregard	$150
McComb, La Branch Street	100
Adams Mission	150
Gallman	100
Pleasant Grove	150

SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD.

To the Bishop and Members of the Mississippi Annual Conference: Dear Fathers and Brethren—Obviously, the past year has been one of prosperity and progress in our Sunday School work. There has been a healthy growth in our numbers, and an increased circulation of our literature. Our pastors, presiding elders, superintendents and teachers are more and more making soul-winning the uppermost aim, we are led to believe. Many pastors find the Sunday school their richest field, and, therefore, they must keep in touch with the school as a whole—to make their influence felt in all parts of it; to be as familiar with the workings in every department so as to be able to advise intelligently concerning its entire work. We beg all our Sunday school workers to heed the injunction of our beloved Dr. Atkins, to make the Sunday school more and more conducive to spiritual ends. Where can we find a richer field for evangelistic work? To quote from our Brother J. R. Pipes: "Get the pastor fully alive to the rich mine he has in his Sunday school, and he becomes a dynamo that stirs things from the time he reads his appointment." The pastor is the most essential factor in the Sunday school work. The most hopeful sign is the increased interest of our presiding elders in the work. Institutes are being held generally on the first day of the district conferences. These are well attended by our best Sunday school workers, and thoroughly practical methods are presented, much to the profit of the work.

We must have higher standards, and do our best to work up to them. We cannot raise our standards of aggressive work by merely thinking about them, but we must put life and power into every effort. No inventor ever grew in fertility of successful ideas by confining himself to abstract thought or paper-and-pencil theory. He must put his ideas into practical and successful operation, if he would gain fresh and improving ideas. And this is our only hope in all our Sunday school effort. Our standards must be lifted, and it will take the lift of life to raise them.

The Conference Sunday School Institute held in Jackson, Miss., in April, was largely attended by workers from all over our Conference. Dr. Hamill and his accomplished wife were with us, and, by their splendid work, furnished enthusiasm enough to set many pastors and laymen to doing better work. Children's Day, Rally Day and Decision Day have been very generally observed. The unparalleled record of the Memphis Conference this year should incite us to greater activity—every Conference has observed Children's Day the past year. Perhaps no such record as that has been made in Southern Methodism. Now we urge that our rallying cry for the coming year shall be: "Children's Day observance in every charge and every church" in the Mississippi Conference. Why not? It can be done; it has been done elsewhere; it will be a splendid thing to do.

It is now a fixed policy of our Conference Sunday School Board to have an anniversary service during each Annual Conference session. Someone has said, "the anniversary is the treasure station of enthusiasm," and that it is an excellent opportunity to get the work before all the pastors. It properly magnifies that arm of the service which has always yielded a wealthy harvest. We close our report by offering the following resolution:

Resolved, That a collection be taken in every charge, to be used as the Discipline directs; and we greatly deplore the fact that some of the pastors have heretofore either failed to hold Children's Day services or diverted the collections from the Sunday School Board to other channels in order to bring up their Conference collections. This is contrary to the Discipline, and cripples the Board in the prosecution of its work throughout the bounds of the Conference.

Resolved, That all Children's Day moneys be sent to the Treasurer of this Board immediately after the day is observed. Respectfully submitted.

J. S. PARKER, Chairman.

MY THREE LESSONS.

"When I was eleven years old," said Mr. S., "my grandfather had a fine flock of sheep, which had to be very carefully tended during the war of those times. I was the shepherd boy, and my business was to watch the sheep in the fields. A boy who was more fond of his books than of the sheep was sent with me, but left the work to me, while he lay under a tree and read. I did not like that, and finally went to my grandfather and complained of him. I shall never forget the kind smile of dear grandfather, as he said:

"'Never mind, Jonathan, my boy; if you watch the sheep, you will have the sheep.'

"'What does grandfather mean by that?' I said to myself. 'I don't expect to have sheep.' My desires were very moderate. I could not exactly make out in my mind what it was, but I concluded it was all right, and I went back contentedly to the sheep.

"I could not, however, forget grandfather's words. Then I thought of Sabbath's lesson: 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things.' I began to see through it. 'Never you mind who neglects his duty; be faithful, and you will have your reward.'

"A second lesson I received soon after I came to the city as a clerk. A merchant from a country town, who knew me, came to buy goods, and said, 'Make yourself so useful that they cannot do without you.' I grasped his meaning more quickly than I did my grandfather's. Well, I worked upon these two ideas until one day I was offered a partnership in the business. The first morning after the partnership was made known, the old merchant from the country called to congratulate me. 'You are all right now,' he said. 'I have only one word of advice to give you: Be careful in the choice of your companions.' That was lesson number three.

"And what valuable lessons they were! Fidelity in all things; doing your best for your employers; carefulness in choosing your associates. Boys, take these lessons home, and study them well. Under God, they are the foundation-stones of character and honorable success.—Toronto Presbyterian.

If there is a special form and an unseen purpose to every life, then there is always the hope that, though the form may be broken, the purpose of the life may yet fulfill itself in some other way, even in spite of—nay, though the breaking of—the form.—Phillips Brooks.

THE JAPANESE GIRL.

The Japanese girl is, first of all, domestic. She is taught from her infancy that a woman's duty is to serve and please others, and her girlhood at home is given to training her along this line for an early marriage. She goes from serving and obeying in her parent's house to serve and obey in her husband's.

Almost as soon as she is able to walk, the youngest baby is tied on her back and knows no other cradle. As she toils back and forth from the well with buckets of water, baby is joggled on her back; when she tosses her yarn balls or plays hopscotch, baby bobs up and down with her every motion. One would feel sorry for the little nurse, as well as for the baby, were they both not so used to it as to seem never to mind. Besides serving as nurse, she must learn how to cook, and to sew, and to meet all the daily wants of a household. To-day manufactured articles are fast coming into general use, but even yet the women of a Japanese house spin and weave much of the clothing for the family, and it is at home that the tea is fired, the silk reeled, the fish dried, the charcoal burned, and a dozen other things done whose method the Japanese girl must learn if she is to be a thrifty housewife.

All this is intensely interesting to a young Southern girl, remembering grandmother's tales of how she and the darkies used to spin and weave all the household clothing and linens—fine linens there were, too, as we know who have fallen heir to rare old pieces of it—interesting, too, to the young American who has fallen enamored of the Morris and Craftsman ideas of the beauty and strength of homemade and handmade fabric and furniture. Interesting, too, to note how common an art this weaving and spining still is in thousands of homes, when in England, a few years ago, Mr. Ruskin could only find fragments of a few broken looms, and would have been hopeless of putting those together or of supplying the missing parts, but for happening to remember an old bas-relief on the bottom of Giotto's Campanilè in Florence, which represented a man weaving at a loom.

She must learn to make her own cloths. Instead of using paper patterns, she learns to cut by a certain set of measurements, and so exact are they that not one tiny scrap of goods is left.

The sewing is all done by hand, and the Japanese girl learns all the niceties of hemming and felling, and, because she is patient and painstaking, very often becomes a fine needlewoman. You would not believe this if you saw the long stitches shining in the sleeves of a garment she has just finished; you would wonder why she left the bastings in. Ignorant one, these are not bastings, but decorations put in as the finishing touches with great care. Likewise her best black silk robe looks like it had been carelessly laid near some cotton wadding which has stuck all over it in tufts, but this is the pride of her life. Don't dare brush it off. Instead of cotton it is the silk wadding used as interlining, which works out, and this is considered extremely elegant.

As every garment has to be taken apart when washed, it is well it is sewed by hand, and consists of just four widths, two long ones that reach from the floor in front over the shoulders to the floor in the back, and two shorter ones for the sleeves, besides two small-shaped pieces to form the neck facing. When washed, these widths are stretched wet upon long boards and put in the sun to dry, somewhat as American boarding-school girls iron their handkerchiefs on the mirror.

The Japanese girl loves pretty clothes quite as well as the American; and how she prizes her best dress of soft-hued crape, and the handsome sash that goes with it, and that costs so much she can afford but one, unless she be rich! Her every-day clothes are of dark-blue cotton. Only while she is a little girl does she wear gay dresses. Until she is eight or nine years old her holiday clothes are of all colors of the rainbow, but after that her outer dress is always quite in color and design. Her under dresses are made of the bright-colored, flowered challie or crape, but one catches just a hint of the color where it shows like a piping at the neck and sleeves. The greater the number of folds visible at the neck, the more dressed up she is supposed to be. As each fold is supposed to represent a different under dress, and on ceremonious occasions from ten to twenty can be counted, it is well that she, like the American girl, sometimes wears a sham front.

It is in these under-garments that appear the exquisite colorings and designs that would make a French modiste pale with envy for the use of the subtle rare charm that we think of as essentially Japanese, and it makes one sigh to think of so much loveliness hidden. I remember once seeing three of these exquisite under-garments spread out for wear at an entertainment, and the somber brown-hued over dress, cut just the same, but O, so different in color, lying like a blight on top, and I ventured to interpose—wouldn't she for to-night—there were only Americans to be present, they would never be the wiser—wouldn't she just leave off the brown one this once? "O," she gasped, "would you go down in your petticoat?" But I couldn't keep the secret. "She has three of the loveliest of possible garments underneath," I whispered to several ladies, lovers of all lovely things. And when one of them reached out irreverent hands and turned a corner of the brown skirt back, revealing the lavender and rose-color loveliness beneath, their weaver shrank back in hurt modesty, and the very rose-color garment blushed rosier, while the lavender went very pale.

It was in the good old days, only a few years back, that the court dresses outdid the plum blossoms in loveliness, color, and grace. But now the imperial pleasure is that the ladies shall appear in the European dress. So there hath passed away a glory from the earth. Politics in dress and in art, commercialism—for they who knew and loved the old art well say that it is forsaking the great marts, and is found chiefly after search in old corners, like all real treasure—but we could wish that while the Japanese take the good elements of our civilization, it might have left untouched their dress and art.

While the cut of all dresses is the same from year to year, exact rules govern the style of cloth and the details of dress, and these the Japanese girl studies as you do the changes of fashion. The color of the sandal straps, the mode of tying the sash and of doing the hair, varies for different ages. I know one girl who received from her missionary friends, one Christmas, four pairs of shoes, none of which she can wear until she is about forty years old.

Besides the domestic arts of sewing, cooking, and housekeeping, and the feminine art of dress—if she be high class—the Japanese girl must have certain accomplishments. She spends many hours strumming the sämmi-sen (a kind of banjo), and learning to pick the koto (a long harp which lies on the floor). As there is no system of notes, everything has to be learned by rote—orally, so to speak—and, if it be as monotonous to the learner as to the listener, it must be wearying, indeed. However, it is probably we who are not trained to the proper appreciation.

Their entire musical system is based on variation of quality of tones, a different quality being produced from wood, metal, skin, bone, pottery and string, forming a system of art very complete, but entirely and literally foreign to European ears and taste, and so it is that we have called "barbarous," and "an awful babel" and "a terrible hubbub," that which we, simply having ears, have been unable to hear. As a gentleman from India said, the Oriental ear is trained to detect subtle variations of a tone which a Westerner does not perceive, and what is to us monotonous is to them full of melody; while the range of tone we admire is to them excruciating. In his words, "It frightens our ears."

Another accomplishment the Japanese girl must be versed in is flower arrangement. Among the Japanese this is a distinct art, partaking of the nature of painting and poetry in that it is the expression of beautiful thoughts by means of flowers, instead of by brush or pen. I use the term "flower arrangement" for lack of a better, but the Japanese artist includes in her list the yellow mustard, the purple-headed cabbage, the eggplant, and many other varieties we disdain as common garden or roadside plants. Most of all does she prize the boughs of fruit trees in bud and blossom; and, using these according to the rules of her art, she produces poems, essays and epigrams. Is it not a pretty fashion which can convey to a guest who enters a reception-room a silent welcome and compliment by means of two Camellia blossoms, one red and one white, and a bit of willow in a vase hanging where his eyes first rest? The fact that it is a hanging and not a sitting vase is itself a compliment.

While it would not profit or suit us to borrow the elaborate Japanese symbolism in flowers, may we not borrow a lesson in that beauty of common things, of which the poets sing, and learn from the Japanese girl the discriminating, thoughtful use of simple things to obtain beautiful results?

It is said by enthusiasts of the Japanese art spirit that the present widespread movement in Europe and America, for a wide simplicity in home decoration especially, owes its beginnings to Japanese influence, and that it has been repeatedly refreshed from that source since then. Where a single picture hangs on the wall a single vase stands near with often but a single flower in it; the eye cannot miss the beauty of any of the three, and O tired hands and feet, think of resting there, not too tired to enjoy what you have done, and when to-morrow's cleaning comes round, no terrible countless bric-a-brac to move aside and dust under, none to be carefully and individually cleaned in their turn—just sweet cleanliness and simple rest. It sounds like a bit out of paradise; and looks like it, too, if you could but see. Our homes are better by your leave, with the great hearth-fire (where you have not undertaken to "raise a family round a hole in the floor"), and the great armchairs; yes, but there is not always to be found along with these the rest and serenity the Japanese has to offer, and which American men stand still more in need of, coming from out the city's rush and worry. And, for my part, I am for frankly admitting where other nations have the best of us, and speedily cribbing it and so adding that one good more to all the rest that we Americans have already. Ruth Newton Underwood, in Go Forward.

The Christian Life.

"CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE."

"Those who carve their names on marble shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, but one whose name is carved on hearts shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

This is the testimony of Daniel, one who had the richest and deepest experience of anyone living at that period. No one would have believed at that time that Daniel would ever outrank all the mighty men of his days; that all the noted generals who had been victorious in almost every battle were to be eclipsed by this young slave. Yet on the pages of history his name stands out clear and distinct, outshining that of Nebuchadnezzar, Darius, Belshazzar, and all the mighty monarchs of the age.

In the voyage of life we meet with persons of all ranks and social positions with various inclinations and pursuits, but with one grand and earnest object—the desire to reach the front ranks and carve a name. We meet with a few exceptions who apparently have no greater object in life than merely to exist, that is all; but we find it the object with most persons to reach the top of the ladder of "fame," and "outshine their fellowmen."

We enter the schoolroom, and we find every pupil striving to outrival his schoolmates, and be the one to receive the prize. We enter the political world, and we find there a struggle as to who shall be the greatest. In the army every soldier is anxious to rise above his comrades, and be promoted to a higher rank or office. Every four years there is great excitement over the "presidential election," yet only one man can "win the prize," and shine upon our country as the "head and pride" of "our nation." Yet there is a way that all of us may "shine," even the very weakest, if they will, may give their hearts to God, the Ruler of all we have, and all we are, and enlisting in "his service," may shed a radiance of Christian influence over the lives of those around them.

We have often heard it said that every soul has its influence, either for good or evil. We bury the frail tenement of clay to moulder in the dust, but the influence of that soul can never be forgotten.

A century ago, the great Napoleon made the earth tremble with his wonderful bravery, his proud and mighty army. How he blazed and shone as an earthly warrior! Cheer after cheer greeted him as he drove along the streets of the cities. But only for a little while! A few years passed and a small island held the poor, wrecked body of that once proud and mighty conqueror. He died an exile from his country and his throne a poor, heart-broken prisoner. And what of his name to-day? If mentioned, it is never with love and esteem; yet man goes on through life becoming absorbed over some ephemeral pleasure or silly distinction, prizing highly the insignificant and curling the lip of contempt at things that would be inestimable if we could only prize their value. The great sin of the rich man was not so much the accumulation of riches and treasures laid up for many years, but the fact that he cared for nothing but well-filled barns and selfish interests, saying to his soul, "Take thine ease! Eat, drink and be merry." He wanted nothing more.

There is only one model Christian, the "Jesus of Nazareth." He is the "Exemplar" in all things. We are to have his mind, his heart, his life, making ourselves so worthy of imitation that each Christian example, if followed, would revolutionize our way of living by setting us upon grander heights, giving to our horizon a wider sweep and opening to our lives a vision of glory heretofore unrealized.

He blessed the people by His words, which told them of His wonderful love and compassion. He blessed them by His life, in which the most bitter enemy could find no fault—a life full of sweetness, purity and truth. He blessed them by His deeds—going about doing good, comforting, healing, helping — scattering kindnesses everywhere.

Christ has passed into heaven, but He wants us to continue this life with all of its goodness, its beauty, its sweet service. He kindles the light in us, that we may shine as He did.

A true Christian should be a living inspiration to all who come in contact with His personal influence. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said of a life-long friend, from whom every spark of life had fled, "When he came into our presence, it seemed as if a ray of sunshine had entered the room; when he smiled, it felt that a rainbow of happiness was gilding the atmosphere; when he spoke, it seemed we were listening to the sweetest strains of music, and when he left us, we felt that an angel had taken its flight—had been transferred to a kindlier soil and air, to be a pillar in the house of God. The bright and sunny world within him was projected outward until every cloud that draped the sky had golden border, and every mountain peak of difficulty that obstructed his pathway was obscured by a streamlet, on whose banks bloomed the fragrant flowers of peace, hope and love." Such a life does not come by accident. It is a life based upon heroic principles, strong resolutions and unceasing effort, whose fountain-head was Christ," and whose triumphant faith pierced through intervening clouds to the band of "eternal sunshine."

Though success and renown may be won by some, we are truly great in as far as we walk in the best light God has given us, sustained and inspired by the hope of an eternal life beyond.

"True happiness, if understood, Consists alone in doing good."

Away up the mountain-side we see a little spring. It seems so small and insignificant, but, by and by, other rivulets run into it, and soon it becomes a broad and beautiful river, flowing onward to the sea.

A smile or a kind word when we meet, a clasp of the hand in sympathy to one in distress, a fragrant flower to the weary sufferer, a cheerful face in the midst of clouds and difficulties may lighten the burden of many a care-worn heart, and cause others to realize a greater interest in life; the sunshine will be brighter, the flowers will bloom with sweeter fragrance, earth and heaven will seem more glorious because of the "divine love" that shows itself in looks and words and deeds of one thus consecrated to righteousness and pledged to the Master's service.

"Gentle words of patient kindness,
Though unheeded, oft they seem,
To the folds of grace may gather
Souls of which we little dream."

WHAT THE COWBOY WANTED.

A Mexican preacher from Arizona tells this story in his soft-toned, broken English. "I was going to pre-ech in a school house on the prairie. There was no house in sight. 'I think, 'Where the people come from?' but they come, they come; forty, fifty, in that leetle house. As I pre-ech, I look up. At the open door I see a man, a rough man, he stood there and look at me so hard. An' I pre-ech of Jesus, the Water of Life. An' the man had large, gray hat and pistols and kife in his belt, an' spurs for his horse, an' he wass so rough, an' he look at me, an' he look at me, an' I wass scared, but I pre-ech on. When I wass through he say in his big voice, 'What iss going on here?' (He wass looking at me all the time). I say, 'How-dye-do, sir,'—(I was shaking a little.)—He say, 'How-dye-do, sir. What iss going on here?' 'I preech the gospel.' 'Did you say "Whosoever will, may come"?' 'Yess, that's what I say.' 'Whosoever will?' 'Yes, whosoever will.' 'I'm a bad man, I do many wicked things with other cowboys,—you think I could be saved?' An' I tell him, 'God can save every one, no matter how bad.' 'If that means me I will give up my bad ways—whosoever will may come—I will begin again.' An' he shake my hand, an' I thank God."—Over Sea and Land.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1906.

The past year will be memorable in the history of the world. It was signalized by three or four of the greatest battles ever fought, and the growth of a small and insignificant country into a great world-power, which stands to-day in the very front rank of nations for patriotism, skill and prowess. It may fairly be said that when Japan whipped Russia on land and sea, and won peace, a nation was born in a day. But the conquests of peace are no less than the conquests of war. In our own land the conquests of peace have been mighty. The commerce of the country has exceeded in volume any year in our history. The earth has yielded her increase, and such a harvest was never reaped. The people rejoice on every side. We have experienced no internal strife, and much of the sectional animosity that existed in the beginning of the year has been wiped out—we trust forever. Our fair name has been besmirched by disclosures of corruption in business and political circles. But the disclosures have aroused the people, and vengeance upon the evil-doers has followed. Two United States Senators have been convicted of crime, millionaire business men brought to shame, and political bosses have been hurled from power.

Great also have been the conquests of the Gospel. In Europe such revivals have not been witnessed since the days of Wesley and Whitefield. In our own country we have witnessed no such displays of Divine power in any one section as followed the preaching of Torrey in England, and Evan Roberts in Wales, but in hundreds of places, in town and city, and country, revivals have been experienced, and in the aggregate hundreds of thousands of souls have confessed Christ and united with the Church. God's people are alive and active, and are yet as Jesus intended them to be, "the salt of the earth—the light of the world."

The year 1905 has closed with our country at peace with all the world, with our barns full, with our commercial integrity unimpaired, with a contented and happy people in health and good spirits, rejoicing in the smile of God. What of the future?

As a people, pre-eminent in all that constitutes strength and greatness, rich in active capital, and undeveloped resources, standing in the front rank of commerce and diplomacy, an acknowledged world-power, with vast religious and educational advantages, and with the greatest variety of soil and climate, and transportation facilities unsurpassed, we are called upon to face responsibilities of almost measureless magnitude. Only through wise foresight of leaders, strong in mind and heart, under the guidance of a good Providence, have our blessings come to us. Only through the vigilance of good and patriotic citizens in keeping wise and true men at the head of our governments can our blessings be retained. We meet our responsibilities to the Government by a wise and faithful use of our citizenship.

As a nation of Christians, our responsibilities are no less than as citizens. We would not be so presumptuous as to affirm that the Lord has laid solely upon us the evangelization of the world—he expects us to do only our part in saving the regions beyond; but we have millions of the unsaved at our own door. Our cities especially are literally congested with wicked and ignorant souls, who, if they ever hear the Gospel, must hear it from us. The very thought should startle us, and rouse us to action. Not only their salvation is at stake, but our own, for "Those who have and will not give

The Word of Life to all that live, Themselves shall lose the way."

In the work before us the great majority of individuals count but little, and never will be known or noticed by men, but God keeps the names and the record, and holds each one of us accountable to the full extent of our ability. He that shirks or fails under the delusion that his work is so little as never to be missed will have an awakening when it is too late to make amends for his slothfulness and negligence. Never was the world in greater need than now. Never did men have greater opportunities for doing good. The world is literally standing and waiting for the little deeds, as well as for the large. And not one of them will be forgotten. If it is nothing more than a cup of cold water given to bless one of God's little ones, it will in nowise be overlooked, or go unrewarded. "As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially them who are of the household of faith."

THE EVENING SERVICE.

Many good people, men and women, who punctually attend public worship in the morning, are never found at Church in the evening. Some of them may have good excuses, especially the old, and those who live a long distance from the church, and have no means of conveyance. The majority, however, have no good reason for staying away—not even an excuse.

We have more than once, as a pastor, been impressed with the idea that however punctual persons may be in attending the morning service, giving them full credit for honesty of purpose, if the evening service is habitually neglected they care for their own welfare exclusively. We say this because it requires no great sacrifice to attend church on Sunday morning, and because, as a rule, particularly in towns and cities, those who go to church in the morning are not such as stand entirely in need of the example of church attendants. No doubt many wicked young people depreciate evening service on account of the absence of members who are recognized as pillars of the church. These worthy brethren and sisters would not absent themselves if, in connection with their privilege, they also considered their responsibility.

As a pastor, we always found our largest congregations in the evening. We were thus stimulated to do our best work. The only drawback was the absence of half a dozen, more or less, of the faithful. We felt the need of their help. And we have often imagined, while earnestly laboring, that sinners in the congregation were saying to themselves, "If religion is what he says, and is so needful, why are not the old Christians present to bear testimony?"

But, aside from the good influence exercised over others, the habit of church-going ought to be so conscientiously fixed and adhered to that to miss a service would cause a pang. Mr. Gladstone, in extreme old age, called himself a "twicer," because he attended both services of the Sabbath. "Church-going," he said, "is not a matter of fancy for a Christian. It is his duty for the work's sake. No public-spirited disciple has a moral right to be absent from public worship, except for good cause." Oliver Wendell Holmes said: "I am a regular church-goer. I should go for various reasons if I did not love it, but I am fortunate enough to find great pleasure in the midst of devout multitudes, whether I can accept all their creeds or not. For I find that there is in the corner of my heart a little plant called reverence, which wants to be watered about once a week."

Dear brother and sister, if you are in good health, why do you absent yourselves from the Sunday evening service? Can you give a good reason?

SHALL OUR BISHOPS ADVISE?

The action of Bishop Hoss at the recent session of the Holston Conference in addressing the body in opposition to a part of the report on Temperance has raised the question: Shall Bishops give advice from the chair of an Annual Conference? The time was when they were expected to do so, and did it freely. Even in our own day, we have known them to exercise the privilege. One of the strongest speeches we ever heard was by Bishop Paine, while presiding over the Memphis Conference. And, if we are not mistaken, the privilege was exercised by the Bishops in the General Conference. Not, perhaps, until 1886 was their right called in question. Certainly there is no written law against it, but the unwritten law is strong, and the Bishops seem to respect it.

We should very much regret to see our Bishops engage in Conference debates about matters of purely local interest, but in matters that affect the whole Church we see no reason why they should not raise their voice. And why should they not raise a voice against a dangerous innovation? In the Holston matter the Committee on Temperance committed the Conference to the Prohibition Party. This Bishop Hoss thought was wrong, and endeavored to prevent it. We think he did right to speak to the matter from the Chair. We knew one Bishop to rule such a clause in a report out of order. We think Bishop Hoss would have been justified had he ruled out that part of the Committee's report which committed the Conference to a political party. A Conference goes beyond its jurisdiction in seeking to lash the Church to any political organization.

BROTHER BAILEY TALKS A LITTLE.

When Brother Bailey, of the Baptist, says "The only way of union with Baptist churches is through local congregations," we accept the statement, taking it for granted that he knows. But when he undertakes to tell his readers what constitutes the Methodist Church, and how a Baptist church may become a congregation of the Methodist Church, we beg leave to demur. Brother Bailey says, "A Baptist church could become a congregation of the Methodist Church by adopting Methodist ecclesiastical polity, and upon its reception in the General Conference. This Conference is the Church. Local congregations are only societies, beneficiaries and supporters of the Church." That sounds like stuff we used to read forty years ago. We are surprised that a man living in Jackson, Miss., should write after that fashion.

If Brother Bailey desires to be undeceived in this matter, let him try to get into the Methodist Church through the General Conference. Or, if he cannot afford the time and expense of attending that body, which meets only once in four years, let him try the Annual Conference, or the District Conference. He will find that, whether he makes application to the one or to the other, he will be referred to the most potent factor in Methodism, the preacher-in-charge, who presides over the destinies of the local churches. If he comes alone, the preacher-in-charge will admit him to membership in a local church. If he comes with a whole congregation the same preacher-in-charge will take him and his people under his care, and either merge them with an existing church, or recognize them as a separate organization, and give them pastoral attention. Should he come to us as a minister, he would find that his making or his unmaking is largely in the hands of the preacher-in-charge. The General Conference would never hear of him unless, per chance, some day he should be elected a delegate to that honorable body.

Brother Bailey utterly ignores the fact that the local church in Methodism has power or authority. He does not even credit it with the possession of any function, save to support the General Conference, which, he says, "is the Church." He also says the local church, or society, as he calls it, is a beneficiary of the Church. But how the society can be a supporter of the church, and at the same time be "a beneficiary," we leave him to say. There was a time in Methodism when there was no General Conference or Conference of any kind—nothing but the preachers and the companies of Christ's disciples united in the acceptance of his doctrine and the practice of his precepts." The Conferences did not make the societies, but out of the societies or local churches grew the Conferences. There was a time—it makes no difference how far back—when there was no association or convention, state or general, among the Baptists. They have all these now. Associations and conventions did not make the local churches, but the local churches made the associations and conventions possible. These things are all right both among the Baptists and the Methodists.

The polity of Episcopal Methodism and that of the Baptist churches are totally different, and the General Conference is no more the Methodist Church than the General Convention is the Baptist Church. Both are representative bodies, doing the work committed to them under their respective constitutions. If we are mistaken as to Baptist Conventions, we will take it back, acknowledge our ignorance and beg pardon.

THE VALUE OF PREACHING.

On the supposition that preaching is designed to save souls, the value depends on two things. First, it depends on the message. Much that passes for preaching is not gospel preaching. It is misnamed. Said a man in a Western town some years ago: "Our preacher is an intellectual giant and highly educated. He gives us from Sunday to Sunday the finest kind of essays, but we are literally starving for the Gospel." That man could talk Greek and Latin, was familiar with the sciences and was as exact and fluent in the use of the English language as but few men ever get to be. His honesty of purpose, as far as we know, was never called in question, but for some reason he was long years getting into the spirit of the Gospel. Of course he took a text, but his method of treatment and lessons deducted therefrom did not tend towards the simple doctrines of grace. His speech had power to interest intelligent hearers and to entertain the superficial, but it never got down into the heart or stirred the conscience. Another man with nothing like his natural ability, with only a common school education—and little of that—and without polish such as is necessary in polite society, but full of faith and the Holy Ghost, preached only what he had learned of Christ. Sinners were convicted under his preaching and multitudes were converted. He had a message from God and delivered it. He did not attract the people to himself, but to the cross. He did not plant the seed of truth and chill it to death. He did not make the grace of God of none effect by the wisdom of men. The word came fresh from the heart, they were baptized with his tears and driven to the conscience by the power of the Holy Ghost. Such preaching as he did, anywhere, and by any man, no matter if the language is lame, will always do good. God acknowledges its value by driving it home to the hearts of the people.

Second. The value of preaching depends on the hearer. The very best of preaching will be futile if it falls on listless ears or defiant hearts. In the one case the hearer does not know what is being said. In the other he does not care. It was our fortune to hear preaching not long since that angels might listen to with delight. It was such as to disclose the goodness of God and bring to light the dignity and honor of the divine family. It was simple in construction and for the most part spoken in easy words, but it made strong men weep for joy. The foolish heard it with indifference, and the hard-hearted with defiance. It was labor lost on both. The word, however, was not to blame—nor was the preacher. The fault was wholly in the attitude of the hearer towards the preacher.

An angel could not save men without arresting and fixing their attention. There is a lesson here both for the preacher and his hearers.

Prayer continues in the desire of the heart, though the understanding be employed on outward things.—John Wesley.

Let there be no thought of what you can do for God, but all thought of what God can do through you.—Meyer.

PERSONAL.

Rev. O. S. Lewis, at Braxton, Miss., reached his charge promptly, and is hopefully at work. May his efforts be crowned with great success.

Rev. W. S. Shipman, after a three weeks' pastorate at Amory, Miss., says: "We have much to encourage us to hope for a good year."

Rev. H. B. Carre, professor in Vanderbilt University, preached Sunday morning last at Carondelet Street Church. Competent hearers say it was a sermon of great beauty and strength.

The venerable Rev. Geo. Jackson, who seems to be renewing his youth, was among the first to reach the city to answer the Conference roll-call. Brother Jackson has some books for sale, which he will take pleasure in showing—and furnishing customers.

Rev. C. P. Moss, writing from Carrollton, Miss., says: "Everything is first-class." Maybe you don't know Brother Moss. Better wait until you attend a quarterly meeting at Smith's Chapel, where chicken is cooked and served in seven different ways.

Prof. Magruder Sullivan of Millsaps College was in the city several days last week attending the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of which he is a member. We thank Prof. Sullivan for kindly remembering the Advocate office.

Rev. J. D. Harper was a "helpful caller" early Tuesday morning. He not only helped us with encouraging words, but paid cash for seven new subscribers and six renewals. Brother Harper says we "ought to have 1,000 new subscribers in the Louisiana Conference."

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, presiding elder of the Meridian District, informs us that Revs. J. C. Carpenter and L. E. Alford have entered upon their new work, and have been cordially received by the brethren. Brother Sullivan adds: "I am delighted with the new dress of the Advocate. Please accept congratulations."

Rev. D. P. Bradford received a cordial welcome at Poplarville. The ladies greeted him and his family at the parsonage, where they had prepared "a magnificent dinner," and supplied the larder with needful things. Brother Bradford says: "We left many warm friends in Laurel, but we expect to keep those and get new ones here."

Rev. T. L. Mellen has reached his appointment, Cordell, Oklahoma. In a note to the Editor he says: "My reception has been most cordial." Brother Mellen is working in harness somewhat different from that in which he has been laboring for several years past, but he knows how to adapt himself to changed conditions, and will do valiant service. We trust he may have a year of great success. His address is Cordell, Washita County, Oklahoma, Box 432.

We stop the press and open our forms to announce the death of Mrs. Porter L. Evans, wife of Rev. E. N. Evans, of the Louisiana Conference. She passed away after a short illness on Dec. 28, 1905. It was our pleasure to know Sister Evans for many years—in fact ever since she was a little girl, the daughter of our dear friends, Dr. and Mrs. Sanders, of Hot Springs, Ark. Sister Evans was a charming Christian woman, a devoted wife and loving mother. We sorrow deeply with our bereaved friends, and pray that they may have grace to sustain them in this trying hour. A more extended notice will follow.

PEARL STREET, NATCHEZ.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Bishop Galloway, at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, reassigned me to the pastorate of the Pearl Street M. E. Church, South, for the third year; and I have never before received quite so hearty a welcome and so many tokens of real friendship and appreciation. I have had a few at other places to do as well as any have done here; but not so many. Our hearts are overflowing with joy, and with gratitude to the good people of Natchez.

The members of other churches, and those who are not members of any church, have been among the most liberal contributors to our necessities, and to our Christmas holiday enjoyments. Mr. Editor, you do not know how our hearts overflow with joy, on account of the many acts of kindness and tokens of goodwill and appreciation.

God bless all the good people of Natchez, and give them many years of bright sunshine and joy and the greatest degree of prosperity in this life, and then a never-fading crown of glory in the life to come.

Pearl Street Church is a beautiful Church, nicely located on one of the best streets in the city, and is valued at $8,500, and not a cent of debt on it, only a small amount for insurance, which we hope to pay very soon, and do a little work improving the premises.

The city papers—the Natchez Democrat and Evening Bulletin — have helped me very greatly in publishing appeals, notices, etc., gratis, and by expressions of goodwill to us. Many, many thanks to them.

We have a faithful band of Christian workers, and they are standing by the pastor in everything. God bless them, one and all. We have a nice choir and fine organist, and as nice music as you would wish to hear. Many blessings on our choir.

Our Sunday School has doubled its number in two years, going up from 40 or 50 to 100. No Sunday School can boast of a more faithful superintendent than our own Brother Jno. P. Anderson, and teachers standing by him. We have just had a delightful Christmas tree, with our church overflowing with friends and neighbors and about 125 happy children.

Rev. C. W. Crisler, pastor of Jefferson Street Church, and his noble band of Christian men and women have been very kind, indeed, to us in many ways too numerous to detail here. God will reward them some sweet day. I can only thank them and send up a silent prayer ever and anon.

And last, but in nowise least, our ever-faithful Dr. J. C. Ballard has stood by us through thick and thin. In sickness and in health, he is ever ready to help us. He is "all wool and a yard wide."

May Heaven's richest blessings rest upon all our good friends.

A. D. MILLER.

POLLOCK, LA.

Dear Doctor: We have had a pleasant and prosperous year in many respects, but will be forced to make a short report at Conference.

Our farmers made only one bale of cotton to every seven to ten acres of land. Owing to a slow-down and change of conditions at Tioga practically all of our members and supporters have moved away. The Pollock Church, which is a half-station, will come up with her part.

We have built an $800 parsonage here, a $500 church at Liberty Chapel and $90 worth of improvements on the Tioga Church. A better people we cannot hope to serve. We are prone to covet the comfortable home, the pleasant surroundings and the religious atmosphere that will encompass the Pollock preacher of 1906. Yet we are subject to the powers that rule. Yours fraternally,

H. G. ROBERTS.

THE CHIEF END OF PREACHING.

The chief end of preaching is the regeneration of the individual; and this is not effected by telling him about right and wrong ways of carrying on the affairs of society and the State, nor by severe denunciations of public wrong-doers, however well deserved they may be. He must have brought before his mind his personal relations to God in a way to make him feel his obligation to obey, and to awaken in him the confidence and love that make obedience a delight. But when individuals enter into such relationship with God they cannot be indifferent to their social and civic duties. The chief end is not the regeneration of society, but that follows the regeneration of its individual members. If the reconstruction of society be directly sought by the Christian ministry, they lose their greatest power for good over men and can do no more than other members of society; but the ministers who successfully seek the redemption of men from sin and their consecration to God's service, render most effective aid toward the reconstruction of society, although their services may not be publicly recognized.—Presbyterian Banner.

THE SHEEP THAT WAS LOST.

On the Aletzsch Glacier I saw a strange and beautiful sight—the parable of the "ninety and nine" repeated to the letter. One day we were making our way with ice ax and alpen-stock down the glacier when we observed a flock of sheep following their shepherd over the intricate windings between the crevasses, and so passing from the pastures on one side of the glacier to the pastures on the other. The flock had numbered two hundred, all told.

But on the way one sheep got lost. One of the shepherds in his German patois appealed to us if we had seen it. Fortunately one of the party had a field-glass. With its aid we discovered the sheep up amid a tangle of brushwood on the rocky mountain side.

It was beautiful to see how the shepherd, without a word, left his hundred and ninety-nine sheep out in the glacier waste, knowing they would stand there perfectly still and safe, and went clambering back after the lost sheep until he found it; and he actually put it on his shoulders and returned "rejoicing."

Here was the Lord's parable enacted before our eyes, though the shepherd was all unconscious of it. And it brought our Lord's teaching home to us with a vividness which none can realize but those who saw the incident.—Leaves of Light.

SUPERANNUATE ENDOWMENT FUND.

Recently solicited by the Board of Trustees to give my entire time, this year, to the affairs of the Endowment Fund for Superannuate Preachers and the Widows and Orphans of Deceased preachers, I consented, though reluctant to give up my regular work; and Bishop Galloway accordingly appointed me at the last session of the Tennessee Conference, to this important and I trust, needed service.

Leaving Nashville on Oct. 30, I have visited the following Conferences in the order named: West Texas Indian Mission, North Texas, Memphis, North Alabama, Arkansas, Texas, Little Rock, White River, North Mississippi and South Carolina. Before organization for promoting the interests of the fund during the year was effected through the Joint Boards of Finance, and it is therefore expected that our people will become better acquainted with the enterprise and will give it a fuller support.

The action of the General Conference, which makes our law, requires every pastor to present this cause to each congregation yearly, and take a voluntary contribution. Unfortunately, this has not been done hitherto. I beg to put the brethren on notice that it will hardly be possible for them to forget it this year.

The raising of this fund must be done systematically, and largely through the efforts of our faithful pastors. With only one opportunity given for a public collection, something over $2,000 of additional subscriptions and contributions have been secured. The Board has collected and loaned $43,320, and has negotiated additional loans for $7,000, raising all in the treasury at this time.

It is my purpose to visit as many of the stronger churches throughout the connection as possible, by consent of the pastors to present the too-long-neglected claims of this honored class of our workers.

It has afforded me great pleasure to find so many preachers and laymen deeply interested in this connectional movement.

There is no earthly reason why it may not be a success. The plan is good. It was originated by and has the sanction of some of our ablest business men.

Our presiding elders and preachers in charge are earnestly requested to cooperate with us heartily in the work. In some Conferences we have laymen to represent the fund during the year, and we expect gratifying returns from their labors.

As a matter of news at the late session of the North Alabama Conference the largest payment of notes and accounts in any Conference this year was made, being considerably over a thousand dollars. Aside from having first-class representatives in Rev. S. E. Wasson, I know not what to attribute this great interest in our fund to unless in securing the twenty-five annuity homes which we have, we have been able to bring the sympathies of the people to the serious claims of this worthy class of our dead.

THE HERO OF SCOTLAND.

At night on a rushing railway train, not long ago, we rode with John Knox. This year of 1905, kept as the quadricentenary of his birth, though most probably eight years too early, has drawn attention to this sturdy Scot with selection of Reconstruction and characters. No man of his time, one of the most striking personalities in modern history, had a wider personal knowledge of the complex forces of human society, came more intimately with religion and politics than this same canny Scot. This fourth centenary of his birth, drawing the strong light of the twentieth century upon the mountain ranges of the sixteenth, will leave Knox's character more than before in his high relief.

The particular book which we read that night from cover to cover, at a sitting, is that of Dr. Henry Cowan, in the "Heroes of the Reformation" series (Putnam's), and an admirable little book it is, packed with first-hand material without being dry, vivid and strong in characterization without bias.

John Knox was a great man. His equipment by actual experience of life was such as is common in this day of rapid intercourse, wide travel, international comity than it could have been four hundred years ago. His early experience in the Christian ministry was as a priest of the Church of England, first then beginning to attain to a separate national consciousness as a Church. During his stay south of the Tweed he saw underneath the rapacity of priests and barons, underlying the selfish and brutal motives of Henry VIII., a real and deep tide of religious life setting away from Rome. His fortunes for Tyndale's Bible and his open sympathy with the reforms of those Scots who were beginning to awaken to the promises of Romanism, had before this already secured his banishment from his own country and the purgatory of nearly two years in the French galleys. Those bitter experiences had but served to impress upon him the transcendent values of a spiritual experience of religion and to draw him closer than ever to the Holy Scriptures.

Henceforward his career is, outwardly, a checkered one. He progresses rapidly in the Anglican Communion during the brief reign of the Protestant King Edward, having finally, after a period of service as royal chaplain, to decline a bishopric. On the accession of Mary Tudor he had, with many others, to fly for his life. It was not without misgivings that he chose this course, instead of staying to suffer martyrdom. But something seemed to whisper within him that it was to Scotland rather than to England that he owed his life. Orders of a yet unfulfilled destiny drew him away from the stake at which Cranmer and Ridley witnessed a good confession.

On the Continent he was a pastor of English and Scottish exiles, first at Dieppe, then at Frankfort, and again at Dieppe. He spent several years at Geneva in close association with John Calvin and preaching to a congregation in which were gathered some of the great men of their day, many of them, like himself, in exile. He mastered French and German, and added to his knowledge of Latin, Greek and Hebrew. He studied at first-hand all the different theories of government for Church and State, which were then matters of vital discussion among those bold and bookish exiles. A wide study and intimate knowledge of men and affairs he had gained, and he was at home in both theology and politics.

The story of his stormy conflict with the Roman Catholic party led, on the Queen's part, grudgingly, no doubt, by the studied and shapely young queen, who would have loved Knox as a father, had she not been of such intelligence more than willing to acquire religion. It is a very human story, with two very human leading actors. People in that day did not become transformed to angels and then settle down to live with each other ever after. Knox was usually as much in the wrong as his opponent, who exhibited a certain petty French cunning in their dealings with the people, but Knox's fine, manly, open nature would not have it so much for his own sake as for the sake of the cause for which he was contending.

But the dialectics and invective of Catholicism John Knox could not stoop to. So shocking to his sense of reverence for God was the adoration of the Host in the mass that he could not even agree to people kneeling to receive communion. And who will say there was not need? All of the old worship that directed the soul in love toward God its Maker, he valued, retaining most of it in his Book of Common Prayer. But out of the mass, with its sacrificial claims for God, and its idolatrous demands upon the worshipers, grew nearly all the unspeakable evils of the spiritual tyranny, the ritual, the immorality, popular degradation. All these were rife in the Scotland of Knox's day. They are not less so 100 years later in every land where Catholicism is dominant.

WHY STUDY THE BIBLE?

First—It is the oldest and yet the most popular book in the world.

Second—From every standpoint it is the greatest of books. Its language is unrivaled by any other; its entertaining narrative style unmatched; its poetry and biographies are majestic; its inspiration came from God himself and it will live for good in the world long after all other books are forgotten.

Third—The Bible is the revelation of God's will towards mankind. It contains the right solution of every religious problem that confronts men.

Fourth—It is a book you can study a lifetime and yet not reach the depths of its marvelous teachings.—Exchange.

Wisdom is often nearer when we stoop than when we soar.—Wordsworth.

Submission is no cry of a defeated man; it is the soul seizing on the privilege and right of being completed after God's pattern.—Phillips Brooks.

Your anxiety does not empty to-morrow of its sorrow, but it empties to-day of its strength. It does not make you escape the evil; it makes you unfit to cope with it if it comes.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

(By W. B. Campbell.)

SUNDAY, JAN. 7, 1906.

The Birth of the Prince of Peace.

"Joy to the world! the Lord is come.
Let earth receive her King."

The prophets of old rejoiced in this same Savior to come, and we rejoice to-day that verily He has come. Let us catch the spirit of rejoicing as sent from heaven by the multitude of angels singing to the world of the lines on which this King was to set up His kingdom. "Peace on earth," yes, and we have seen that wherever in the whole world this kingdom is made manifest, there peace reigns supreme. "Good will to men," yes, the love of a kind Heavenly Father extended to all who come to Him through this Prince of Peace, and for all this, and more, the angels gave "Glory to God in the highest."

What prince ever born on earth had such an announcement of his birth? It was only "His Son from heaven" that was heralded by a messenger from His own Father.

We rejoice to-day for the opportunity of teaching His mission to a world that is more neglectful than ignorant; our Lord has come to some of us many years ago, and of gratitude we are taking those joyful times to impress on the minds of those who forget that this Prince has a claim on us, "For the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof."

The first joyful tidings came to the poor and the lonely, and the directions where to find this Prince were to an humble place. "There was no room in the inn;" a great crowd of people had collected in the cities and towns, in obedience to an order from the Roman Emperor, so that a census could be taken of his Jewish subjects. Mary and Joseph, being of the tribe of Judah, journeyed to the town of Bethlehem, and, intending to stay in the inn, they found there was no room. So in the stable, or the place for the cattle, the Scripture was fulfilled and the Christ was born.

The learned of the Jewish scribes had long been familiar with the event of the coming of the Lord in all its details, and as we study the same Scripture to-day as they made a study of before He was born it is hard to understand that they expected a King to come in all the splendor of a worldly monarch. Though all was taught by incidents as they occurred that even in His birth He was of the common people, yet never were incidents so firmly fixed and so joyfully treasured in memory; and even at the time, in Jerusalem, the King was much troubled and all the city with him, because of the little babe that lay in the manger. The shepherds had come in from watching their sheep, and told of the wonderful sight of the angels, and they had brought with them the words spoken by the angel who brought the glorious tidings, that "Unto you is born, this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." After that came the three wise men, guided by a star, from the far eastern country, and in all their strange attire and attitude, they went direct to King Herod to be directed to the place where they could find this King of the Jews. At once, the venom of jealousy began to work, and the first enemy this Prince of Peace aroused was the king of the country in which He was born. It is to-day as it has ever been—His enemies are found among those who ought naturally to be His friends. "The good tidings of great joy were not for King Herod, nor yet for the leaders of his own people, and to-day those to whom the good tidings come are among the humble, for not many wise or many mighty care for the world's Savior. Those who are watching and waiting, weary and heavy-laden, scarred soldiers of the cross, longing for better things than can be found in the earth, more endurable, "a city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God."

In studying this lesson we must all be children again, for a little babe is the center of our attention, and "Except ye become as a little child ye can in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." So in teaching and in learning, let us go back to the time of childhood, to the time when mother told us the beautiful story as we knelt beside her, and her soft hand was on our head: that is the Christ we know, and the one that we must teach and learn; that is the Christ of faith, pure and sublime. That is the same Christ that has ever been with us, be we young or old. Let us not forget two beautiful personages in our lesson, viz: Christ and mother. Mary? We love Mary, not as some, to improper exaltation, but as associated with sweet memories of our mother. It is on these lines that the best spiritual teaching can be attained on this lesson. Our Lord, in his teaching, used surroundings; so must we. Little children listen with eager attention to the whole story as given in the lesson, and never grow weary. How wonderful that such a growth of Christ's kingdom started from the little babe in the manger. There is a sadness in the history of our Lord, and it begins as we study the lesson of to-day of His birth—there was no room for Him in the inn. There is very little room for Him in the minds and hearts of many in the world to-day. David was deeply affected with this sad truth as he wrote, "O that men would praise the Lord for His goodness."

The most wonderful part of this great event is His divinity; He was the express image of our Father in heaven; He was the incarnate word of God. These are great truths, and in their immensity they stagger the learned and wise; but they are made plain and simple to the humble, who live and walk by faith. We accept these truths as we accept what God has revealed to us concerning Himself. It is probable that Jesus Himself had reference to these things when He thanked His Father that they were hid from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes. As we go on in our studies of our Lord's life on earth we will mark how often He was in communication with His Father, and angels were messengers. To become as a little child, so that we may enter the kingdom of heaven, let us learn from childhood, especially the childhood of Christ. Nineteen hundred years have come and gone since the event we are studying, yet the story has never abated one iota in interest, and as for importance, we see that more as we see the world running to and fro in search of something that satisfies.

"He came to His own, and His own received Him not;" they believed not even when they saw His wonderful life, and heard from good witnesses of how Heaven itself was moved when the Lord of Glory first came to earth. We believe unto salvation, and have not seen Him, and our faith is sure and steadfast, an anchor to our souls. So with this faith we teach and learn of Him whom to know aright is life eternal.

NOTES.

Modern methods in the Sunday school are not intended to take the place of spirituality—not intended to make the school an automatic machine—but are intended to introduce ideas of improvement but let us avoid relying too much on a set plan of conducting the Sunday school. The best Sunday school we read of, is known for its independent originality.

Our Sunday School Board is providing us plans and suggestions that are not to be taken for set rules, but to teach methods of applying the ability that God has given us. One of the most important of these suggestions is that a class be selected to study the books as issued for use in the Bible study circle. A Sunday school having a class of this kind will always know where to go to find teachers.

As in the church attendance there is a larger proportion of females than males, so it is in the Sunday school the girls outnumber the boys largely; even is it noticeable in the primary department.

It is gratifying to any superintendent and officers when the pastor spends part of the time in the Sunday school and among the pupils in a social way.

"GENERAL" FOR 25 CENTS.

The Nashville, Chattanooga and St. L.'s railway is distributing a very beautiful, colored lithograph, 18x25 inches, of the famous engine "General," which is now on exhibition in the Union Depot, Chattanooga, Tenn. The picture is ready for framing, and will be mailed to any address for twenty-five cents. The "General" was captured by the Andrews' Raiders at Big Shanty (now Kennesaw), Ga., on the Western and Atlantic railroad, April 12, 1862, and was recaptured by Conductor W. A. Fuller, Anthony Murphy and others, near Ringgold, Ga., after an exciting chase of about ninety miles. It was one of the most thrilling exploits of the Civil War. The object of the raid was to burn the bridges on the Western and Atlantic railroad and cut off the Confederate Army from its base of supplies. A booklet, "The Story of the General," will be sent free upon application.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

(By Miss Eddie Bentley.)

Leaguers — Our old, faithful 1905, has slipped away from a new face at the door, my face at the door."

we not welcome 1906? If so, suppose we have a talk together

Laying Foundations! Shall they of mere clay, of drifting sand or in early days the Greeks built on a lofty, rocky summit the beautiful city of Athens, and this site was a Gibraltar of strength to the Athenians. Our earthly homes must have firm foundations to insure safety.

But, dear readers, what must be the foundation of character? In Luke vi. 46, Christ is recorded as asking, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" It is the doing, not the promising, that counts. One's desires is to render him loving obedience, and that shall be the rock foundation of character. Jesus was "obedient unto death." Oh, friends, let us welcome the new year, with its vista of opportunities, by yielding sweet obedience to the gentle Master. Come, let us sing together and feel as we sing:

"Trust and obey,
For there's no other way
To be happy in Jesus,
But to trust and obey."

Dear ones, some of you who are trying to lead the Christian life say: "It requires so much courage to do right." It does take courage, but, listen! "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation." Isaiah, the prophet of old, here promises the Christ. Let us build our faith, our hopes, our all, upon Him, the Solid Rock, the One who is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever."

As the old year waned, we celebrated the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem. Have you ever thought of what that meant to His Father and to the angelic hosts? High heaven must have seemed to lose for even a brief time the presence of the Divine One. "Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised." Dear Leaguers, may the Spirit of the Christ be born in our hearts with the advent of the new year.

Paul, the apostle, in his letter to the Ephesians, said: "Now, therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God." To one who has ever been a long way from home, mingling among strangers, and then has returned to the loved ones gathered around the hearth-stone, the meaning of these words has an added beauty. Or, my readers, perhaps you have been among strangers and they have extended to you such kindness and good cheer that your hearts have been warmed and blessed.

In a front room of a home in this city there stood a Christmas tree gleaming with such beauty and brightness that it seemed emblem of Jesus, the Light of the World. Viewing its radiance were the inmates of that "home," very few of whom were related by any ties of kinship. Yet what a spirit of love and harmony prevailed! The "Rose of Sharon" shed its fragrance there. The "Lily of the Valley" lent its purity

Laying Foundations for 1906!" We will lay our foundations of obedience, righteousness and truth on the rock foundation, Jesus Christ. Should our obedience waver, should our courage fail, let us cry unto our Lord. He will set our feet upon the Rock. He will establish our goings." As we part for this year, let us pray that we may be able to sing these lines:

On Christ, the Solid Rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand."

CARROLLTON AVENUE.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, pastor, held a watch night service last Sunday night at which a congregation spent the last moments of the expiring year on their knees praying for Divine guidance throughout the dawning year.

On Thursday evening, Dec. 28, the Sunday School celebrated the birth of the Lord with a Christmas celebration, a fine programme having been prepared for the occasion, and the children and officers of the school were made happy off the appearance of Santa Claus, who dispensed good things with a lavish hand.

On Friday, the 29th inst., the programme was repeated at the Convalescent Home, Mr. Parker, superintendent, and the inmates were delightfully entertained and presented with useful presents.

The Carrollton Avenue Church has prospered wonderfully under the wise leadership of Bro. Holmes, and there is no wonder that the membership are expecting his return next Conference year.

The Sunday School is ably superintended by Brother A. H. Anten, assisted by Brother W. B. Caffiphell and a competent and earnest corps of officers and teachers. In a short talk Sunday night to the congregation Rev. Geo. Jackson, one of the oldest preachers in the Conference, stated that he had during the year traveled about 1,000 miles, selling Bibles and other supplies, visiting many churches and Sunday Schools, and had not seen a Sunday School as orderly and as well conducted as the Carrollton School.

The Church is well organized, and will make a fine report this conference. Being located in a growing Protestant section of the city, this church has a bright future before it. Although the building is a wooden edifice, it is neatly furnished and presents a pleasing appearance within. During the fall a new carpet and other improvements were made by the W. H. M. S. The Epworth Leagues (Junior and Senior), as well as the W. F. M. S. and W. H. M. S. are alive and giving valuable assistance to their leader in his pastoral work.

LEMUEL MORGAN ADAMS was born in Lowndes County, Ala., on Aug. 25, 1825. He was descended from honorable and pious parents. There were several preachers in the family. The scholarly and gifted T. A. S. Adams, well known and beloved of the North Mississippi Conference, was his brother. Brother Adams, while a child, moved with his parents to Mississippi, where he spent the most of his life. In 1850, with a younger brother, he went to California to dig gold, but ere he went in search of earth's hidden treasure he sought and found "the pearl of great price." For four years he remained in the gold fields, but while in quest of gold he never forgot his God. He was a charter member of one of the first societies of the M. E. Church, South, ever organized in that country, and contributed towards the support of one of the first missionaries to California. In 1862 he enlisted as a volunteer in the Confederate Army. Realizing the danger and extreme uncertainty of life in war, before he went away he wrote a short sketch of his life in his father's Bible, and left it to his oldest son, with the injunction that its pages be read and its precepts obeyed. He was a true soldier and a true Christian, as his comrades testified at his burial. On the 8th day of May, 1905, being in his usual health, he sat down after dinner to rest, and while the tired and time-worn body rested, his spirit stole away to his Father and eternal home. At his grave comrades, neighbors and family bore testimony to his worth as a Christian and a citizen. A father in Israel has gone, and we all feel our loss, but our loss is his gain.

THE TOBACCO HABIT.

Mr. Editor: To give your readers what the eminent Dr. Adam Clark thought on the tobacco habit, will you kindly give place in your columns to the enclosed, taken from his Theology, page 4052?

"(1) Every medical man knows well that the saliva which is so conspicuously drained off by the infamous quid and the scandalous pipe, is the first and greatest agent which nature employs in digesting the food.

"(2) A single drop of the chemical oil of tobacco, being put on the tongue of a cat, produced violent convulsions, and killed her in the space of one minute. A thread dipped in the same oil and drawn through a wound made by a needle in an animal killed it in the space of seven minutes.

"(3.) That it is sinful to use it as most do I have no doubt. If destroying the constitution and vilely squandering away the time and money which God has given for other purposes may be termed sinful, can any who call themselves Christians vindicate their conduct in this respect?

"(4) The impiety manifested by several in the use of this herb merits the most cutting reproof. When many of the tobacco consumers get into trouble or under any cross or affliction, instead of looking to God for support, the pipe, the snuff-box or the twist is applied to with quadruple earnestness; so that four times, I might say in some cases ten times, the usual quantity is consumed on such occasions. What a comfort is this weed in time of trouble! In a word, what a god!

"(5) I am sorry to have it to say that this idle, disgraceful custom prevails much at present among ministers of most denominations. Can such persons preach against needless self-indulgence, destruction of time or waste of money?

"(6) The loss of time in this shameful work is a serious evil. I have known some who, strange to tell, have smoked three or four hours in the day, by their own confession, and others who have spent six hours in the same employment. How can such persons answer for this at the bar of God?

"(7) Consider how disagreeable your custom is to those who do not follow it. An atmosphere of tobacco clinging around you wherever you go. Every article about you smells of it — your garments, your clothes and even your very breath.

"To those who are not yet incorporated with the fashionable company of tobacco consumers I would say: never enter. To those who are entwined I would say, desist, first, for the sake of your health, which must be materially injured if not destroyed by it; secondly, for the sake of your property, which, if you are a poor man, must be considerably impaired by it; thirdly, for the sake of your time, a large portion of which is irreparably lost, particularly in smoking; fourthly, for the sake of your friends who cannot fail to be pained in your company for the reason before assigned; lastly, for the sake of your soul. Do you not think God will visit you for your loss of time, waste of money, and needless self-indulgence?"

REV. GEORGE JACKSON.

Rev. George Jackson was born at Holywell, Huntingdonshire, England, Aug. 9, 1824. He came to America in 1852, landing in New Orleans on Good Friday of that year. He was converted and joined the Primitive Baptist Church in 1845, but as its doctrines did not suit him, his stay in that church was short. He united with the Methodists in 1849. He was licensed to preach at Brandon, Miss., in 1852. He exercised his gifts as a local preacher for five years, and in 1857, in connection with a class of fifteen, he was received into the Mississippi Conference. Rev. H. P. Lewis, of that Conference, is his only living classmate. In 1872 he was transferred to the Louisiana Conference, where he labored effectively until the past three or four years. He is now colporter for the Louisiana Conference. Brother Jackson has always been a hard and willing worker—consecrated and self-sacrificing. In his old age he has the love and confidence of his brethren. His hearing is much impaired; otherwise he is in fine physical health. And there is sunshine in his soul.

Glances at the World.

What was freely predicted as the outcome of the verdict in the case of Midshipman Merriwether has already come to pass. It was said that the light penalty imposed for violation of the rules against fighting would "make it harder than ever to stop hazing at Annapolis and Westpoint." In less than ten days after announcing the verdict a midshipman, against whom his fellow-students had a grudge, was put through a course of torture that well-nigh put an end to his life. He was made to stand on his head, and to assume other unnatural positions until he fainted and became unconscious. His inhuman tormenters became frightened, and left him in his helpless condition. All the participants in the dirty affair are known, and will be dealt with in the strictest manner as soon as the Attorney General of the United States shall decide whether, under the law, the culprits may be summarily dealt with, or whether they must first be tried by court-martial. If Secretary Bonaparte is assured that, under the law, he has authority to dismiss them without trial, he will doubtless expel them immediately. If they are first to be tried, the same fate will befall them, and the penalty will be none too severe.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate is responsible for the statement that the railroads of the country draw nearly forty millions of dollars from the United States Treasury for carrying the mails. The rates agreed on between the roads and the Government were fixed twenty-seven years ago, and, says the Advocate, "notwithstanding the fact that during that long time great reductions have been made in freight and express charges. Railroad rates have declined in all directions, but the Government continues to pay the exorbitant rates of more than a quarter of a century ago. While Congress and the President are so solicitous in their efforts to make the railroads fix reasonable rates for shippers it might be well to have them reduce the rates of the Government for mail matter, a reduction in which every citizen of the United States is interested. In this connection it will not be out of place to say that for years past there has been a call for a "parcel post"—cheap transportation for merchandise through the mail. The Government, however, has not seen fit to introduce it, and the present Postmaster General is opposed to it. The express companies, of course, are opposed to it, and it is likely these companies stand in the way. The Government can well afford to carry merchandise at cheaper rates than express companies now charge. If it did, the deficit in the Post Office Department would soon be wiped out.

The Appellate Court of New York having blocked Mr. Hearst's way in his contest by declaring that the ballot boxes cannot be opened to have a recount of the votes, Mr. McClellan will take his seat as Mayor, and Mr. Hearst will apply to the Legislature to open up the way to prosecute his contest. And there comes in connection with this news, the information that Mr. McClellan will cut loose from the influence of Boss Murphy, of Tammany Hall, who has heretofore controlled the appointments of heads of departments in the city government, generally taking his sub-bosses, called district leaders. The Mayor will make his own appointments, regardless of Mr. Murphy's wish. This Mr. Murphy is the same man charged by Mr. Jerome as in a large degree the dictator of the Supreme Judges of the city. It really looks as if the time for independent action in politics and government had come. It requires more than ordinary backbone for the Democratic Mayor of New York to defy the power of Tammany Hall. If Mr. McClellan is in earnest, and fully breaks with Boss Murphy, and gives New York a clean administration, it will go far towards making him the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency.

Farmers live well and cheaply. So says the editor of the Rural New Yorker, who speaks from his own experience. He took dinner at a fashionable restaurant and compared the fare with what he had at his own table the evening before—bread and butter and cheese, lima beans and baked apples. Fifteen persons ate at his table. Two articles, lima beans and apples, would, at the rates charged him at the restaurant, have figured up $18, but they cost him at home only his labor in raising and preparing them for the table. Then said the editor: "That's what you might call high living for a farmer. I will guarantee that both beans and apples were fresher and better than those served at the public table. You see, a farmer does not know how he takes a seat among the mighty until his garden walks through the kitchen and jumps on the table. Then he can compare prices with the mighty and tower over them. No use talking, a good garden is the best part of the farm. We can step into our garden at any time any help ourselves to the following: Sweet corn, potatoes, turnips, beets, lima beans, string beans, eggplant, tomatoes, lettuce, peppers, cabbage, cauliflower, carrots and onions. With all this, and eggs, milk and cream and a hundred or more broilers waiting for the pan, we are not going to starve, at least. It does make me weary to see a farmer living on potatoes and cabbage, or serving other vegetables in little dishes smaller than the palm of your hand, when such wonderful possibilities for food are to be found right in the back yard.

Governor Herrick of Ohio, in his retiring message to the Legislature, gives voice to some sensible and strong sentiments. In one paragraph he recommends that the "lobby in Ohio" be abolished: But in another paragraph he says: "There is a creature who more richly deserves the scorn and contempt of men than the lobbyist. It is he who is responsible for the so-called 'milking bills' introduced for the purpose of extorting money from special interests. He it is who often springs the lobbyists in self-defense to the Legislature. Acting very naturally on the law of self-preservation and desiring to protect themselves from threatened ruin, the owners of legitimate industries or the proprietors of proper and lawful business are often compelled to send representatives to the Legislature to watch the progress of threatened attacks on their private interests by those whose sole motive is to arouse this anxiety. No legislation will reach this situation. The sole remedy for it lies in the wholesome contempt which all the members of the Legislature should feel and show towards those who dare to engage in this pernicious practice." In such cases those called lobbyists may well be tolerated, but what justification is there for the conduct of the one who takes his seat, not in the lobby proper, but in a conspicuous place, on the first day of the Legislative Assembly, and holds on to it till the last—a man more regular in his attendance than any member of the body? No merchant or manufacturer, or farmer, or professional man has ever been published as doing such a thing, but a certain wholesale liquor dealer, never failed to do so for years. His object was to watch legislation. He never succeeded in getting all he wanted, but he did succeed as an obstructionist.

The recent investigation in New York of the great life insurance companies will perhaps have a salutary effect. It has already had the effect of ridding some of the companies of high officials, and caused the resignation of others who seem to have held positions that required no work, but which paid handsomely in cash. In one case at least a president has voluntarily cut his large salary by half. That was a big reduction, but he was drawing $150,000 a year. He will hardly suffer on $75,000. Some of them, it is also said, have determined to economize by reducing salaries of clerks and other employes. Scrub-women who have been receiving nine dollars a week are to get less, and the clerks serving at twenty dollars a week are to be considerably reduced. Higher officers, getting from $2,500 to $3,000 or more a month, are left untouched. They could not maintain their social position on less. The scrub women and small clerks have no social position to maintain. They have nothing to do but to get bread and clothes, and pay rent. If these reports are really true, in addition to the unjustified method of doing business which the investigation has revealed, they show a heartlessness which it is hard to believe exists among honorable men. We trust for humanity's sake these reports are false.

A new order of things has been put in motion in New York. Mayor elect McClellan took the oath of office on the first day of the year. Before he was sworn in he declared his independence of Tammany Hall by disregarding the wishes of Boss Murphy in appointing men of his own choosing to fill the leading offices. This greatly chagrined the Boss and his henchmen, the district leaders. It is to be hoped that the break is final, though some doubt, and do not hesitate to say that the whole is a deal between the Mayor and the Boss, for the purpose of hoodwinking the people. As to this we are unable to say. The most important office within the gift of the Mayor is that of Police Commissioner. To this he appointed Gen. Theo. Bingham of the Army, retired, a man who has never had any experience in handling a police force. It is taken for granted that he is competent, as well as honest, but his opening address to the inspectors partakes more of the nature of the talk of sportsmen (gamblers) than a dignified officer assuming command of forces. It is to be hoped that Gen. Bingham will be as good as his word. But he is not the first man to boast while putting on the armor.

BROTHER X. CRITICIZED.

Mr. Editor: In THE ADVOCATE of the 7th of December was an article by X. on infant salvation, which seems to me to be both unscriptural and dangerous. He advances the theory that children are born Christians and all that is necessary for them to remain so is proper example and training, and he gives the testimony of some of his friends to prove the truth of his theory. Now, if this theory be true, David must have been mistaken, for he says in Psalm 51: "Behold I was shapen in iniquity and in sin did my mother conceive me." And even Solomon in all his wisdom must also have been mistaken, for he says: "Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child." And Paul, with all his wisdom, was mistaken, for he says: "All have sinned and come short of the Glory of God." If a child is born pure and remains pure through life in such a manner as to obviate the necessity of conversion it would not fall among the number that have sinned and come short of the Glory of God and Christ would have made an incorrect statement to Nicodemus, for he said: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God." But, according to the theory of X., he should have said: "Except the untrained be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." According to the teachings of the Bible and Mr. Wesley and Mr. Fletcher, all are born in sin and must be born of the Spirit before they can enter heaven.

We can see the evidence of this fact in the actions of children, as the babe will [illegible] me angry and strike his best friend (mother), and by the tempers displayed by children we may find sufficient evidence of the fact that every one until conversion is possessed of a disposition that is naturally prone to sin. But as God is a just God He only holds people accountable for their own sins, and as infants have no knowledge of good and evil they are without sin until they are old enough to understand right from wrong, and being without sin they are fit subjects for heaven. But when they are old enough to understand the plan of salvation they must be taught first how to get right, then how to live right. But a great many of the modern religious thinkers and teachers make the mistake of teaching how to live right without first teaching them how to get right, and so fall among the number that speak peace when there is no peace. The old-time religion is good enough for me. M.

A PLEASANT OCCASION AND ELSE.

On Wednesday December 27, accompanied by two of my preacher boys, Jas. M. and Osmond S. Lewis, I left Vicksburg. We boarded the early morning train on the A. & V. R. R. bound for Pelahatchie, over seventy miles from Vicksburg, in the eastern part of the "Free State of Rankin" or Rankin Co. In Jackson we were joined by S. J. Taylor and wife, also Miss Pattie Lewis. At Pelahatchie we procured a conveyance, made our way some four or five miles through the country over a rough road—through mud and water, up and down hills, and by the time we reached our destination, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edd Rhodes, we were fully prepared to enjoy a sumptuous meal which had been prepared by the good women of Brother Rhodes' home. Bro. Rhodes is one of those old-time, big-hearted men who "lives at home and boards at the same place." He is a successful farmer, a good liver; has bought corn one time only since the close of the Confederate War. He has a nice family, consisting of a wife, one daughter and three or four sons. All looked to be in splendid health; everything indicates prosperity.

At 3 o'clock sharp Rev. James Marvin Lewis and Miss Minnie Rhodes took their stand in the parlor, surrounded by a large number of friends and relatives, and were united in the bonds of matrimony by the writer, and before these lines appear in print they will have moved into the parsonage at Oak Ridge, in Warren County, where, it is hoped, they will be able to accomplish much good in the service of the Lord. This is the fourth one of my children at whose marriage I have officiated within the last five years, all four of whom, together with two others—six in all—are engaged in the work of the ministry.

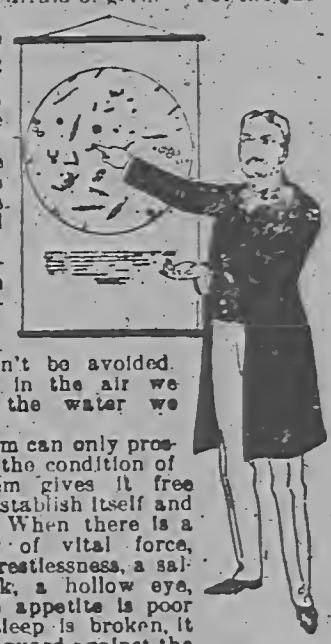
Brother Boswell (for such I love to call you): I have had a long, though hard, pull during the greater part of my forty-eight years in the ministry. Yet "out of all the Lord has brought us by His grace." My salary has run from $115 to $750—the average has been below $500. Yet we brought up our nine children in credit; gave them a fair education; lived to see them all converted and on their way to heaven. I question after all, if there is a man in the Mississippi Conference who has more to be thankful for than I have.

I am spending a few days with some of my children and friends in and around McComb City. More than half of my ministerial life has been spent in the bounds of Brookhaven District. I cherished a hope at one time that I might be able to spend the remainder of my days on earth near where most of our children were born, and where rests the ashes of (to me) one of the purest, sweetest and best women I ever saw—my precious, life-long companion.

My presiding elder talked to me freely about my appointment, as most of my presiding elders have done for upwards of twenty years. I told him to do with me what, in his prayerful, Godly judgment, ought to be done; so I was read out for Vicksburg Circuit. It is a heavy work in some respects, and pays the pastor about $300. I am always thankful to get a place of any sort, where I can live and work for the blessed Master, who has done and suffered so much for me. Pray that we may have a good year.

H. P. LEWIS.

REPLY TO G.



My brother G. accuses me of taking broad and unscriptural grounds, and yet he is far from being clear or safe in his statements. In his reference to one of my proofs, Rom. iv, 15, he seems to have one thing in his mind and states another. Sin is defined as "the trangression of the law," and of course it means the revealed or written law, the Bible. His statement—no law, either civil or divine, takes any notice of the plea of ignorance. If in civil suits it can be charged "with malice aforethought," it always carries weight in the decision. And in Acts xvii, 30, "And the times of this ignorance God winked at" (overlooked). Certainly G. overlooked this text and other proofs in my article, or he would not have blundered so badly.

In his reference to Rom. ii, 12, "For as many as have sinned without (revealed) law shall also perish without law;" See Esther iv, 16; "And if I perish, I perish," only means temporal death. If G. can give us two or three clear Scripture proofs that the heathen is sent to torment without the Gospel, that will end the controversy. In his reference (Rom. ii, 14) he helps me to show that the heathen is saved without the gospel. Many thanks for the help, and especially as "Not many men deliberately and willfully commit sin." The command is to "preach the Gospel to every creature," and the responsibility of some being lost is not ours. God assumes the consequences, or, rather condemns the one who rejects the offer of salvation. Such expressions as "worse than folly" and "mere trash" will not set aside the strong Scriptural proof in my articles. No thinking man will be convinced by them. The heathen are saved through the atonement of Christ, having been born in Christ's spiritual kingdom, and because he has not committed culpable sin. X.

Receive every inward and outward trouble, every disappointment, pain, uneasiness, temptation, darkness and desolation with both thy hands, as a true opportunity and blessed occasion.

God does not expect nor require more of his children than it is possible for them to do, but he does look to them to make good use of their opportunities, and he has promised to increase every seed that is sown for him, even to a hundred-fold.

Your anxiety does not empty to-morrow of its sorrow; but it empties to-day of its strength. It does not make you escape the evil; it makes you unfit to cope with it if it comes. Southern Churchman.

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant.

"Your 'Golden Medical Discovery' is a sick man's friend," writes Geo. N. Turner, Esq., (Ex. Financial Secretary International Brotherhood of Teamsters), 2208 California Street, Denver, Colo. "For the past seven years my health gradually failed. I lost my appetite, became nervous and debilitated, very despondent and unable to sleep. No medicine helped me until I tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It put new life into my veins and increased vitality until I could once more enjoy life and attend to my business. Eight bottles affected a complete cure and gladly do I recommend it."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets—only one or two a day will regulate and cleanse and invigorate a foul, bad Stomach, torpid Liver, or sluggish Bowels

Balky Lamps

There are thousands and thousands of lamps that don't work, all for the lack of the proper chimney.

THE MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

The Missionary Institute to be held Jan. 16-20 in New Orleans, being a joint session of the Woman's Board of Home Missions and the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, promises to be both interesting and helpful. Under the leadership of two such women as Miss Bennett, President of the Board of Home Missions, and Mrs. J. B. Cobb, Associate Secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, with speakers of high order from each Board, success is sure. Miss Layona Glenn, for some years missionary to Brazil, will contribute much toward showing the location of the several stations occupied by the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions in that field. She will present also the geographical features of this beautiful country, as well as give a survey of the wonderful work accomplished in Christian education and the growth of the church. The work extends over a vast portion of Brazil, from Rio de Janeiro to an eight-day journey into Porto Alegra, in the Province of Rio Grande-do-Sul. The appropriation made by the Woman's Board for Brazil this year amounts to over $34,000.

Miss Alice Waters, another missionary of the Woman's Board, who for 13 years has labored in China, is full of zeal for the salvation of that wonderful land, with its millions of people now in heathen darkness. Through her and others a light has arisen in the darkness, and many are rejoicing in it. During the past quarter of a century, so effective has been the work of the missionaries there that a new China is looming up, and the old sleeping China is opening her eyes with astonishment.

The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions opened its first mission in China twenty-seven years ago. In addition to the consecrated women sent out year after year to this empire many have gone into Korea, Mexico and Cuba. The appropriation for these fields for the present year is over $120,000, and the number of missionaries and helpers is over 300. All classes of people are being touched, the higher, as well as the lower.

Our missionaries have lived among the poor and benighted and taught them by object lessons and at great sacrifices to themselves how to make Christian homes, and how to honor Christ. Much has been done by the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions in these far-off lands. No estimate of the good that has resulted can be made—only the Infinite Father can know.

Since organization over a hundred regular missionaries have been trained and sent out, and more than $1,800,000 have been collected and disbursed.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. J. B. Cobb, Associate Secretary for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, has the management of the foreign department of the Missinary Institute, which convenes in New Orleans Jan. 17-20. Mrs. Cobb has been identified with the missionary movements of the Church all of her life, and knows the history of missions as few women do. She was the Conference Secretary of the Southern Georgia Conf. W. H. M. S. in the early days of the organization, and has given unremiting labor all of these years. To her much of the present success of the missionary movement in the Southern Georgia Conference is due, as it was she who has made such effort to give out instruction, and to-day the children who have been taught the value and need of missions have become the men and women of missionary conviction inspired by a knowledge of conditions given largely through her service in the past. She belongs to the Georgia family by that name, and bears a State reputation for ability. For a number of years she had the chair of English at Wesleyan College at Macon, Ga., and throughout the South there are women who reverence her name for all that she has been to their intellectual lives. Two years ago she was called to the executive office of the Woman's Home Mission Society as associate secretary, and so great was her love for the work that she gave up her position at Wesleyan, with a much larger salary, to enter the active work in missions.

CENTENARY NOTES.

Dear Advocate: As several months have passed since Prof. Brown or I have imposed on your columns, kindly accept our compliments of the season and congratulations for the progressive Advocate. This is a progressive day, and with an increase of immigration, of industrial and commercial development, to-morrow seems destined to behold still greater things for the South and for her southern gateway, especially when the Panama canal and the consequent increase of railways that shall multiply her avenues become realities.

The history of Methodism shows "method" and foresight in planting seed before other fields are "ripe unto the harvest." And we hope the record may be excelled in Louisiana by the Methodist Church. We can not afford to wait till the state is overflowing with a foreign element before special effort is made to assimilate and to Christianize. To this end mental and spiritual development go hand in hand.

The holidays close to-day. Work begins to-morrow.

J. L. McGHEE.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

For our endowment, put Tupelo down for $1,000, and more to follow.

It was my privilege to spend yesterday in this stirring, wide-awake town. If we ask to estimate the importance of appointments by the amount of the pastor's salary, Tupelo must go to the top of the list in the North Mississippi.

Well, T. W. Lewis will not get anywhere, more than he deserves. A noble, faithful, competent man, no good cause will lack for sympathetic interest where his influence is felt. With such helpers as Brothers Harkey, Clark Hyer and others, we may confidently expect rapid development in every Department of our church work in Tupelo.

W. B. MURRAH.

"BE OF GOOD CHEER."

What a world of comfort in those words of Christ which he uttered just as the thick darkness of the black cloud was about to come about him: "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." And so full of richness was this to Paul that the latter could say with all his heart: "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake;" and, "We glory in tribulations also." As though summing it all up, the Savior said, and repeated it: "Let not your heart be troubled."

The Christian has good ground for the utmost cheerfulness. He has everything good guaranteed to him: "All things are yours." "All these things shall be added unto you;" "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

The new life is one of the utmost hope, and therefore warrants the utmost cheerfulness. "He hath begotten us again unto a lively hope." Hope is "an anchor of the soul; it entereth into the veil." It fastens us to the place whither "the Forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus." It is "both sure and steadfast." It anchors its subjects to the very throne of God. It induces calmness and peace and assurance. It makes the soul so confident that by God's grace it shall be conqueror at last, that the conflicts which lie this side of the victory lose all their terror. The soldier who knows he will survive the battle and come out of the struggle as a victor will sing as he enters it. No duty is onerous which casts before it and within our reach its happy reward. Weariness yields to assured success. What mother tires of ministering to the child who every day shows its happy growth and health under her ministry of love and care?

The absolute safety of all who are in the path of duty, God's way, is enough to make them of good cheer. He is bound to protect all who are on his mission. He is responsible for them while they are obeying his will. As long as he could cry, "The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon," this leader of the fearless little band of three hundred who went against the host of the Midianites knew that he was in God's keeping.

But the greatest source of all, from which to get good cheer, is the fact that the strength of sin and the sting of death have been taken away, through the atonement of Christ. "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." We are "hid with Christ in God." "The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." With the guilt of sin removed, with the power of sin lessening, with the corruption of sin being put off, with the sense of holiness quickened and the power to develop it, through the Spirit every day enlarging, how is it possible for the converted heart to be aught but cheerful and bright? And so Paul rightly enjoins upon all: "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, Rejoice!"

And the Gospel has provided even for those who are constitutionally timid or fearful, "who through fear of death are all their lifetime subject to bondage." "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God."—Southwestern Presbyterian.

NOT THE SINGER BUT THE SONG.

"Thirty men, red-eyed and disheveled, lined up before a judge of the San Francisco police court. It was the regular morning company of drunks and disorderlies. Some were old and hardened, others hung their heads in shame. Just as the momentary disorder attending the bringing of the prisoners quieted down a strange thing happened. A strong, clear voice from below began singing:

"Last night I lay sleeping,
There came a dream so fair."

Last night? It had been for them all a nightmare or a drunken stupor. The song was such a contrast to the horrible fact that no one could avoid the sudden shock at the thought the song suggested.

"I stood in old Jerusalem, Beside the Temple there."

The song went on. The judge had paused. He made a quiet inquiry. A former member of a famous opera company, known all over the country, was awaiting trial for forgery. It was he who was singing in his cell.

Meantime the song went on, every man in the line showed emotion. One boy at the end of the line, after desperate effort at self control, leaned against the wall, buried his face in his folded arms and sobbed: "Oh mother, mother!"

The sobs cutting the weary heart of the men who heard, and the song, still welling its way through the courtroom blended in the hush. At length one man protested:

"Judge," said he, "have we got to submit to this? We're here to take our punishment, but this—" He, too, began to sob.

It was impossible to proceed with the business of the court, yet the judge gave no order to stop the song. The police sergeant, after a surprised effort to keep the men in line, stepped back and waited with the rest. The song moved to its climax:

"Jerusalem, Jerusalem! Sing for the night is o'er!
Hosanna in the highest; hosanna for evermore!"

In an ecstasy of melody the last words rang out, and then there was a silence.

The judge looked into the faces of the men before him. There was not one who was not touched by the song; not one in whom some better impulse was not stirred. He did not call the cases singly—a kind word of advice, and he dismissed them all. No man was fined or sentenced to the work house that morning. The song had done more good than punishment could have accomplished.—Exchange.

CURED WHEN OTHERS FAILED

CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 25, 1902.

Wine of Cardui can always be relied upon to cure when everything else fails. It is a certain cure for female diseases in their worst forms. I suffered for years with ulceration. Intense pains in the womb and ovaries and dreadful headaches unfitted me for my work. Finally I grew so ill that I had to keep to my bed. The pains were so intense at times as to cause spasms and a disagreeable discharge drained my life forces. In my extremity after all else had failed, I tried Wine of Cardui. After using it for two weeks I began to improve so rapidly that I felt encouraged to keep up the treatment, which I did for eighteen weeks, but at the end of that time I was entirely cured. What a relief was mine and how new and beautiful life looked to me when my health was restored. Only those who have passed through such a siege of sickness as I have will understand how much I value Wine of Cardui. It is indeed a boon to sick women.

Frances Mitchell

Secretary, North Chicago Frauen Verein.

Every weak woman needs Wine of Cardui. Wine of Cardui cures disordered and painful menstruation, periodical headaches, falling of the womb and leucorrhœa. It cures extreme cases of these troubles. It strengthens girls approaching womanhood, helps bring children to barren homes, makes pregnancy and childbirth easier, prevents miscarriages and is the best medicine ever made for use during the change of life. Why permit the good women in your home to suffer another day? Every druggist has $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

MISSIONARY INSTITUTES.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will unite in holding a Missionary Institute in Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, La., Jan. 16-20. An interesting programme has been jointly arranged, covering three daily sessions for four days of two hours each—10 a.m., 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. The work of the two societies will be presented at alternate sessions by able speakers thoroughly acquainted with their subjects. This Institute is held with the hope that it may not only be a benefit and an inspiration to the women of New Orleans, but for all of Louisiana and Mississippi. The Committee on Arrangements will secure special railroad rates and good board at moderate prices for all desiring to attend. For further information regarding rates write to Mrs. Elmer E. Wood, 1511 Dufossat street, New Orleans, Chairman of Committee on Arrangements. These rates will be published in the ADVOCATE and also in the daily papers.

SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED BY THE HOME MISSION SOCIETY AT THE INSTITUTES.

The full programme for the Institutes has not yet been filled out, but it is known that Mrs. Ed F. Cook, of Thomasville, Ga., a pastor's wife and a practical worker, will discuss the methods by which the pastors can best be helped by the female constituency of the church.

The Southern mountaineer will be discussed by Miss Belle H. Bennett, President of the Woman's Home Mission Society. Miss Bennett is from Richmond, Ky., and has visited and knows the counties of Kentucky intimately, so that her discussion of the subject is one of intelligence and sympathy without the foolish sentiment which often is exhibited in handling this subject. She speaks with more authority than any other Southern person on the real condition and needs of the mountaineer.

Problems of the Southern city will also be discussed. The industrial and social conditions will be handled by Miss Mary Helm, the editor of Our Homes. Miss Helm is one of the brightest women in the South and has given careful study to the social and industrial conditions of our Southern people, and will speak as one who knows, not alone the theoretical, but the practical side of the problem of Southern working people.

Miss Belle Bennett will discuss the negro slums while dealing with the subject of "The Problems of the Southern City." Miss Bennett is a Southern woman and knows the negro as only Southern women do. She has given much time to their instruction and has a Bible class of some 200 negroes every Sabbath afternoon at Richmond, Ky.

A solution of the problem of the Southern city from the layman's standpoint will be discussed by Dr. Aldrich, of Tulane University, at which time he will treat such themes as municipal spirit, juvenile courts, industrial betterment, sanitary conditions, or, in other words, the enactment and enforcement of such laws as will be for the general betterment of this class of society.

This layman's solution of the problem will be followed by the Church's solution, when Dr. J. E. Wray, of Carondelet Street Church, will tell of the work done by the Church.

Miss Estelle Haskin, City Board Organizer and Visitor of the Home Mission Society, will treat of "The Gospel Settlement Home and Its Influence on City Slums."

Mrs. Ed F. Cook will treat of "Rescue Work in All Its Phases, Both Preventive and Aggressive."

Dr. W. H. Tollman, Director of the Society of Social Service, New York, will give a stereoptican lecture, illustrating the betterment of the child life of our cities. Dr. Tollman, with Dr. Josiah Strong, has been the inspiration of not only a sentiment but conscience among the Christian people of this country, looking for the betterment of social and industrial conditions.

Another phase of study will be immigration in its relation to Southern cities. Miss Estelle Haskin will deal with the subject in relation to the whole South, and Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, of New Orleans, will talk of the influence of the foreigner in the city of New Orleans.

Other phases of Home Mission work will be discussed and it is hoped that as a result the people of this section will have a new sense of responsibility as regards the "other half."

MRS. JOHN B. PARKER,
Chairman of Press Committee.

FACTS AND EVIL SPEAKING.

A man traveling in a far-off part of the world came to a place where there were missionaries. All travelers expect missionaries to be hospitable, whether they themselves believe in missions or not. This man was no exception. He accepted the friendly invitations of the missionaries, to lunch with one, dine with another, and so on. They on their side spare no pains to make their guest comfortable. Their fare was very plain. But they clubbed together, and, for the visitor's benefit, bought some ham, which was an expensive luxury in those parts. Wherever the visitor went for a meal the ham was sent there for him. He enjoyed it very much. But he did not understand their hospitable stratagem. He thought they all had quantities of ham in their larders; and he went home and talked about the extravagance of the missionaries, who lived every day on the most expensive food.

Another visitor accepted a missionary's hospitality in another spot. The missionary household went without butter themselves habitually. But enough butter for the guest was placed by him at every meal. He ate it. He never noticed that nobody else had any; and so he, too, went home and criticised the luxuries that missionaries have.

Yet the facts in the case were facts. One traveler did have ham at the missionaries' tables; the other did have butter. Evil speaking may follow facts. The trouble is, it usually doesn't have all the facts, or anything near all. More than that, it puts the wrong construction on the facts, and so makes them false in their bearings. These two true incidents, reported lately by one who knew, show the risk we run of slandering others by saying unkind things, based, apparently on fact. The only safe rule is to put the kindest construction possible on facts, and when they seem beyond favorable construction — why, then keep that golden silence which all the ages have taught wise men to praise.—Onward.

The particular annoyance which befell you this morning; the vexatious words which met your ear and "grieved" your spirit; the disappointment which was his appointment for today; the slight but hindering ailment; the presence of some one who is "a grief of mind" to you—whatever this day seemeth not joyous, but grievous, is linked in "the good pleasure of his goodness" with a corresponding afterward of "peaceable fruit," the very seed from which, if you only do not choke it, this shall spring and ripen.—F. R. Havergal.

The Home Circle.

MOTHER.

God made a home where hearts might turn to rest.
When all the other homes of earth had failed.
God made a star whose light burned steadily
When all the other lights grew dim and paled.

God made a voice that all the breadth of seas,
The change of seasons, or the flight of years
Could never silence, never rob of power
To reach, to bless, to guide, to silence fears.

God made a love that wrapped our infancy
And blessed us, even when we knew it not—
A love that knew no barrier, no self—
A love that never faltered or forgot.

This was God's gift, immortal, changeless, vast,
Whose name He wrote, because He knew no other
Name sweeter, on our waking consciousness,
In golden characters. That name was "Mother."

MEMORIES OF NAZARETH.

I wonder if Nazareth seems as real as New York or Boston or Cincinnati? I must confess that to me it did not have the same realness as the cities in our own familiar America, but seemed in a far-away Bible world that had no connection whatever with our modern, rushing New World life.

But how real is Nazareth to me now, and how I love to think of it and to live over again in memory the time I spent there!

It was at Nazareth that I spent my first night in the Holy Land, for we had landed at Caifa in the early morning and thence journeyed by carriage to Nazareth.

Most of the morning our road had skirted along the fertile plain of Esdraelon and led us through most beautiful, flower-bedecked fields, stretching like brilliant carpets all about us, and gray, shadowy olive-groves; but as we approached Nazareth the country became more hilly, and suddenly, in the middle of the afternoon, we saw, lying among the hills, in a pocket, as it were, the little town, with its square white limestone houses glistening in the brilliancy of the Syrian sunshine.

Never can I forget the wondrous beauty of the scene—those flower-clad hills, brilliant with scarlet poppies, buttercups and daisies; the rich, green valley, stretching away to the blue mountains of the Carmel range on the south, and to Tabor and the mountains of Moab beyond Jordan on the west, silent witnesses of the history of the ages, and there the little white town lying picturesquely among those sacred hills.

Ah! surely the eyes of the child Jesus must have rested many times on such a scene; surely his heart must have stirred within him at its beauty; and many times, as a lad, he must have wandered over these same hills, communing with the Father and preparing for those years which were to take him away from the peace of Nazareth and to lead him to the work of Galilee and the pain and anguish of Jerusalem.

Full of such thoughts we drove into the town and were soon settled in the plain but comfortable hotel with the modern-sounding name, "The New Nazareth."

Afternoon tea and biscuits, served to us by bright-robed Syrians, soon greatly refreshed us, and we started out for a walk through Nazareth's streets.

The town, like all towns in Palestine, is far more picturesque from a distance than on near acquaintance, for the streets are as narrow as our sidewalks. They are dirty, and wind in and out in the most labyrinthian way, much to the traveler's bewilderment.

Almost all the buying and selling seems to take place in the street, for not only does the shopkeeper exhibit his wares out-of-doors in front of his shop, but numerous venders, with all kinds of articles, from a bit of olive-wood to Oriental lace, follow the traveler with a persistence that outrivals anything imagined in the Occident. Beggars, too, followed us with their plaintive cry of "Backsheesh," so that our walk resembled a procession rather than a quiet promenade.

As we wandered through the streets we saw many carpenter shops—crude, simple affairs—and in one, I remember, was a dark-eyed boy helping his father to fashion a simple article out of olive-wood. I stood long and watched them, and could easily fancy the boy Jesus of the long ago working patiently and cheerfully at the carpenter's bench, even as this dark-haired boy worked to-day.

Near the northern end of the town is a well called the Virgin's well. A large arch is built in a wall where the water now gushes forth in two streams. Here to-day come women in bright colored robes, with their little children, to draw water, carrying the jars on their heads, just as in olden times.

These dark-eyed women, chattering with each other, staring at the curious stranger, make a true picture of Oriental life. One is especially impressed with the brilliancy of color. Even the poorest, most ragged one is bedecked in scarlet or green or blue of brightest hues.

I was fascinated in watching these dark-eyed women of the Orient, and here again I could see the Beautiful Child playing happily with the other children, waiting for his mother. This well is still called the Virgin's Well, and the picture of the water carrier we see there to-day is like that when the mother of Jesus went with the other village women to draw water for her household; but the real spring, where the Virgin and Child Jesus used to go, is a short distance further up the hillside, covered by a church, the spring itself being the altar.

From this spring the water is piped to the arched well about a block and a half below. Thus the water which we see the women of Nazareth drawing to-day has the same source as that drank by Jesus and his mother.

How well I remember one afternoon—a glorious spring day in early March—climbing one of the high, steep hills about Nazareth! Part of the way we climbed on horseback up almost perpendicular paths and great rocks, until finally, when it became too steep for the horses, we dismounted and made the rest of the way on foot.

But how great was our reward upon reaching the summit! There, to the south, was the great fertile plain of Esdraelon; to the west, beyond the hills, was a lovely glimpse of the blue Mediterranean, with a ship in sight; below lay the white houses of the town, with its narrow, winding streets and picturesque, broad-robed people, and all about were the sacred hills which Jesus must have lived and wandered over.

It was a picture full of loveliness and peace, and one on which Jesus must often have looked. As I stood looking on the town below I could fancy him gazing on the scene, drinking in its rich beauty, and yet looking on the people, on the little children, of that town with a tender yearning, a feeling of compassion, sorry for their sins, their sorrows, their trials, and longing for them to understand him and his teachings.

The last night we spent at Nazareth I looked out at the starry dome above. The little town below lay sleeping, and there was something infinitely sweet and solemn in the quiet stars shining, serenely above the town so full of sacred associations.

We were to leave early the next morning, and I should long since have retired, but the wondrous beauty of the soft Southern night held me spellbound; the stars seemed to whisper to me stories of the past—stories of a little Child who had once looked upon their clear light, who had once slept beneath their solemn gaze.

Early next morning we mounted our horses to continue our journey southward, and as we gained the summit of a steep, rocky hill I turned to take a last farewell look on the little town, now glistening white in the morning sunlight. How serene and lovely it looked now, resting among the flower-clad hills, a fit place for the Man of sorrows to spend those early years, preparing for his great life mission of work and love and sacrifice!—Gertrude Lynch Springer, in Western Christian Advocate.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The sixtieth session of the Louisiana Conference was held in the Felicity Street Church, New Orleans, beginning at 9 a.m., Jan. 3, 1906, with Bishop H. C. Morrison presiding. The opening religious exercises were conducted by the Bishop, who, in connection with the Scripture reading, delivered a brief address adapted to the time and the occasion.

Dr. F. S. Parker, who has been Secretary for several years, called the roll, and was again elected. John C. Sligh was elected Assistant; W. G. Evans, Statistical Secretary; W. H. Harvell, J. G. Sloan and H. W. Whitehead, Assistants, and John F. Foster, Railroad Secretary.

The presiding elders nominated the following standing committees, and also made nominations to fill vacancies on various boards:

Public Worship—H. G. Davis, E. P. Craddock and Richard Wilkinson.

Books and Periodicals—W. E. Boggs, N. E. Joyner, H. W. Bowman, J. E. Wray, A. S. J. Neill, A. E. Miller and C. A. Knoll.

Sabbath Observance—R. A. Holloway, P. O. Lowry and E. K. Means.

District Conference Records—N. S. Cornell, R. T. McClendon and John B. Hutchinson.

Memoirs—W. F. Henderson, J. L. P. Sheppard, C. W. Carter and C. C. Weir.

Conference Relations—F. N. Parker, J. D. Harper, C. W. Carter, W. H. Benton, K. W. Dodson, J. W. Lee and L. L. Roberts.

Temperance—T. S. Sligh, J. E. Denson and R. O. Weir.

To Fill Vacancies—Board of Missions, N. E. Joyner; Church Extension, T. J. Warlick, J. W. Wynn; Sunday Schools, O. B. Staples; Epworth League, C. F. Staples, W. W. Holmes; Board of Education, Briscoe Carter.

Communications from the Publishing House, the General Board of Missions, Sunday School Board, Church Extension and Epworth League Boards and from the Board of Education were received and referred to the proper Conference boards, and also a communication from the Director of the Correspondence School.

The Conference adopted a resolution asking the United States Senate to expel Reed Smoot, the Mormon apostle, from the Senate, and also to submit a constitutional amendment to the people prohibiting poligamy throughout the Union.

The attendance was large—very few preachers being absent, and with scarcely an exception they are in fine health—a body of willing workers. They received a hearty welcome to the hospitality of the homes of New Orleans Methodists. Bishop Morrison, being a resident of the city, and assisting in the entertainment of the preachers, spoke words of welcome in behalf of the citizens, as did also the pastor of Felicity Church, Rev. E. P. Craddock. Bishop Morrison invited the members of the Conference and visiting ministerial brethren and visitors to attend a reception given at his residence on Saturday afternoon. The reception was largely attended and much enjoyed. The occasion will be long remembered.

On the first day of the session the presiding elders made short statements in regard to the general condition — temporal and spiritual—of their districts. All reported considerable interference with the work during the summer on account of quarantine regulations, but, notwithstanding, some of the districts made greater advancement than last year in finances, and others in spiritual matters. One district did not do as well as usual, owing to the excessively wet weather during the planting and growing season. Bishop Morrison said that "the advance shown in the reports, not only of the presiding elders, but the pastors, was remarkable, coming, as it did, in spite of the obstacles of the past year."

Candidates for admission into the traveling connection were few—only four making application, but the lack in this direction was more than made up by transfers from other conferences, eight or ten having been received. The list of superannuates remains the same, one member, Rev. A. D. McVoy, having died during the year, and one added to it, Rev. T. K. Fauntleroy. One member, Dr. S. S. Keener, was granted a supernumerary relation. Brother Fauntleroy, who was placed on the roll of honor, was at the time critically ill, and the Conference passed a resolution of sympathy, and joined in prayer in his behalf. He is much loved by the brethren, and is a faithful and consecrated man.

"PROHIBITION DOES NOT PROHIBIT."

Why will our prohibition friends continue to war against the sale of liquor, after being told so many times that "prohibition does not prohibit?" They are constantly being told that "more liquor is sold in prohibition territory than when the sale is allowed. They are constantly being told that "grass grows in the streets of every town that votes local option," and that where license is voted the town treasury is full and the citizens have good streets and sidewalks, and rejoice in prosperity. What hinders prohibitionists from seeing all these things? The liquor men say these things are so. Are they not all honorable men?

Prohibitionists do not see these things because they are not to be seen. The sayings are not true. They are put forth only to catch the weak and purchasable element of society. There is not a liquor man in the whole land that would hesitate a moment to do anything at all allowable to enhance his business. And it stands to reason that if more liquor is sold under prohibition than under license, the last one of them would vote for prohibition every time the opportunity is given. He would pay as handsomely for the privilege as he does for votes to license his trade.

The enforcement of the laws against the sale of liquor and the laws regulating the traffic in license States and counties is having effect on the trade. It has quickened the energy of dealers, and they are making desperate efforts to retain and extend their business. In some places it has closed saloons and driven a few into bankruptcy. A notable case is that of a brewery in Kansas City, which, if not bankrupt, is in great straits, and has gone into the hands of a receiver. This firm has learned to its sorrow that less liquor is sold (or, at least, less liquor is paid for) in prohibition territory and in territory where the regulations are enforced than where the open policy prevails.

What brought this about? The answer is, "The failure is attributed to the reform movement in Missouri and Kansas." The attorney for the company, when questioned on the subject, said: "There are many reasons for the failure. Most important, I think, is the wave of reform in Kansas City. It has been hard enough for the brewers in Missouri, but worse in Kansas City. They are closing up the joints on the Kansas side, and locking the saloons on the Missouri side on Sunday." The Texas Baptist Standard, in noting the above facts, comments as follows:

"Just what happened to this brewery is going to be the common experience of liquor dealers all over the country in the on-coming years. The sooner the voters of our country make up their minds to go to the ballot box and deposit their ballots against the liquor business in all forms the better it will be for them and the country.

"A man who voted against the liquor business in religious meetings, and then votes on election days with liquor men stultifies himself and ought to repent of his folly. Votes for resolutions denouncing liquor selling and drinking count for very little as against votes put in the ballot-box indorsing liquor candidates and parties. Ballot-box votes are counted and determine results. The vote that is counted is the one that will help defenseless women and children."

THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS HERESY.

If "the whole of orthodoxy consists in loving service for our fellow men," then the great Inter-Church Conference on Federation was heterodox to the core when it unanimously agreed to confine the membership of the Conference to those who accept Christ as "our Divine Lord and Savior"—a requirement that effectually shuts out Unitarians and Jews. In the estimation of some people the Jews of New Orleans are the best people in the city. We have heard that said. Among them are honorable merchants, bankers, etc., and many of them are forward in all good works. Their high standing and loving service in behalf of their fellow-men nobody questions, and yet they are not Christians. The Unitarians, perhaps a step or two in advance of the Jews in their respect for Christ, are not Christians. They are disciples of Christ only in the sense that men are the disciples of Darwin, Huxley, Spencer and others. But many of them are not only benevolent and philanthropic, but spend much time and means in loving service for their fellow-men. They are, therefore, in modern thought as orthodox as the most active and faithful servant of our divine Lord. We wonder what university professors will do next in order to exhibit their broadness of faith and charity?

Responsibility walks hand in hand with capacity and power.—Exchange.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Conference was well entertained by the good people of New Orleans, members of other churches besides Felicity joining in extending hospitality to the preachers and delegates. Distance from the Conference room made no difference, as the street cars were convenient and transportation rapid.

Dr. Hamill, in his talk about the Sunday school work, was considerably above his average. The address was delivered after his own style, but contained much more than the usual amount of solid thought. If it was not a new speech it was one of the old ones we had never heard, and we have heard him often.

Rev. J. R. Stewart, representing the Superannuate Endowment Fund, spent several days at the Conference. His talk on the subject was short, but to the point. He wasted no time on preliminaries.

Dr. Lamar, one of our book agents, represented the Publishing House at Nashville, and Brother W. C. Everett, represented the Branch House at Dallas of which he is manager. Dr. Lamar makes announcements, but never indulges in long speeches. Brother Everett simply let it be known that he was present and ready for business.

Dr. Ward, Missionary Secretary, was quite at home, and made one of his clean, clear-cut talks on the cause dear to the heart of every lover of our Lord. He is unassuming, a man of brains and courage. The more the brethren see of him, the more they like him.

Dr. C. W. Carter, now ranking among the oldest members of the Conference, is one of the best loved by the brethren. The modesty that has always characterized him is still prominent. The sweetness of his Christian spirit is still maintained.

Of the transfers to the Conference some are young men; others in the prime of life, who have occupied prominent positions in the Church. As we see it, their coming is opportune, and we trust they may be blessed with great success in their new fields of labor.

We present in our first page an excellent likeness of one of the patriarchs. Those who know Brother Jackson will not have to look twice to recognize the features. Unable by reason of age to do the work of a pastor, he is doing his best to circulate good literature. He traveled extensively last year, and will keep up the work for the year to come.

Dr. Hammond was at his best. He had ample time, and a good opportunity, and entertained the Conference for an hour. He is one of our best men, polished, well-informed, and thoroughly devoted to his specialty, Christian education. He knows all about education in the South, especially in our Church. He is giving the strength of his manhood to the cause.

Many changes were made in the appointments—some of the leading men, who had occupied charges only one year. A few brethren were greatly disappointed, but, as far as we know or have heard, none are afflicted. These removals are incident to our itinerant system, and though they sometimes come unexpectedly, as a rule, they are accepted heroically, and the preachers go in the spirit of the Master, and do the work assigned them.

Dr. W. C. Lovett, Editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate was a pleasant visitor. At the invitation of Bishop Morrison, he made a talk to the Conference. In a few well chosen words, he spoke in behalf of our periodical literature—a live subject just at this time in our Church. Dr. Lovett is a strong, safe man. His paper from week to week has the right ring.

The Preachers' Institute of the Louisiana Conference, under the management of Rev. H. B. Carre, devised a course of lectures during the session, and occupied the latter part of the afternoon of several days, and an equal number of evenings. Prof. Carre was fortunate in securing two speakers, thoroughly furnished for the work of the Institute. Dr. W. E. McMurry, pastor of Centenary Church, St. Louis, possibly the largest Church in Southern Methodism, delivered three lectures on the "Down-town Church." He discussed thoroughly the problems of city mission work, the difficulties and the methods. Dr. McMurry has a "down-town" Church, and has carried to grand success a work begun by predecessors several years ago. He spoke, not as a theorist, but as one having experience, and now actually in the work. His lectures were very instructive, and we trust will produce good fruit in the days to come. Prof. Thomas Carter, a product of New Orleans Methodism—for many years identified with the work in the city—gave three lectures on "Methodism in London in the days of Wesley." He had carefully prepared himself, and treated his hearers to the doings and success of Methodism in its beginning. The work of the Institute is worthy of consideration of all the preachers of the Conference. They are well adapted to help both the preachers and the people.

Much of the time of the Conference was spent in considering the Centenary College matter—a matter that has been under discussion for two years. We were unable to hear the discussion in full, or to secure a copy of the report, and can give at present only a summary of the work as reported to the daily press. We copy from the Picayune: "The Conference adopted the report of the Legal Conference, accepting the Centenary property and deciding to go ahead with the college at Shreveport. Three new men were placed on the Legal Conference in the places of T. K. Fauntleroy, J. A. Miller and Dr. S. S. Keener. The new members are R. H. Wynn, J. R. Moore and S. H. Meyer.

The Conference held on a day longer than usual, the last session convening Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. One or two short reports were read and adopted, and, after passing the usual vote of thanks to the railroads, newspapers, churches and city pastors; to the Secretary, and to Bishop Morrison for the elegant reception on Saturday last, the appointments were read, and Conference adjourned.

The Statistical Secretary made the following report: Local preachers, 65; members, 32,213; infants baptized, 914; adults baptized, 726; Epworth Leagues, 71; Epworth League members, 1,049; Sunday schools, 275; officers and teachers, 1,780; scholars, 17,425; collected for superannuated preachers, $6,903; for foreign missions, $5,803; domestic missions, $3,853; church extension, $1879; American Bible Society, $204.70; support of presiding elders, $11,974; preachers in charge, $81,616; to support of bishops, $922; number of societies, 493; houses of worship, 338; value of churches, $628,248; indebtedness of churches, $17,412; number of charges, 126; parsonages, 101; value of parsonages, $143,301; indebtedness of parsonages, $4,646; districts, 7; district parsonages, 4; value of district parsonages, $3,800; insurance carried, $277,725; premiums paid, $1,427; churches damaged, 2, to amount of $160. There was no damage by fire. These figures, as compared with last year's report, show a gain in some things, and a loss in others. There is a loss of twenty-two local preachers, and a gain of 129 members. There is a loss of fifteen Sunday schools and ninety-four officers and teachers, but a gain of 916 scholars. The collections for superannuated preachers, etc., amounted to $6,903, an increase over last year of $1,033. For foreign missions there was a decrease of $1,773, and for domestic missions a decrease of $379. There was an increase in the pay of presiding elders of $980, and of preachers-in-charge of $7,888, and a decrease of $124 in amount paid on the Bishops Fund.

What God wants is men great enough to be small enough to be used.—H. Webb-Peploe.

PERSONAL.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Jackson, and Rev. Robt. Selby, of Hattiesburg, Miss., were welcome visitors to the Louisiana Conference last week.

We got a glimpse—only a glimpse—of Rev. T. W. Adams, of the Brookhaven District, as he was introduced to the Louisiana Conference on Monday last.

Rev. R. E. Duke says he has started "all right" in his year's work at Ackerman, Miss. We can well believe this, as he has sent us already ten new subscribers. He will send more.

The Brookhaven Methodists are delighted with their new pastor, Rev. Geo. H. Thompson. His ministry opens auspiciously in that college town. The ladies prepared and served an elegant supper for the family on their arrival.

Bishop Hoss and family are spending the winter in Citra, Florida. At the close of his tour of conferences, the Bishop greatly needed rest. We feel safe in saying that he is not idle. When not preaching, he is writing.

Rev. J. W. Lowrence, once a member of the North Mississippi Conference, and well remembered, died at his home, Martin, Tenn., Dec. 28, 1905. His illness was of long duration. He was a consecrated and useful preacher.

One of our exchanges says: "Rev. Otto Bamber, the young pastor of the Wesson (Miss.) Baptist Church, attracts not hundreds, but thousands to hear him as opportunity offers." That young brother ought to be in New Orleans—this great and wicked city.

Rev. O. L. Savage is at home in his new Charge, New Albany, Miss. He received a royal welcome at the hands of his good people, and in less than one month after conference received twenty-five members into the Church. He is working to secure a club of twenty subscribers to the ADVOCATE. He will succeed.

Just as we go to press the sad news comes to us of the death of Sister Bachman, beloved wife of Rev. G. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference. Rev. J. A. Bowen telegraphs under date of Jan. 10: "Sister G. W. Bachman died triumphantly at 3 o'clock this morning." Brother Bachman has our sympathy and prayers in this, the darkest hour of his life.

The good people of Winona have given their pastor, Rev. J. A. Bowen, a hearty welcome, and he enters upon his second year's work with flattering prospects. Protracted services during Christmas week were productive of good. Rev. E. B. Ramsey was with him and preached one sermon and delivered two lectures. Sam Jones will be with him in May or June.

A letter from Sister A. E. Goodrich, recently removed to California, brings the sad news of the demise of another one of her children, Miss Gladys, who will be remembered as a bright and promising young lady. This makes the fourth time we have been called on to report the death of members of Brother and Sister Goodrich's family in the last three years. May the Holy Spirit comfort the bereaved ones in their sore affliction.

BROTHER CARPENTER COMPLIMENTED.

Dear Dr. Boswell: On the eve of the departure of our much loved pastor of the past two years, Bro. Carpenter, of Court Street, Hattiesburg, "the boys," as he fondly termed them, of the Senior Epworth League, presented him with a very handsome gold-headed cane—an expression of love and esteem for him and gratitude that his interest in the young people of the church was so deep and sincere. Bro. Carpenter left us last week to take charge of his new appointment, Central Church, Meridian, and while we are sorely grieved to give him up, we feel satisfied in having Dr. W. C. Black as our pastor.

Very sincerely, MISS FLORENCE N. DEASON.
Hattiesburg, Miss.

EDUCATE.

Ignorance is the enemy which is most to be dreaded. Sooner or later the facts tell as nothing else can, and if only the facts are reiterated and illustrated until they become part of the very thinking of the nation they are irresistible in the end. Nor can any reformers rest their case more confidently on the facts than those who are seeking to set the country free from its bondage to strong drink. But the work must not be left to teachers or professionals alone. It must be undertaken by all who wish the good cause to prosper. Quietly and persistently, young and old must be brought to see how wide-spread are the bearings of this question; that it has to do with both soul and body, with both morals and politics, with the weakening of the will of the individual, and the sapping of the life of the nation. If only those who set themselves to teach are themselves taught they need never fail to make their lessons interesting and their work will grow on them, for, to him that hath shall be given is nowhere truer than in this connection.—Temperance Leader.

TOBACCO IN JAPAN.

It is said that in Japan youths under twenty years of age are not allowed to smoke tobacco. Viscount Haydashi has informed the Scottish Anti-Tobacco Society that the Japanese police confiscate the "smoking instruments" and the tobacco found in the possession of boys, and that parents and guardians who knowingly permit their boys to use tobacco are liable to a fine of fifty cents, and dealers who sell tobacco to minors are subject to a fine of five dollars under a law enacted in 1900. This will help to explain the secret of the wonderful physical endurance shown by Japanese soldiers in the late war. Which is better—to let young men waste their energies by the use of tobacco and whisky and other forms of dissipation, rendering them useless to the state in time of war and largely so in time of peace, as was the case with the Russians, and as unfortunately is the case with many an American, as shown in the war with Spain; or to have these young men conserve their energies by a life of abstinence and temperance, so that they may be prepared for the exigencies of life which may come upon them, whether in war or peace? To ask the question is to answer it. But to answer it is to raise another question: Should the sale of things which undermine the physical constitution of men and weaken their minds and corrupt their morals and damn their souls be permitted? And should places where these things are sold be licensed?—Baptist and Reflector.

A GOVERNOR FAVORS PROHIBITION.

In an address to the state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of North Carolina, Governor Glenn, of that state, "declared himself for state prohibition of the liquor traffic; said the time had come for it; that he had burned his bridges behind him, and would stump the state for this cause; and that it would carry by 75,000 majority." So says the Biblical Recorder. This certainly is very signficant. It shows the tremendous growth of the temperance sentiment in North Carolina, and indicates a similar growth throughout the South. It will not be many years before we shall say not, "The saloon must go"—but rather "The saloon has gone"—thank the Lord. Thanks also to the good people who voted to make it go. —Baptist and Reflector.

EDWARDS CHARGE.

Mississippi Conference.

Dear Doctor Boswell:—At the close of our recent session of the Mississippi Conference I heard so many say: "It is the best session in years." And to this I say: "Amen!" With what harmony and love we labored together! How gladly did we receive the bread of life as it was broken for us! With what cheerfulness did we receive our new assignments to duty! After such experiences, I, for one, came away from the Conference session inspired to labor more earnestly for my Lord, and with a keener conception of that bond of love that binds Methodist preachers together.

The past year was filled with vexations experiences and quarantine afflictions, but "none of these things" moved us. We have had one more session of Conference and rejoiced together because God has sustained us; and again we rejoice because we are retained in His army and on the "line of duty." "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." My reappointment to labor in this portion of the Lord's vineyard was very agreeable to myself, and, judging from the evidence in hand, must have been to this patient and long-suffering people. Hearty expressions of good-will ple. Hearty expressions of good-will and appreciation have been pouring in upon us continually since my return—expressions, not in words only, but in a substantial and material way. With a love that is broader than creed, Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant, have been open-hearted in wishing me well in my ministry, and open-handed in the bestowal of gifts that add to our temporal comfort.

When I think upon those things that have been sent to our parsonage home as an expression of appreciation by this people the old song, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love" has a greater meaning to me; and I pray God that I may have the understanding and the consecrated common sense that will enable me to properly discharge every obligation that "Christian love" lays upon me.

In the fullness of my heart I have turned to God's Word and anxiously read over and over: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." Most seriously have I asked myself the question: Am I bearing "much fruit?" "The field is white unto harvest" before me, and my Lord has said: "Go work." The people have received me gladly, and my consuming desire is that I may win souls to Christ as seals to my ministry this year. Brethren pray for us that we may bring forth "much fruit" to the glory of God. Fraternally,

J. W. CAMPBELL.

MISS MARGARET BEALE FOSTER.

On October 4, 1905, at the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. T. W. Foster, at Tchula, Miss., this noble and gifted young woman peacefully passed from earth to heaven. Hers was a beautiful triumph over the last enemy. On the following day her body was laid to rest in the cemetary at Lexington, after tender services held in the church where she had held membership for several years. Her uncle, Rev. Thomas W. Adams, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, conducted the services, assisted by Revs. Tucker, Duncan and Hall, of the North Mississippi Conference.

Margaret was born in Madison County, Miss., on May 25, 1879; and at the time of her death was just entering upon the twenty-seventh year of her life. From the cradle to the grave there was a continual unfolding of a character of rare beauty and loveliness. Those who knew her most intimately failed to discover a blemish in her life.

She was converted when a small girl, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Her religious experience was clear and satisfactory. Membership in the Church of Christ was always to her a sacred and blessed honor. She was true to her vows. She would rather have died than to have brought reproach to the cause of Christ or hinder the Church in its saving work by any worldliness or unfaithfulness on her part. As a Christian her life was eminently exemplary and conspicuously helpful.

A few years after her conversion and reception into the Church she recognized a distinct divine call to missionary work. "Come over and help us" was the cry from the heathen millions that rang through her soul. The call was imperative, and she began at once to obey. Prompt obedience to the call of God characterized her whole life. A call to missionary work was to her God's call to prepare for the most effective and useful service, that she might with joy fulfill her high and holy calling.

She began her preparatory work by entering the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, Miss., in September, 1894. She spent seven years there, taking an elaborate and thorough course, and graduated in June, 1901. President Kincannon writes: "Throughout her career she held the admiration and respect of the student body, and was regarded by those members of the faculty who knew her intimately as a young woman of highest Christian character."

Having completed a full course at the Industrial Institute and College and graduated with great credit, she entered the Scarritt Bible and Training School, at Kansas City, Mo., in September, 1901, and immediately took a high stand in all of her classes. Her thorough training at the Industrial Institute and College and excellent powers of penetration and clearness of mind enabled her to make an enviable record at the Training School, from which she graduated in May, 1903, in spite of a long and distressing illness in her senior year.

When Margaret had completed her course at the Scarritt Bible and Training School, she offered herself to the Woman's Board of Missions. Her papers were sent from the Training School to the Executive Committee of the Board in Nashville, and she was accepted and referred to the Board in annual session. The Board met in Memphis in May, 1903—its silver jubilee—and at that session the Committee on Missionary Candidates made the following report: "The papers of Miss Margaret B. Foster, of the North Mississippi Conference, evidence qualities required for a physician, and we recommend that she be prepared for a medical missionary." She met the Board at that session, but her consecration was postponed until after the completion of her medical course.

She entered the Woman's Medical College in Philadelphia at the opening of the fall term of 1903. Her course there was to cover four years. She had just finished the second year. Two years more at that great institution would have completed her preparation for service in China, where she had fondly hoped to devote all the energies of her consecrated life to the service of her Lord, whom she loved with a pure heart fervently.

During these eleven years of incessant labor to fully equip herself for the work to which God had called her, Margaret used every opportunity that open up to her to quicken and develop a missionary conscience in the young people of the Church. She attended and threw herself with intelligent enthusiasm into missionary rallies, institutes, conventions, and board meetings. Possessing a commanding physique, a clear and musical voice, a fluent and singularly exact vocabulary, and a queenly dignity, she easily attracted attention in any gathering, and always produced a profound impression in favor of her cause. She was naturally endowed with qualities for leadership. With these native endowments splendidly developed by the most careful training, she gave promise of great service and unsurpassed achievements in her work for the Church in behalf of the lost heathen. But in the face of her death our grieved hearts whisper: "Thy will be done." We cannot interpret this strange providence, but we are all in the hands of Him who overrules all the affairs and experiences of his children. We believe that "all things work together for good to them that love God." Our prayer is that God may reach thousands of noble young women of our Church through her pure life, noble character, consuming zeal, tireless work, and premature end, and call them to this holy service which she loved so well, and for which she was fitting herself so industriously and eagerly. May her mantle fall on her devoted younger sister, Tommie, who is now in the Scarritt Bible and Training School! Amen!

THOMAS W. ADAMS.

Mrs. LUCY WILLIAMS HORTON, widow of L. M. Horton, was born in Kershaw District, S. C., Sept. 17, 1822; was married to L. M. Horton on Oct. 2, 1849, and died in Newton County, Miss., on Nov. 18, 1905. She was the daughter of Rev. Eli Williams, a local Methodist preacher of Alabama. Living to the extreme age of 83 years, of course, caused her to suffer much the infirmities of old age, but she bore it all with remarkable patience and Christian fortitude. Her last illness was about nine weeks' duration, and at times her suffering was intense; yet she was never heard to murmur or complain, but her faith in her God, whom she had served and trusted so long (having joined the Methodist Church at the age of 11 years), sustained her to the end. She was of a noble, self-sacrificing disposition, which endeared her to all with whom she was associated. Her life was "hid with Christ in God," and consequently she "walked with God." Her pastor said of her after her death: "I have known few Christians whose purity of character was so mingled with humility in manner and modesty of profession as hers." Her husband, L. M. Horton, died in 1880. This writer, during the early years of his ministry, 35 to 40 years ago, was much in the home during Brother Horton's lifetime, he being a very active worker along all lines in our church, so I have been intimately acquainted with Sister Horton for many long years. She was the mother of eight children — two girls and six boys. Two have crossed over the river. Six are still living, all of whom are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. During the latter years of Sister Horton's life, her Bible and the New Orleans Christian Advocate were her constant companions, and from these she derived much comfort—what a treasure! She has left to her children and grandchildren, in the memory of her humble, faithful Christian life, better truly than gold and silver. May her example be followed by the long line of posterity she leaves to mourn. "Blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord; yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their work do follow them," so let us think of Mother Horton as one who was faithful to the end of a long journey through life, and is resting among the angels in heaven, having joined the sweet companionship of the loved ones gone before. THE WISE MEN FIND JESUS.

When General Lew Wallace wrote the book "Ben Hur" he made use of a blessed truth of God, which is hid from the casual reader; but a Christian student will find that the impelling influence that brought the three wise men to a common meeting-place, away in the desert East, was the Holy Spirit, and the same power gave them the star to guide them day by day as they journeyed together to the westward. "No man can come to me lest the Father drew him." It is the Holy Spirit that shows to all the things of Christ. This beautiful thought and ever-blessed truth may well be taught in the lesson before us. The lesson could be appropriately entitled "Spiritual Guidance.

When Jesus promised to send the Comforter after he went away his disciples did not then realize the value of the gift that was bestowed upon them. Neither do we realize to-day the blessedness that is ours in the privilege of having the Holy Ghost as our Monitor, as well as our Comforter, and also Guide. General Wallace tells of how these three seekers after Jesus waited for each other until all were come, and then, before they started on the long journey, they talked together of the strangeness of it all, of how the desire to see the Lord came into each soul of the three, and in a strange way it was made known to them the great privilege that was to be theirs at the end of their journey. How true is this a picture of a poor, tired, sin-stained mortal, desiring pardon and peace, and of how the Spirit leads such to Christ. When the magi reached Jerusalem they began to inquire for him that had been revealed unto them as born King of the Jews.

They were guided by a star! A great deal has been said and written about this star—the Star of Bethlehem. Scientific men, in their astronomical researches, have tried to account for the appearance of this same star. Why not try to account, in a scientific way, for God holding the sun and the moon still at the command of Joshua, in the Valley of Ajalon, or give a scientific account of how water was turned into wine at the marriage in Cana of Galilee! We have taught this same lesson to adults in Bible classes, and it was taught that the movements of this star was a miracle of God at the advent of his beloved Son, and that a miracle scientifically accounted for is no miracle. A miracle has no earthly explanation. What is more wonderful than that we now delight in things that used to give us no concern, before we were changed from nature to grace.

The wise men went direct to the king, and the king called the Sanhedrin together, and God made the enemies of his son testify to the world that ancient prophecy was fulfilled when Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea.

When the wise men left Herod, the king, they did not know that they had been among enemies of all good, and it needed a messenger from heaven to keep them from innocently aiding in the wicked plans of the king. When they were out, and started on the way to Bethlehem, they were provided with a better guide than they had sought in Jerusalem, for "Lo the star, which they saw in the East, went before them" all the way "till it came and stood over where the young child lay." The wise men must have not known, but we know that it is best to ask our Heavenly Father for direction in matters pertaining to his kingdom. When they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. "When we have earnestly besought the Father for his guidance and he graciously manifests his answer, we rejoice—we say, "O kind Father, now I see, I see; thy hand is with me." How often this happens in the life of the trusting child of God!

There is nothing recorded in God's Word that is not full of deep meaning. When the wise men found Jesus they fell down and worshiped him. Some have said that this worship was not given to the child for his holy worthiness, for the want of knowledge on the part of the worshipers. Why not? Has not the Holy Spirit revealed the Savior to us? Could he not have revealed him to these men in all the "fullness of blessing?" There was the long, mysterious journey, the guidance of the star, the realization of the hopes that brought them from far. They might have come from near Babylon, where God had shown some of his mighty power; and the seed sown by the lives of some of the good men in captivity might have only then begun to bud forth and bear fruit. The three wise men may have proved mighty missionaries for the Lord Jesus, which need not seem strange, for even the Ethiopian eunuch was found by Phillip reading God's word, who knows where he obtained it?

The knowledge of Israel's God was more widespread in those days than appears at a glance. We thank God for all this, that there are many among us to-day, like the wise men, seeking Jesus, and it is our part to live the life that so mysteriously teaches the love of Christ, for many an opportunity will be lost if our daily lives do not testify of a Savior come to save that which was lost. We may not have the chance to tell of this way of life and truth in words; so let our acts, which speak loudest, tell of the fulness of our hearts.

"Being warned of God in a dream, they departed into their own country another way," and we may believe that when they came back to their own country they walked in, and talked of, another way—even that way that Jesus meant when he said: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

Our golden text, "My Son, give me thine heart," is a gracious call from the Heavenly Father who has shown us that he loves us by sending his own Son to be our Savior.

Aside from the promptings of love we should let gratitude impel us to take Jesus as he is offered. We have a guide to lead us to find the Savior; it is the word of God, and Peter, long years after Jesus returned to his home in heaven, spoke of it as a "light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts." So let us at all times betake ourselves to God's holy word. "My word is truth" said Jesus and we surely need truth in this age of error. Let us seek Jesus, as did the wise men, with all our hearts, for he has said: "They that seek me early shall find me."

"THE LOVE-CONTROLLED LIFE."

Dear Leaguers: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God." Please let this short, yet richly-laden quotation from the third chapter of I John be an incentive to you to read through the eighteenth verse.

When I read those words, a true incident of recent date came to mind. In one of the cities of our fair State lives a Christian woman of considerable wealth. She has adopted a poor boy. Someone, on hearing this, exclaimed: "What a fortunate lad!" Indeed, he is fortunate. The luxuries of a cultured home and the advantages of moral and intellectual development are his. That kind woman may love the boy, but we know that God loves us, since He calls us His sons and daughters, and makes us "Joint heirs" with Jesus Christ of the kingdom of heaven.

Yes, I agree with you—this earth is a beautiful home, a desirable home, an attractive home, but we cannot remain here always. Jesus said, "In my Father's house are many mansions" * * "I go to prepare a place for you." See how glorious is the New Jerusalem! How strong its battlements! How shining its streets! How like Parian marble its palaces! How radiant its light, for Jesus is the "Light thereof." Does not the heavenly home transcend the earthly in glory? As much so as does the rising orb of day the most remote star of evening.

"We shall see him as he is." Oh, Leaguers, that we might always possess the purity that is necessary if we would see him at all! We throw open the windows and doors of our houses when we want the sunshine and fresh air to purify and sweeten them. Let us throw open the windows of our souls that the sunshine of God's love may brighten them and that heavenly breezes of grace and purity may permeate them. Look then, within the soul and behold! A gentle guest is there. 'Tis the patient stranger who has stood at thy heart's door so long, entreating entrance. So long as purity abides in thy heart, the Christ will abide there also. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

If we would be children of the most high we must "love one another," "God is love" and he will not look on lack of love in us with any degree of allowance. One way in which we may show our love for others is by being charitable. Gentle Leaguer, do you administer to the needy? Do you turn an attentive ear to the hungry beggar at your door? Do you give, not letting your left hand know what your right hand doeth?" Then take these words of the Savior as belonging to you, "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy."

Thoughtfulness of others! self-abnegation! unselfishness! They count for so much in this world of ours. The noble John Ruskin gave largely of his fortune to better the condition of the poor. Misunderstood by relatives and friends, he still adhered to his purpose to live beneficently. In every age, philantropists both great and small—high and low—have made the world richer by their unselfish ministrations. But, dear ones, I know you will go with me in thought, to the days of the "lowly Nazarene." "He went about doing good." At the last supper, he washed his deciples' feet teaching humanity. Thrice said he to Peter, "Feed my sheep." Administering the "Bread of Life" to dying humanity. He said, "Little children love one another." The Redeemer crowned all by "giving his life, a ransom for many."

I shall close by quoting two lines from one of Tennyson's lovely poems. Reflect upon their meaning for they unfold a great moral truth:

"Love took up the harp of life, and smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the chord of self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight."

"GENERAL" FOR 25 CENTS.

The Nashville, Chattanooga and St Louis railway is distributing a very beautiful colored lithograph, 18x25 inches, of the famous engine "General," which is now on exhibition in the Union Depot, Chattanooga, Tenn. The picture is ready for framing, and will be mailed to any address for twenty five cents. The "General" was captured by the Andrews' Raiders at Big Shanty (now Kennesaw), Ga., on the Western and Atlantic railroad, April 12, 1862, and was recaptured by Conductor W. A. Fuller, Anthony Murphy and others, near Ringgold, Ga., after an exciting chase of about ninety miles. It was one of the most thrilling exploits of the Civil War. The object of the raid was to burn the bridges on the Western and Atlantic railroad, and cut off the Confederate Army from its base of supplies. A booklet, "The Story of the General," will be sent free upon application.

Increase Your COTTON Yields Per Acre — Values Above Par

It is a well known fact that cotton, or any other crop, produced with Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers will bring the highest possible price on the market. Make healthy, strong, well-developed, early cotton, with full grown bolls on the fruit limbs at the base as well as all the way up to the very top and tip ends of the branches of the cotton plants, by liberally using

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers.

They contain all the materials necessary to supply to your land the elements which have been taken from it by repeated cultivation year after year. These fertilizers will greatly "increase your yields per acre." Accept no substitute from your dealer.

Expert Medical Advice Free to The Sick.

DR. HATHAWAY
Recognized as the Oldest Established and Most Reliable Specialist.

No matter where you go, you could find no physician or specialist more competent to advise or to treat you, if you have a chronic disease, than Dr. Hathaway of Atlanta; and too, he is offering to counsel and advise every sufferer free of charge. If you have any disease of a chronic nature, such as Kidney or Bladder Disease, Strictnre, Rheumatism, Varicocele, Skin Disease, Nervous Debility, Catarrh of the different organs, Stomach, Bowel and Liver Complaints, diseases peculiar to women, etc., you should at once write and take advantage of this offer. In addition, you will be sent a valuable booklet on your disease. Dr. Hathaway is recognized as the most successful specialist in the South today, and the secret of his success lies in the fact that he has always dealt with his patients in an honest, straightforward manner, promising them nothing that he could not fulfill and by curing their disease. His charges are not extraordinarily high, but are reasonable, certainly no more than you would be willing to pay for successful treatment of your case. All correspondence strictly confidential. SECOND CHURCH, COLUMBUS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: At the last session of the North Mississippi Conference I was read out for Second Church. Knowing the hard work to be done here and the conditions to be met, I shuddered at first, but we are now on the ground and trying to grasp the situation. We were cordially received, a magnificent dinner awaiting us, and the pantry filled with everything necessary for housekeeping, and still the good things come, after a week's stay, almost. We have had a good beginning. Three additions to the church the first Sunday. We believe there is a bright future for Second Church. The parsonage is a very nice home, indeed.

The most difficult problem which confronts us is a $1,100 debt on the church and parsonage, but if hustling will clear the debt, we will wipe it out. We will do our best to free the church and parsonage of debt.

Pray for us that we may have a great year. Yours in the work,

ROBT. A. CLARK.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas Brother and Sister J. D. McWhorter have labored so faithfully and acceptably for the past three years, not only in their great work for the Methodist Church, but also so harmoniously with all Christians in and around Belzona, Miss., proving themselves so eminently useful and helpful to all citizens; and whereas they have been assigned to another field of labor; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is with much reluctance that the Methodists, Christians and all citizens consent to part with such Christian characters; that we commend Brother and Sister McWhorter to their new field of work; that, in parting with them, be assured that the prayers of all Christians will be given for them.

Further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Methodist Church, and that copies of these resolutions be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Belzoni News-Enterprise for publication.

H. A. SORRELS, Steward,
T. E. MORTIMER, Deacon,
R. F. LANGSTON, Citizen,
Belzoni, Miss. Committee.

GENERAL NEWS.

Advices from Braz.. are to the effect that the new tariff just put in force bears heavily upon imports into that country from the United States. It bears with greatest severity on flour and grain of all kinds.

The value of property in Mississippi increased in seventeen years from nearly $134,000,000 to more than $284,000,000.

The Panama Commission, in session at Washington, has authorized Engineer Stevens to employ 1,000 men from the north of Spain in construction work. They have proved to be very satisfactory laborers on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The case of James B. Howard, convicted of assassinating Governor Goebel, of Kentucky, five years ago, and sentenced to imprisonment for life, and appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, has been affirmed. He was tried three times in the lower court.

There seems to be no lack of money in New York. On the first of the year $160,000,000 were disbursed in interest and dividends. Divided equally, that amount would have given every man, woman and child in the city about $53.

The election of Mr. Wadsworth as Speaker of the New York House of Representatives sounds the deathknell of another boss. If Mr. Platt could be gotten out of the way, the State would be fairly free from boss rule.

Mr. McClellan's breaking away from the domination of Tammany Hall has heartened the Democrats considerably. It has made a "presidential possibility" in the next great canvass. Tammany handicaps any man it undertakes to rule.

Since the trial of Midshipman Merriwether for fighting it has become known that "hazing" at Annapolis is nothing unusual. Two trials for the offense have been held, and others are likely to lose their places in the Navy.

A bill is before the Legislature of Mississippi defining the term "lobbyist," and requiring all persons acting in such capacity to register his credentials with the Clerk of the House, and to do all his talking to representatives in open committee. Whether such a drastic measure, with the penalty attached, can pass remains to be seen.

The Mississippi Legislature convened in extra session on the 2d day of January. Matters of great interest will be considered, among them the question of statutory prohibition.

All the great railroads of the country having decided to abolish the free-pass system, which will force congressmen to pay their way out of the mileage furnished by the Government, it is said Congress will retaliate by cutting down the Government appropriation for carrying the mails.

There is still great trouble in Russia, but the Government is gradually getting control of the situation, and will doubtless quiet the rioters and revolutionists for a while. But reforms are obliged to come, the full extent of which cannot be determined until the meeting of the representative body soon to take place.

The Governor's message to the Legislature of Mississippi was almost as long as President Roosevelt's was to the United States Congress. One hour and thirty minutes were consumed in the reading.

FIFTY THOUSAND STRONG.

The St. Nicholas League competitions are just six years old this January. From the first the skill and talent shown in the short stories, poems, drawings and photographic work, submitted by the League members, surprised everyone. About two thousand girls and boys to-day are wearing gold and silver badges, awarded in recognition of the excellence of their endeavors, while progressive good work has been recognized by some two hundred awards in cash. How really good the work and the training are is proved by the fact that many graduates of the League to-day are among the progressive magazine writers and illustrators of the country.

The St. Nicholas League membership now is close to fifty thousand, with representatives in every nation of the world.

AN EXTRA GOOD CALENDAR.

Some people think the calendar crop has fallen off in recent years. However, that may be, we are getting our full assortment.

The one published by N. W. Ayer & Son, the "Keeping Everlastingly At It" Advertising Agents of Philadelphia is equal to the best and superior to many. For the purposes of a business calendar, nothing we know of equals it, yet as a specimen of the printer's arè, it takes highest rank, and will harmonize with the finest office furnishings and decorations.

The epigrams printed in the blank spaces will interest those who are interested in advertising, and that means an increased number every year. They are good reading and furnish a hint as to the why of the success of this firm and its clients.

The publishers have isued this calendar for many years and state it as their experience that when a business man has lived with it for a year, he is unwilling to do without it. The edition is limited; while they last twenty-five cents sent to N. W. Ayer & Son, will bring one.

Among the learned professors interviewed in New Orleans at the recent session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science on the question of football was Dr. L. C. Glenn of Vanderbilt University. Dr. Glenn said he thought that, "in a general way the pendulum had swung too far in college athletics and that this fact was slowly being recognized. I look for a reaction against the present form of athletics. At present the idea seems mainly to win games at the expense of the general culture of the men of the institution. The coaches will take men only who are physically fit in every respect and refuse a man who is not. Yet it is these latter men who need the training far more than their brothers on the teams. Again, some of the men are overtrained in order to win a certain game and the effect is disastrous to them for the rest of their lives. Of course I know that these are only in exceptional cases, but the idea of taking a boy and putting him through a course of training as one would a race horse, simply in order that he might win an athletic 'event,' is to my mind a violation of the basic idea of sport and I think that in time a modified form of intercollegiate athletics will take the place of that now in vogue. What will it be? Well, I suppose that there will be an increase of the general physical training among the students and not so much individual overtraining."

The great insurance companies of the United States, located in New York, must have had some very costly and particular work they wished to have done, else they were exposed to great danger from ill-advised legislation. Seven of them united in employing a lobbyist and supplied him with all the money needed, and he was constantly on the lookout. From 1899 to 1905 he had placed in his hands $720,000. This money was used by him in employing "retainers" and securing articles in newspapers in advocacy of views favorable to the companies. Recent investigations have brought out these facts and much more not at all favorable to the companies. In addition to the payment of salaries from $150,000 a year down to $14,000, the companies have been large contributors to State and national campaigns, thus using money belonging to policyholders to "feather the nests" of officers and to uphold a political party—a party opposed in its principles to the convictions of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of their patrons. Whether recent investigations will do any good ultimately remains to be seen.

[illegible] invention was in an[illegible] the last week. Many [illegible] present and much interest shown in [illegible] that we must [illegible] together. The principal [illegible] is the protection [illegible] the country from the [illegible] speculators, who have for a [illegible] manipulated the markets as to keep [illegible] the price of cotton—sometimes below a [illegible] rate. Twelve months ago the Association [illegible]anized and resolved on a reduction of [illegible] and thereby prevent over-production. [illegible] this association was joined by a vast [illegible] reduction of acreage, [illegible] many valuable agricultural additions, resulting [illegible] short crop. It brought [illegible] the beginning of the season. The [illegible] rushed to market, and the [illegible] held up with prospects of going [illegible]. The association desires the farmers to [illegible] for 15 cents. The greatest enemy of [illegible] production is the speculator—the man [illegible] deals in futures. Could he be eliminated, [illegible] only would the producer have a better show [illegible] in the market, but fewer young men and merchants would take chances and meet disaster.

[illegible] a glance seems to characterize every department of the Panama Canal administration. The higher officers are paid exhorbitant salaries. Some of them, in addition to stated salaries, are paid an additional sum—$15 per day—for every day they spend in actual work. And the purchasing agent, if report is true, is going it with a high hand. A recent shipment, according to a New York dispatch, as quoted by the Commoner, contained the following items: "Thirty-six work tables for ladies; 100 dozen high, best quality, latest style gentlemen's colors; 100 dozen turn down, latest style gentlemen's collars, best; 100 dozen various styles best quality, gentlemen's collars; six dozen best pocket handkerchiefs for gentlemen; 1,000 pairs best tan sewed shoes for gentlemen and 1,000 pairs best colored leather shoes; 1,000 gentlemen's best suit cases; quantity of Rogers' best quality table cutlery, quadruple silver plated; dessert, table and silver spoons of best quality; case of 5 o'clock tea sets; 100 umbrellas at $5 each; 100 shaving sets; 100 razors; twenty dozen ladies' night robes; twenty dozen dress shirts." The purchasing agent, when questioned on the subject, said: "There is nothing in the world you can suggest which we have not sent to Panama," "his face lighting up with a smile of proud satisfaction." All these things were bought with public money and the agent undertook to justify the expenditure on the ground that the things bought were necessities. Does anybody wonder that it is going to cost hundreds of millions of dollars to dig the canal?

On the cotton situation we copy the following editorial from the Daily Picayune: "Those people who talked of a crop less than 10,000,000 bales must now revise their ideas. As small as the crop is, the amount of their estimate has already been ginned even without any account being taken of linters, but even assuming that the crop is as large as liberal estimates now place it, it will leave an insufficient supply. If it is still difficult to accurately gauge the size of the crop, it is even more difficult to predict the future course of prices. The statistical position seems to favor a further advance, despite the fact that prices are even now much above what was considered a fancy figure some years ago. All will depend upon what spinners determine to do. They will certainly keep on buying as long as there remains a profit in sight on their output of yarns and cloth, but at just what point it will cease to be profitable to make further purchases of raw material is the unknown quantity. Whether prices advance or not, however, there certainly appears no reason to fear a decline of any consequence. At the present prices for cloth the raw material is not being held at prohibitive figures. As long as spinners believe there is a prospect of lower prices they will hold off, but once convinced that prices have touched bottom and promise to rule steady or advance, they will purchase to the extent of their needs as long as [illegible] allowed, even during the holidays, and even Christmas and New Year's day are [illegible] for the loss. The [illegible] American [illegible] the future will be greater than ever, and will lay 650 three-ounce white (or dark brown) eggs in two years or Uncle Sam will get after her with a hatchet and transform her into fricassee or potpie. But even then she will be welcome as usual."

PASTORAL LETTER.

To the Preachers and Members of the M. E. Church, South, in the Arcadia District, Louisiana Conference:

Dear Brethren: In regard to the work of the Church in the bounds of your district for the year just closed, and the prospects that greet us for the incoming year, I write you.

Some of us come to the close of the year with this idea dominant in our song of thanksgiving, that it was gone; hence we were and are glad. But there are many more things that it brought, for which we ought to give more ardent thanks. That there were many and various disadvantages I allow; that the peculiar combination will occur again soon I do not believe. Discouragement is a mood that forestalls success. "Let the dead past go to the funeral of its hopes: as for us forward is the word and the duty of the hour." The characteristic of faith is resiliency; the greater depth into which adversity bears it down is but the prophecy of the corresponding height to which it will be carried when breaks upon it the smile of the Lord.

The work done by us this past year is only a faint outline of what we can and ought to do when God smiles upon the harvest.

For the results that were achieved this past year I feel that most is due the body of faithful and loyal preachers and the loyal responsiveness of the body of the Church.

To the following resume of the work I call your attention. Surely it is a time in which we, like those of old, may "Thank God" and take courage.

In the matter of the material support it is shown that for money expended for all purposes we raised during 1905 a little over $3,000 more than during 1904." Surely that is praiseworthy as to our people and thankworthy as to God.

In regard to the building up of the Church it is shown that we report an increase of eight Sunday schools, forty-three teachers and 1,135 more scholars than in 1904.

In the face of the announcement that there was a slight decrease in membership in the Conference if is gratifying to know that we have had a net increase of 281.

Infants baptized 66, an increase of 50 over last year.

I hope we will continue to give this Gospel privilige and duty its proper attention until we will cease to report any adult baptisms from our people. Since the anti-paedos have begun the practice, it is too late for paedos to abandon their duty and obligation to their children, their Church and their God.

Surely there is food for thought in the fact that the greatest forward work in the district during the past year touched the young life. Here is the only positively promising field to-day. Look out for the children. Let's swell the number in our Sunday schools, until from being 161 less than half the membership of the Church, it shall at least equal it. The Church and the people of it have allowed the world, the flesh and the devil to stand guard over the cradle of its hopes long enough. Let there be begun throughout the district a campaign by preachers, Sunday school superintendents and parents, by far the most important instrument in this great work, that will put it on the plane upon which it rightly belongs. Arrangements are being made for a Sunday School Institute to be held in Ruston some time in March. Let every Sunday school send its best workers as representatives to this institute and let not any preacher fail to attend unless he is sick abed or dead. Those will be considered excuses for absence. The institute will be conducted by Dr. Hamil, assisted by competent helpers.

Now as to the "parting word." There never was such an opportunity for us in North Louisiana. Intelligence is spreading, and that all the time and all wheres means an open door through which the Methodists can go, and do go. Let's go up and take the land, for surely God is with us. Last year under the Providence of God I was associated with you as Presiding Elder; by the same I am this year to continue that relation. I have never in my life been associated with a more brotherly and loving set of men, some of them old enough to be my father, one of them he, they having given me their unqualified support and following. If there was other than that feeling on either side I have not been made aware of it. We get some new men into the district this year and I feel that the best wish I can make for myself is that we all this year may enjoy the same spirit of fellowship as was so prevalent and patent last.

All that God demands is a willing mind; this is our contribution—the rest is God's.

Then let us to work in the name of the Lord.

Your pastor. BRISCOE CARTER.

Arcadia, La., Jan. 12, 1906.

HOME FOR SUPERANNUATES.

The presiding elder and preachers of the Durant District, North Mississippi Conference, formulated plans last year for procuring a home for superannuated preachers. We hope to complete and execute those plans this year. Brother E. H. Howell, of Bowling Green, Miss., is Secretary and Treasurer. Those who have subscribed to this fund will please send money to him at once. We would like to purchase or build a home in the near future. We will be grateful for any contributions, large or small.

Fraternally, EUGENE JOHNSON.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

The "scattering remarks" with which our last Conference session was closed were uncommonly surprising. There were an unlucky number—thirteen—of charges to be supplied and the new places took the matter quite seriously. The hill country district had not acquired merit sufficient to prevent its being absorbed. It was a great shock to the inconsiderate, who wished to retain old landmarks.

After two years' earnest work on the Red Banks Circuit Rev. James Porter is changed to Sturgis. Their many friends hope the change will benefit Mrs. Porter's health. He is succeeded by Rev. R. M. Davis, who seems in good health, preaching his choice sermons to scant country congregations. Brother Davis travels from Byhalia, making that his home.

The people of Holly Springs declare themselves "so thankful" that their pastor was returned for the fourth year and account the church to be in good shape under his care.

Two well known laymen of North Mississippi, Mr. W. S. Blackburn and Mr. W. A. Young, have moved from their old neighborhoods to make new homes in Tennessee. The community and church will feel keenly the loss of their influence, counsel and help.

Miss Viola Blackburn is still in Mexico. She learned much of that way of life from Dr. G. B. Winton, who called her a practical worker, and her soul seems to be just as much in her loved employ as ever.

A Nashville Advocate correspondent describes the "Sunday house" built by the people surrounding Fredericksburg, Tex., and used by them when they come to town—to church or to trade. They have made themselves independent of the lack of comforts found outside of saloons—probably being peculiar. A wise old Christian says one's own bread, even the plainest, is better than soiled cake held out by unclean hands.

The Woman's Home Mission Society wants help for the proposed Mississippi Methodist Hospital, suggesting that probably the solicitor of funds sometimes sacrifices as much to a cause as the giver. The movement has momentum enough to carry it through and if we do not build God has people who will, and we simply lose the opportunity for our denomination. Prayer, faith and love—Protestant Christian love—can do abundantly more than we think. Love provides a home to care for its own afflicted ones, which is eminently proper. X.

NOTES FROM GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

Greenville Station has increased the pastor's salary to $1,500. Brother Countiss has made a most favorable impression.

Brother Roper is happy at Arcola and Hollondale. His stewards have fixed his salary at $1,200, and the work in all departments is prospering.

Leland has begun its career as a station with flattering prospects. Brother McKeown's salary has been fixed at $1,000, and he will soon be domiciled in a $2,500 parsonage.

Dr. Price has the confidence and high esteem of the Rosedale people. The salary was made $1,000, as heretofore. This charge is planning to build a new parsonage.

The first Quarterly Conference at Benoit was a good one. Brother Brooks is popular with his people. Last summer, when the quarantine was on, he turned carpenter, and, with his own hand, greatly improved our parsonage property.

Brother Hickman is cheerful at Gunnison. He was on the train the other day with a smile on his face and Dr. Cuthbert Hall's book in his hand. No doubt he will succeed in his new field.

As usual, Brother Lagrone is busy. Already he has had four accessions to the church, and has sent in twenty new subscribers to the New Orleans Advocate. It is to be hoped that every pastor will likewise get up a club of subscribers to our Conference organ.

All the preachers are in place, and not a single discordant note has been heard from any quarter. Despite the temporary depression consequent upon the crop failure of last year, our people are happy, hopeful and expectant of success in our church work. "RAMBLER."

Thousands of people know perfectly well that a carbon oil lamp is the best light to read by, if it is in order.

It is not in order unless you have the right chimney for it, and that is a MACBETH.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To the Women of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference:

Dear Sisters: We are nearing the close of another fiscal year. Let us bestir ourselves and use every effort to make good our pledges. All the signs point to a lagging behind, a deficiency in the work mapped out by our efficient President and her cabinet of advisers. There have been hindrances—yellow fever, quarantine and individual cases of protracted illness. Let these be in extenuation of our slowness, but let them not defeat us utterly.

If the Treasurer of every auxiliary will exert herself, between this and the closing of the fiscal year, to stimulate individual members to their largest capacity for giving, we may, and should, realize our $1,500 for scolarship in Scarrit Bible and Training School and our $1,000 pledge for other purposes.

We promised to raise up for the help of the Lord against the mighty 800 new members, strong to do battle, and valiant. Are we coming up with the promised number? Do not let us fall short of accomplishing the good which our hearts have anticipated! Let us go out into the highways and gather in the laborers, for "the fields are white to the harvest." Let each woman see how many members she can gain by her individual efforts, using always tact, persuasiveness and love with which to constrain others.

When, in sitting by our comfortable firesides, we dread to go out to attend to the small claims of our auxiliary, let us remember our first President, Mrs. Juliana Hayes, who, at the age of 60, became a pioneer in woman's work for woman. She traveled almost incessantly, speaking every day to untried ears about woman in Foreign Missions.

The way is well worn for us; we are not asked to go out in untrod paths, beset alike by foes without and fears within. Let us take heart of grace, remembering her zeal, unselfishness, indefatigable energy and enthusiastic love for our brethren sisters. Yours, in His name,

JULIA JANE WALKER.

In the glorious likeness of Christ thou wilt be made rich and find all the solace and sweetness in the world.—John Tauler.

"THE TOBACCO HABIT."

Dear Dr. Boswell: Your correspondent in THE ADVOCATE, of Jan. 4, by no means quoted all that Dr. Clarke said about the tobacco habit; neither was he quoted in connection. Clarke not only said that the habit is "infamous," "scandalous," "sinful," "impious," "disgraceful," "wasteful," etc., but he also said that any preacher who uses it "deserves nothing but contempt," and even damnation. Anybody ought to know that such dogmatic assertions are fanatical and entirely too severe.

I do not advise anybody to use the weed, yet I am certain many good Christians use it without physical or moral detriment.

I admit the habit is frequently abused, but because some go too far, others may not. Anything to excess is sinful. Many are cleanly and moderate in the use and generally are careful where they spit. Some, though, are better marksmen than others.

Tobacco doesn't smell a bit worse than onions or garlic. Many pious folk eat onions, which are offensive to others. Ordinarily, and in moderation, tobacco is no more harmful than coffee, pork or cheese. These have injured more people than tobacco, and why not pronounce them infamous, disgraceful and damnable?

The average laboring man, with his companionable "quid," works with a contentment that is surprising. Take his tobacco from him and he will do what Brother Blank does—he will chew toothpicks, "liquish," gum, paper or something companionable and requiring as much wasteful energy. It doesn't look a bit more pious to see-saw in church or elsewhere on a "quid" of gum than a piece of natural leaf.

Moreover, some preachers and others who condemn the tobacco habit will stick their gum over the mantel or on some lintel, and, after it gets full of dust, will pull it off and chew it again. A nickle's worth will last for weeks! Why not anathematize all gum chewers? Now, the money that is spent for gum, onions, garlic, pork, coffee, pickles and cheese "would support several missionaries!"

This scribe doubts that the money spent for tobacco is as "wasteful" as some affirm. (Thousands who do not use it will spend the same amount of money for something just as "unnecessary," and to satisfy some bent or habit which the "tobacco worm" may not have.) As a general thing the man who uses the "fragrant weed," even in moderation, does not possess the ravenous appetite of the man who does not use it. (Neither is he so uncomfortably fat.) The amount of money spent for tobacco by the consumer is spent by the non-consumer for additional hog and hominy. This is the writer's observation and experience when he does and does not use the weed.

I could argue its several medicinal properties and show also what is injurious to one man is not necessarily hurtful to another, but space will not permit. I simply enter a demurrer against the "ipse dixit" of some who are as intemperate in the use of coffee, pork and language as others are in the use of the pipe.

What Brother Blank would have to say in many States where every dollar that is given to the church is made by the culture of tobacco is difficult to conceive. Were he to refuse contributions he would go without support! Doubtless many brethren of the church who raise it are as liberal and pious as men in Mississippi.

Our good sisters should take a reasonable view of the habit, because they owe their introduction into this land of "liberty" to tobacco. Many do, for they feel perfectly "free" to dip. (Dupto.)

Moreover, the smoke from a cigar in season may drive away Mrs. Stegomyia and prevent a case of yellow fever. There may be some truth in the statement that the tobacco habit is condemned by some simply because they are nauseated by the taste thereof. But others are not nauseated!

In the last two years science has extracted all the "bad" qualities out of tobacco without destroying the taste. It may soon be on the market in such packages. Perhaps Brother Blank is sorry about this, for he will have to revise his sermons! May be he can now smoke or chew without compunction of conscience!

If tobacco is really sinful, let the reformers get close behind the merchants who sell it and the farmers who grow it and quit spending all their energy on the "scapegoat" preacher. For the Lord's sake, give him a little rest! If it is wrong for a preacher to use it, it is wrong for a layman to use it, sell it or grow it, and—"consistency, thou art a jewel!"

I overlooked referreing to the snuff-box, but if good, amiable "grandma" can get any "comfort" out of it in her old age as she sits neglected in the corner, darning the stockings and thinking over the long ago, I will be the last to consign her to torment, because of her harmless habit.

A CIRCUIT RIDER.

MERIDIAN MALE COLLEGE.

On Jan. 4, 1906, 12 o'clock at night, the Meridian Male College buildings were destroyed by fire, including the main building, with its furniture, office, library, chapel, bedroom, dining-room, kitchen, water works and fixtures. The fire originated in the kitchen from a defective flue. Every student escaped and no one was hurt, except a few being bruised.

The loss was about $20,000, and only one-fourth insured. The only building that was saved was Wesley Hall, erected last summer. This building contains all the recitation rooms, and quite a number of bedrooms. Rooms are secured at present for students in residences close by. The large camp meeting tabernacle that is on the campus has been transformed into a temporary dining-room, kitchen, preparatory room, etc., and will be comfortable temporary quarters. The work continues as usual.

Work has already been started on a brick kiln on the campus to burn brick for a new building, to be ready by next September. Rough lumber for this brick building is already on the ground, the plans are drawn, and all that is lacking is the money. The college greatly needs some help from its friends and those interested in Christian education for young men. I have no financial interest in this college, but I am close to it, and know of the great work it is doing. While I am largely in debt myself, and have never recovered from our great loss from fire in 1903, I am helping this college financially in its time of greatest need. Will you not help also?

PULL YOUR OWN OAR—AND TRUST!

Spurgeon was permitted to preach the precious Gospel to more souls than any minister since Christianity was born. His printed discourses have been issued by the millions and he received over 10,000 converts into his "Tabernacle" church. Some humble, hard-toiling pastor reads these wonderful accounts of success achieved by a single man and throws down the narrative in a sort of envious despair. He feels as if he were less than nobody—a mere cumberer of the ground. When he compares the small results of his laborious ministry with those achieved by a Spurgeon or a Moody, he seems like a boy in a little rowboat alongside of a colossal Cunarder. These foolish feelings disturb his mind until he hears his blessed Master say to him, in a tone of loving rebuke, "What is all that to thee? Follow thou me." A sense of shame comes over him, and he sits down to his Bible and his sermon preparation, determined to do his little best, even if his name never travels beyond his own parish, or if he never accomplishes a thousandth part of what Spurgeon achieved. He cornforts himself with the thought that, when Jesus crossed the tempestuous sea of Galilee on a certain night, "there were also with him other little boats"; and he trusts that the eye of the Master is on his tiny skiff as much as on the lordliest argosy in the squadron. So he cheerily picks up the oar of faith and pulls away again, while the waves thump like hammers against the bow of his little boat.

One of the most charming things about those New Testament Christians is, that they understood how to work without worrying. They simply did the duty that came to hand and did not trouble themselves whether anybody noticed them or praised them, or whether any great result should come of their honest endeavors. Mary breaks her costly perfume on her Master's feet without the least idea that all the world should yet hear of the gracious deed of love. Dorcas plies her needle, and Tertius drives his pen as Paul's stenographer, and Phebe goes off to Rome with the Epistle to the Romans in her satchel, and none of them know or care that they will ever be heard again. The apostles were wonderfully calm men; they faced duty and endured obloquy, and committed all results to God. If Paul ever worried he never told us of it. He was the one cool man on board of the tempest-tossed corn ship in the hurricane. His assurance to his fellow-Christians was, "The peace of God, which passeth understanding, shall keep your hearts and thoughts in Christ Jesus." This is the deep, inward calm—like the tranquillity which reigns an hundred fathoms down in the Atlantic, while the billows are raging and roaring up on the surface.

We are obliged to pull the oars of duty with our backs to the future; we cannot tell what is before us; we cannot foresee the difficulties always ahead, and it is a mercy that we cannot. It is our business to pull at the oars of prayer and labor and to leave the rudder in the all-wise Helmsman's hands. If we would only mind our work and let Christ's hand hold the tiller, we should be spared many a disgraceful worry and cowardly discouragement. I have always found that when I kept steadily at the work which my Master assigned to me, and took no anxious thoughts about the results, I could work with the most composure of soul and to the best advantage. "There is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus," is a text that has a wide application. If I am in Christ, so is my poor, imperfect work there also; so is every good undertaking that he sets me at; so is my preaching and pastoral labor, and everything that I attempt for the salvation of souls. Spurgeon had no other Master to serve and no other promises to sustain him than the humblest pastor or city missionary has to-day.

Men and movements that have no Christ on board go to the bottom. The rocks are strewed with the wrecks of human schemes and ambitious enterprises; pulpit genius has often ended in splendid failure. Every man, every enterprise, every effort that Jesus takes into his own hands, is insured. Do your best, brother, and trust! We ministers and you Sabbath school teachers, and other servants of Christ, worry too much over the coming or the withholding of revival seasons. We can plow, and we can sow, but we cannot force a single kernel of Gospel seed to come up. Our only duty is to live right on, and toil right on, and pray right on, and leave the early and latter rains to come when God chooses to send them. I never worried about "a revival" yet, and thus hastened its coming by an hour. But often, when I was not even expecting it, the gracious shower came. A true, earnest Christian life has its disappointments and its chastisements; but it has its blessed surprises, also. Heaven will have some glorious surprises for thousands of hard-working, ill-paid Christians who never made any prominent figure in this world. Some of them may sit up alongside of the Wesleys, the Spurgeons and the Moodys.

Modesty is a virtue; but that don't mean the hiding of one talent in a napkin. Some church members seek to excuse themselves from active labors in the Sabbath schools, the prayer rooms, or elsewhere, by the stereotyped apology, "If I were gifted like Mr. A—— or Mrs. B——, I would be as active as they are." The way to attain to large gifts is to use the gifts you have. Give Jesus thy one talent and he may make it two. If you cannot speak fluently in meeting, stammer out what is in thee. I once had an old Christian in my church who could stutter out more in a dozen sentences than some glib exhorter in an hour. Christ judges us according to what we have not. The best work is not done either by the few who have the biggest brains or biggest purses. It is the combined pull of all the oars that propels a church; and it is the combined efforts of all Christ's ministers and members (and not a few powerful Spurgeons and Moodys), that sends forward the kingdom of God. While the Master is at the helm, don't worry or lose courage. Pull with all your might at your own oar—and trust!—Dr. Cuyler, in the Presbyterian.

TREASURES IN LITTLE THINGS.

How much we hear, read and see in these days concerning the piling up of treasures! The daily papers become almost vulgar in their exploiting of the doings and the possessions of our millionaires, as if the greatest thing in the world were the getting together of so many thousands or millions of money by fair means or foul. Well, there is a word of Scripture that should be in the mind of Christian men and women in these days when false standards are attracting so much attention. It is one of the golden passages of the sermon on the mount: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." There are treasures of infinitely greater value than money, or jewels, or lands, and the possession of them is joyous, and the memory of them a benediction. They were in the mind of the one who said:

"Little masteries achieved,
Little wants with care relieved,
Little words in love expressed,
Little wrongs at once confessed,
Little graces meekly worn,
Little slights with patience borne,
These are treasures that shall rise
Far beyond the shining skies."

In view of the fact that the leading topic of our last letter was given to the "child labor" question, we withhold other matter prepared for publication in order that the space may be devoted to the memorial submitted by the women of the Mississippi Conference to the Legislature, now in session, and urging the passage of a law prohibiting the employment of children in mills and factories under a certain age.

The document is clear, concise and forceful, presenting the matter to the public as seen in the light of day, with reasons good and sufficient, and we pray that God will put it into the hearts of our representative men to see this law passed.

The children of this generation are the fathers and mothers of the next. How important is it, then, that they should be endowed with physical strength, as well as mental capacity and moral power.

MRS. E. J. HARRIS,
Supt. Press Dept., Mississippi Conference.

MEMORIAL

To the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, January Session, 1906:

We, the Women's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference, beg to submit a memorial to your honorable body toughing the question of child labor in our State.

It is conceded that up to the last few years the regulation of child labor in our State did not disturb the public, because of the few industries in our State employing that kind of labor; but the recent development of manufactories in Mississippi, where child labor can be, and is, profitably employed, demands that the Legislature take the matter in hand and regulate the same in accordance with the requirements of our high civilization and enlightened Christianity.

All concur in the opinion that all free governments depend in the last analysis upon the mental, moral and physical development of the men and women of each generation for its strength at home and its honor and character abroad.

The common law of physical life requires outdoor sport for children, if we hope for them to develop into the competent and efficient men and women which our complex and ever-expanding and advancing progress demands.

We contend that it is inconceivable that a child placed in the field of steady drudgery from its early years and confined in-doors during the long labor hours of our factories can possibly be anything but an undeveloped physical, mental and moral degenerate, unable, unwilling and incompetent to grapple with the great question of a high citizenship, and consequently a menace to our free institutions.

It is not conceded that parents should not have the benefit of the labor of their children. It is not suggested that the children be brought up in idleness, but it is stoutly contended that the children should be excluded from all vocations that require continuous labor and continuous confinement during the tender years of their development.

It is well known to the learned gentlemen composing your honorable body that this question was brought up in the English Parliament several years since, and was exhaustively discussed by the ablest men of that magnificent body, there being only the one question of contention, and that the age at which the law should arbitrarily fix the limit.

At this time the question of legal regulation is not a debatable question throughout the manufacturing centers of Christendom, but is only one of age.

We take it that so competent a body as the Legislature of this State will not be at a loss to fix an age limit, and we, therefore, leave the matter open; but we do most respectively insist that this most important and pressing question find legal and definite standing in the Statutes of our State. Respectfully submitted.

MRS. C. W. COCHRAN, Chm.

LETTER FROM GILDEROY

For the first time in a ministry of forty years I spent thirty-five days out of my pastoral charge. We (wife and I) had a great time among our children and with some lifelong friends. We found the children and grandchildren well and cheerful and all moving along finely and all true to God and the Methodist Church. This gave us great joy.

We spent the last week in the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., with Rev. S. D. Long, D.D., a Mississippi boy, now Presiding Elder of that district. His mother, whom I had known for fifty-four years, was with him. We lived life over again. As we went up to Chattanooga we stopped off for the night at Marietta, Ga., so I could see that North Georgia country over every mile of which I had gone on foot during the war. After forty-two years I wanted to see how the country looked. The hills and the mountains had not changed, but the towns had grown out of my knowledge. We spent one day on top of Lookout Mountain "viewing the landscape o'er." The view was inspiring. We took in the grounds where the battle above the clouds was fought. There is large poetic license in this name for that engagement. I stood on Missionary Ridge and watched the night fighting in November, 1863. The Federals call it Mission Ridge and we call it Missionary Ridge. We got away from that Ridge in a great hurry. We had to go. Brother Long got a carriage and with our wives we spent one whole day driving over the Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge battle grounds. I could readily locate many of the places where we fought, charged or retreated. The Kelly Field and Snodgrass Hill, where the Federals made their stubborn and final stand in the battle of Chickamauga, look much as they did forty-two years ago. Acres of dead men have given place to many magnificent monuments. When I saw the Kelly Field last one might have stepped on every square yard of it and on a dead man every time. It was a bloody field. Much of the fighting was hand to hand. Snodgrass Hill was taken and retaken several times by each side. This meant much bloody work. The losses were fearful on both sides.

This battle field is a lovely park now, with beautiful roads in all directions and markers everywhere indicating the positions of the troops on both sides and the course of the battle during the two days. Splendid and costly monuments commemorate the heroic courage of the Federal troops and dead on that bloody field. Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Texas, South and North Carolina, Virginia, Florida and Arkansas have all erected monuments to the memory of their sons. Mississippi, the best of all the Southern States, has put up no stone to the memory of her heroic sons who fought and bled and died in that titanic struggle. This filled me with sorrow and with shame. The sons and grandsons of Mississippians, to the thousandth generation, will appreciate the heroism of their ancestors who performed such deeds of daring on this and other bloody battle fields. The expense is nothing in comparison with the spirit engendered. Honor paid to heroes begets a spirit of heroism. I hope Mississippi will see to it that the memory of her brave sons is perpetuated in stone or in brass. Coming generations will look for it and will expect it of us. It ought to be done.

Chattanooga has spread out in all directions. The valleys are filled with houses for many miles. The hills furnish room for homes. Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain are studded with palatial residences. The city is growing.

Brother Long would not let me off till after Sunday. I must preach in the morning at Centenary and at night at St. Elmo, his home church. This I did as best I could. It was an inspiring audience at Centenary in the morning. The sermon was followed by the Lord's Supper. That church has more than 1,000 members. What a tax upon a pastor's heart and time. What an opportunity to do a work for God!

They call all preachers "Doctor" about these large cities. I prefer to be called brother. No honorary degree has been conferred on me. I am not entitled to any degree. I do not know enough, nor have I done enough to deserve it. It would be a weight and not a wing to me. If the title becomes common then there is no mark of honor in it. I have no objection to it when legitimately conferred and worthily worn. Brother Long is rightfully called Doctor, and so is one other preacher in his district, I believe. The others are doctors by a figure of speech. The people expect more of a doctor than they do of a brother. Some few preachers I have known speak of themselves as Dr. Smith. They have Rev. and D.D. printed on their stationery—prefixes and suffixes to nauseate. This does not comport well with the character and work of a Christian minister. Allow no man to call you doctor unless some school has thought you worthy of it and has conferred some doctor degree upon you. Then wear it modestly. Do not make it prominent in public places. You will not be any better man nor stronger preacher after being doctored than you were before. The degree will not impart character or strength. It serves as a tonic to the vanity of some small men. Vanity does not tend to growth in grace.

Yours,
GILDEROY.

Jan. 11, 1906.

I do not know when or how it may please God to give you the quiet of mind that you need, but I tell you that I believe it is to be had; and in the meantime you must go on doing your work, trusting God even for this.—George McDonald.

The Church has up to this time spent much more energy in trying to teach men how to become good children than in teaching children how to become good men.—Dr. James Atkins.

The Home Circle.

THE MUSIC HE LIKED.

"I always thought I was fond of music," said Farmer Greene, "but since I visited Matilda in Boston I've had my doubts about it. I hadn't been there a day before Matilda she says to me, 'Now, father, we're goin' to have a musical, and I do hope you'll enjoy it.'

"'Of course, I shall,' says I. 'You know how fond I am of them famous old Scotch songs you used to sing, and how I'm always ready to jine in when anybody strikes up "Coronation."'

"'Well, this will be the best music you ever listened to,' says Matilda, and my mouth watered to hear it.

"The night of the concert you ought to ha' seen the folks pour in, all silks and satins and flowers. Matilda wore, well, I don't rightly know what, but I think 'twas silk and lace. Pretty soon we all got quieted down, and then a German, with long hair and a great bushy beard, sat down to the piano and began to play. My, how he did bang the keys! There was thunder down in the bass, and tinklin' cymbals up in the treble.

"The lady that sat side of me whispered when there was a minute's stop, 'Do you distinguish the different motives?'

"'My, no,' says I. 'I don't see what anybody's motive could be for workin' so hard to make a noise.'

"Then she smiled behind her fan, but I don't know what at, whether 'twas the music or me.

"When the piece stopped everybody hummed and whispered to each other how lovely 'twas, and a good many told the German how much obliged they were. I didn't say a word.

"Then a tall woman, all fixed up with silks and furbelows, sang a piece that almost made my hair stand on end, it went so high and had so many ups and downs in it. She was mighty smart; anybody could see that, but somehow I didn't fancy that kind of singin'. It made me uneasy. When she was climbin' up to her high notes I wondered if she'd ever get there; and when she dropped down again I wanted to say: 'Now, you've got through it safe once, don't try it again.'

"Well, pretty soon Matilda came round to me and whispered, 'Father, how do you like it?'

"'I don't care much for it,' says I. 'It's a little too much like frosted cake when you want plain bread.'

"She laughed, and in a minute I heard her sayin' to one of the performers, 'My father's a little old-fashioned, you see, and would you mind—'

"What do you suppose happened then? Why, that woman that sung the trills and warbles stood up, and, without any piano playin' at all, sung 'Ye Banks and Braes' and 'John Anderson.' How she knew what I liked I never could tell, but she sang the songs I've loved since I was a boy, and when she got through the tears were streamin' down my cheeks.

"'Bless you, my dear!' says I, and I went up to her and shook both her hands. And it seemed to me she liked the song herself, for when she looked at me her eyes were wet, too.

"I had a beautiful time, but I suppose it's no use thinkin' I appreciate real music."—Youth's Companion.

SAVED BY KIND WORDS.

"If ever there was a person got to forget it is Jane Gray," said Mrs. Ellis, as she got down her sleeves and dried her hands at the sink. "It is better than seeing the doctor any time, if the soul needs food in there. I was yesterday so down and blue that I scarcely knew how to brace up, everything I did was a task and my spirits were all out of sorts.

"Then I got cross in like a bit of sunshine and says, I'll go see myself.

"She didn't go about it by giving me advice or anything of that sort. She saved me by kind words and friendly interest.

"'I guess she saw by my eyes that I had been crying, but she took no more notice of it than if my face had been wreathed in smiles.

"'Come, Mollie,' she said, 'I am so glad to see you; not will be welcome, I know, when I tell you I walked all the way over from Gray's ferry for that very purpose.

"'Gray's ferry is seven miles away, and a rough, hilly road at that.

"'You dear, little woman,' I cried, smiling in spite of myself.

"'Yes, I did,' she laughed, laying aside her wraps and taking up the dish-towel.

"'All I need is plenty to do and I'm happy,' she continued. 'I had just about run out of work at home, when something seemed to tell me I would find some here.

"'That's right,' I sighed, 'the work fairly piles up in this house.

"'And, thank the Lord, you have strength to do it. You are one of the richest women I know, Mollie. With Tom for a husband, and three bright, healthy, growing boys, you are really to be envied, dear.

"'I had not looked at it in that light before, although I knew Tom was the best husband living, and that our boys were beyond compare.

"'Sit down and count your blessings, Mollie, and you will find you would not exchange lots with any one.

"'I am sure of that,' I cried, 'and you must not think me ungrateful, but sometimes the sun hides itself a bit behind the clouds.'

"'Then look for the silver lining, it is sure to be there. There was no cloud, ever so dense that it did not eventually yield to the sun's rays. It is never wise to give up to discouragement, for it is always better further on.'

"Well, those kind words saved me and made me see things as they really were.

"Yes, Jane is a blessing to humanity, and no one can estimate her worth. All the children love her and dumb animals follow in her footsteps. She would not knowingly hurt the feelings of one of God's lowliest creatures. I thank Him that He has permitted her to cross my pathway. I am better for having known and loved her."—Sara Virginia Du Bois, in the Christian Intelligencer.

UNHAPPY.

Celia came home from school one day so very cross, and seeming so unhappy that her mother asked her what had gone wrong. Celia had only lately begun to go to school, and she was not very well acquainted there yet.

"O, mamma," she said, "I don't think the girls like me. They all like Cousin Matie so much, and want to play with her at recess, and they laugh and talk and have such a good time, and—and, O dear, they don't care about me at all!" And now she was crying in earnest, with her head on her mother's shoulder. Mamma waited until her girl had stopped crying so hard, and then she said very gently:

"Celia, dear, are you the only new scholar?"

"N—no," Celia sobbed. "There's another new girl—Mary Earle."

"And have you done anything to give her a good time?"

"Why, no. You see, I don't think I'd like her very well."

"Why not?"

"Well," answered Celia slowly, "she hasn't nearly as pretty clothes as some of the other girls, and then she is so quiet."

"Is she good in school?" questioned her mother.

"O, yes! But we don't know her at all yet. I think maybe she's a little lonely, too—I don't know."

Mamma looked at the tear-stained face with a queer smile. "Suppose you try to make Mary feel more at home and be as friendly as you can," she said, drawing the little girl upon her lap. "Perhaps she's crying, too, because none of you seemed to care about her. Celia, dear, it's a great deal better to try to be loving to some one else than to be fretting because you want to be loved. Just try to make Mary happy, and you'll be surprised to see how little time you'll have to think about being happy yourself."—The Girl's Companion.

We should be perfect in all we do, not merely for the present, but to help in the formation of a good character. We should not be like the soapstone, that crumbles as it is rubbed, but like gold, that shines brighter and brighter the more it is used.—Mary Lyon.

CATHOLICITY.

Mr. Wesley, who, under God, was the father and founder of Methodism, was the most catholic of men. He parted company with no man merely for opinion's sake. His rule "As to all things which do not strike at the root of Christianity" was to "think and let think." His practice was to give the hand of fellowship to every man who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

Mr. Wesley describes the man of catholic spirit as "one who * * * loves—as friends, as brethren in the Lord, as members of Christ and children of God, as joint-partakers now of the present kingdom of God, and fellow-heirs of His eternal kingdom—all, of whatever opinion, or worship, or congregation, who love God and man; who, rejoicing to please and fearing to offend God, are careful to abstain from evil, and zealous of good works. He is the man of a truly catholic spirit, who bears all these continually upon his heart; who, having an unspeakable tenderness for their persons, and longing for their welfare, does not cease to commend them to God in prayer, as well as to plead their cause before men; who speaks comfortably to them, and labors, by all his words to strengthen their hands in God."

It must not be inferred from the above extract, nor from any other expression of liberality, that Mr. Wesley was lax in his own opinions or rules of living. As to his manner of life, he was rigid, and exacted the same manner of living of all who sought admission into the Methodist classes. In his teachings he was thoroughly orthodox, and Arminian. His faith in the Holy Scriptures was unfaltering. He was not, in all things, a literalist in the interpretation of the Word, but adhered so closely to it, in its historical and doctrinal departments, that he would have been laughed at in this day as an unprogressive old fogy.

Had Mr. Wesley been an uneducated reformer, and had he built his scheme of Methodism as an expedient to meet emergencies, purely as an enthusiast, destitute of a critical knowledge of the Scriptures, the Methodists of the present time might listen with more patience than they do to the demand for a restatement of doctrine, and change of polity. But Mr. Wesley was a scholar, and built knowingly and strongly. And we hesitate not to say that in doctrine and polity Methodism cannot be improved. We have little patience with the man, calling himself an Episcopal Methodist, who ignores the one, and tinkers with the other. But we listen with respect to him who sees defects and deficiencies in our working plans and seeks to remedy them.

And we say in this connection that while we maintain the catholic spirit of original Methodism—willing at all times to "think and let think"—condemning no man as a reprobate because of his opinions on things non-essential, we must be excused for declining to fellowship those who reject the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and those whose doctrines and practices belie our religion and corrupt our civilization.

Catholicity does not mean that we are to bid godspeed to men who preach the doctrine of devils and corrupt their fellowmen. No, not even if they come to us as angels of light.

A MISINTERPRETED PRAYER.

Our Lord prayed that "they all may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." If in that prayer Jesus meant to ask the Father so to influence his disciples throughout the world that they might come together in one great body, and all carry on the work of the Gospel under the same rules, and under the same leaders, it must be clear to every thinking man that the Christian world is as far to-day from such an ideal state as in any period of the Church's history. And more, that there is not the least sign of coming together. If that is what he meant, it does seem that after nearly two thousand years of labor the Church should have taken a step or two in that direction.

Our Methodist brethren on both sides of the line, who appear to be so much disturbed over the separation of the Church into two organizations, and have little hope of getting together, invariably quote our Lord's petition every time they touch the subject. And not infrequently do they quote it in such a way as to indicate that continued separation is a spectacle to angels and to men, and a mortal sin against God. Some go so far as to say that those who stand in the way of organic union of Methodism are blocking the progress of the Gospel.

If separation into different denominations is at all allowable under the Gospel, as many Christians believe, why may there not be two Methodist churches? As Methodists, we are far apart on questions which we thought were vital in 1844, and which are not dead issues in 1906. As long as these issues remain alive we had better remain apart, and each Church do its own work in its own way.

Nothing to the cause of God at large can be gained by union. It would gratify a sentiment, but would add nothing to the strength of Christianity. It would not increase our numbers, as Methodists, nor add to our zeal or effectiveness. A man who keeps out of the Church (any branch of it) because there are various sects, would not come in were all united. A man who cannot be a Methodist because there are two branches would not be a Methodist were all in one body. It would be useless to undertake to catch such souls.

Should all the Methodists of earth unite in one body, our Lord's prayer, if organic unity is meant, would still be unanswered, for Methodists compose but a small fraction of Christendom. The Baptists would still remain a separate communion, as would the Episcopalians, and Presbyterians, and other bodies of Protestants, and the whole Roman Catholic world. None but an enthusiast, whose zeal overbalances his reason, can dream of bringing the Christian world into one great organization.

We are drawing closer and closer together in fellowship and sympathy, recognizing each other as brethren in the Lord, and bidding each other godspeed. Let us pray for the unity of spirit, and be content.

FAITHFUL TO HER RELIGION.

A Christian woman in Iowa was last year made heir to a fortune of $30,000 on condition that she renounce her religion and become a Roman Catholic. In the event of her refusal the money was to go to a Roman Catholic orphanage. The good woman, while appreciating the intended kindness, seems not to have hesitated a moment in making choice. Her answer, "to the astonishment of her friends," was: "Thirty thousand dollars is an immense sum to refuse, but I cannot think of changing my religion for any amount of money. I don't feel that I could be faithful to the Catholic Church, while I have nothing against it. I shall let the legacy go to the orphanage and not imperil my own salvation by changing religion or belief for money."

In this day of "graft" and "slack twisted" principles in religion and morals, it is truly refreshing to know that there are some Christians so thoroughly grounded in their convictions that they refuse even to change church relations for the sake of money.

Persons who affect to believe that "one church is as good as another" might be bribed to forsake one church for another, but there would be so little conscience involved that membership would be but in name. Morally they would be of no worth. What church the good woman, who could not be bribed, belongs to, we do not know, but we venture to say that she is true and faithful. She is worthy of being held in remembrance.

STUMBLED INTO MISTAKES.

We quite agree with Editor Burrow of the Midland Methodist in saying "it is not likely that translators (of the scriptures), copyists, and others were infallible;" but when he intimates that the orignal writers "stumbled into mistakes back yonder when the Scriptures were being written," we withhold endorsement. If the authors, as well as translators and copyists, stumbled into mistakes, the record, it occurs to us, is untrustworthy.

"If there were mistakes, we ought to know it." Certainly. And it is likely that the mistakes of translators and copyists can be discovered and pointed out. But who is going to detect the mistakes of the original writers? Are there men to-day, or have men lived since the canon of Scripture was closed, so completely under the guidance of the Holy Spirit as to be competent to sit in judgment on the "holy men of old who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost?" We are slow to believe that Brother Burrow intended to say that the Bible authors "stumbled into mistakes," yet his words certainly bear that construction. If they stumbled, where shall we go to find the infallible word? All things considered, we believe it is safer to be as narrow as the Scriptures allow, rather than to stand on a broad and liberal platform that recognizes nothing as heresy.

PERSONAL.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson is well pleased with his appointment to Plaquemine Brule, the land of "fresh persimmons." (?)

Rev. L. A. Alford, after visiting his father at Magnolia, Miss., went to his new appointment, Franklin, in the Jackson district.

Rev. W. R. Harvell, who goes to Franklinton, gave us a pleasant call last week. He was in a good mood, though he had before him a long move.

Rev. Marvin Johnson has entered courageously into his new work at Eupora and Maben. His beginning was auspicious, and the people seem quite pleased with his ministrations.

Rev. O. G. Halliburton, transferred from the Louisiana to the Mississippi Conference, has been appointed to Bay St. Louis, a nice and growing town on the coast.

A friend, whose judgment is worth something on account of his education and great intelligence, in a note to the Editor, says: "You are getting out a very creditable paper. I am proud of it."

The Morton correspondent in the Scott County Register says: "We are delighted with our new pastor, Rev. Mr. Mellard. He entertained the school Wednesday morning (Jan. 2) to the delight of all the pupils and teachers."

Rev. R. M. Evans has made a splendid start on the Vaiden charge. Not the least noticeable thing in his start is the good work done for the Advocate. He sends in a list of eleven subscribers, with more to follow.

Rev. C. C. Evans, of Lucedale, rejoices in the prospect before him, the outlook being far better than it was a year ago. The brethren at Brushy are building a good church—one that would be a credit to a much larger place. Brother Evans hopes to have a successful year.

Rev. W. E. M. Brogan is most pleasantly situated in his new charge, Okolona, Miss. Prospects for a successful year are good. One member has been received into the Church and the Sunday school reorganized with prospects for greater efficiency in the future.

Rev. B. P. Jaco is still smiling over his return to Grenada for the third term and he tells us that the people of the good old town "think the Conference was great" and feel a sense of loneliness because their interesting guests have gone. The Conference was great—about as great as any session in its history.

Rev. R. T. Nolen, of the Trenton Circuit, Mississippi Conference, has done the handsome thing in sending us the full amount for twenty subscribers, though he sends only four names. He is so confident the subscribers will be secured that he advances the money. Brother Nolen says "the weekly visits of THE ADVOCATE are equal to a pastoral visit." He has long been an efficient worker for THE ADVOCATE.

Rev. J. F. Brooks, writing from Beloit, Miss., says: "I have never had a warmer reception than I have received here this year. Brother Meek, our new presiding elder, is making a fine impression everywhere he goes. He possesses the essential elements of a first-class presiding elder, and we are expecting great things from the Lord in the Greenville District."

Rev. C. P. Moss pleases the good people of Carrollton, Miss. He gave them on Sunday, the 7th, an instructive and helpful sermon, making a plea for earnest, practical and useful religion. The town paper (Conservative) says the sermon was timely, and met a cordial response from the congregation."

Delegates to the General Conference from the Louisiana Annual Conference—Clerical: F. S. Parker, C. W. Carter and R. W. Tucker; alternates, J. M. Henry and F. N. Parker. Lay: W. B. Thompson, H. H. White and A. E. Jackson; alternates, W. W. Carre and S. B. McCutcheon.

Rev. John Ritchey, appointed to Ruleville, North Mississippi, says: "I filled my appointment here the first Sunday after Conference; have been all around, and, as far as I can judge, the outlook is good for a profitable year's work."

An ex-presiding elder, who rejoices in the work of a station, has turned himself loose in behalf of the Advocate, and turned in to the office thirty new subscribers and two renewals, with the money. Brother Lagrone is ahead, but not far ahead, of Brother O. L. Savage.

Rev. W. W. Woollard sends us the following personal notes: Brother Thames tells me that H. L. Spraggins has made a fine start at Oxford. He is a splendid gentleman and will do well anywhere they put him.—R. O. Brown's Board of Stewards surprised him by increasing his "allowance" to $900. He is in favor with his people.—Letters from different sources in the Greenville district indicate that Brother Meek has taken hold of things as though he were "to the manor born." He has arranged to supply one of his vacant charges—Lake Cormorant Mission—with Brother Monger, from the University.

By special invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. C. Sligh, and the official board, Dr. Richard Wilkinson preached Sunday morning last at Louisiana Avenue Church in this city. Brother Wilkinson was greeted by the largest congregation we have ever seen in any church in the city, except in Felicity Street, at the closing session of the Conference. He preached a great sermon. It was full of thought and delivered with energy. A profound impression was made on his hearers. In going to his new charge, Monroe, La., he carries with him the respect and love of the entire membership of Rayne Memorial, which he has served faithfully and efficiently during the past three years.

FROM EAST MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. A. P. Leech is spending the winter with his daughter in Pachuta, Miss. He finds that the pine woods section agrees with him, and his health is excellent.

Rev. R. P. Neblett has taken up his work at Tunica, to which, to his surprise, he was appointed at Conference. If he is as much beloved of his people there as he is by those whom he leaves at Eupora, his work can hardly fail of success.

Rev. J. W. Raper has been spending several days at the Capital, busy in the interest of a temperance law which he seeks to have passed. He has assurances of success in his undertaking, many influential legislators having promised their support.

Brother W. A. Dearing, for many years a staunch supporter of our Church at Tibbee, a noble Christian gentleman, passed away at his home last week. He had been in feeble health for some time, but his friends had hoped for an improvement which would spare him to his family and the Church for some years yet. His loss is an irreparable one.

Rev. A. C. Curtis has moved into the cozy and convenient parsonage at Mayhew, and has already won high praise from his membership, who seem delighted with him. The Church at Artesia will have two services a month under the present arrangement, thus making the charge a more important one, for this thriving railway junction point is a very promising field. X. NEWS AND NOTES.

A correspondent of the Magnolia Gazette (Miss.), writing from Union, says: "We learn that some of our Methodist and Baptist church members have been dancing. Young men of Christian habits do not need dancing wives, neither do Christian young ladies need dancing husbands, and if the young ladies would use their influence in the right way, there would be less of it going on." That is well said.

Bishop Key used to smoke, but he quit the habit years ago, and says he "will never smoke again until the judgment." Let us hope the good man will escape them.

NOTE FROM BROTHER LEWIS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Please say in the Advocate that Dr. W. B. Murrah spent the first Sunday in January in Tupelo, and that we will give $1,000 to the Endowment Fund of Millsaps College, $240 of which was given in cash. Tupelo gave about $5,000 for all purposes last year. Dr. Murrah preached two great sermons for us, and the year begins well. The Stewards voluntarily agree to increase the pastor's salary to $1,800. Recently the Christian Advocate was presented to the people, and we now have a list of 50 subscribers to the Nashville Advocate and 27 to the New Orleans Advocate. T. W. LEWIS.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMISSION ON UNION OF METHODISM IN JAPAN.

The progress of Christian missions in the Japanese Empire has been such during the last decade that it seemed wise to bring the several Methodist bodies now working in that Empire into closer relation. This conviction, in the interest of unity, economy and increased efficiency, led the representative missionaries and Japanese ministers of the six Methodist Churches in that field to the favorable consideration of organic union.

This question was submitted to the General Conferences of at least four of the Methodist Churches represented in Japan, with the result that commissions were appointed by the respective churches and clothed with power to act when these commissions should be called together.

On the 3d of January, 1906, there met at Mt. Vernon Place Methodist Church, in Baltimore, Md., commissions representing the following churches:

The Methodist Church in Canada—Commissioners, R. A. Carman, D.D.; Rev. A. Sutherland, D.D.; Rev. William Boggs, D.D.; Hon. Justice Maclaren, LL.D.; H. H. Fudger, Esq.

The Methodist Episcopal Church—Commissioners, Bishop Earl Cranston, D.D.; Rev. A. B. Leonard, D.D.; Rev. C. W. Smith, D.D.; Lemuel Skidmore, Esq.; Charles Z. Lincoln, Esq.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South—Commissioners, Bishop A. W. Wilson, D.D.; Bishop Charles B. Galloway, D.D.; Rev. James Atkins, D.D.; Rev. T. T. Fishburn, Rev. W. R. Lambuth, D.D.

The Methodist Protestant Church—Commissioners, Rev. W. L. Wells, D.D.; Rev. F. C. Klein, Mr. S. R. Harris, Rev. T. J. Ogburn, Rev. F. F. Brierly.

Rev. G. D. Gossard, of the United Brethren in Christ, was present, but in the absence of specific action by the General Conference of said Church, declined to take part in the deliberations.

The Evangelical Association of America not having been notified in time, no representative was present.

Two days of prayerful and painstaking consideration were given to the question before the said Commissioners, but not being able to reach definite and final conclusions it was decided to adjourn subject to the call of the four Presidents of the four Methodist bodies represented—Rev. A. Carman, D.D., Toronto, Canada; Bishop Earl Cranston, D.D., Washington, D. C.; Bishop A. W. Wilson, D.D., Baltimore, Md.; Rev. T. J. Ogburn, D.D., Baltimore, Md.

All of the Commissioners present were deeply impressed with the momentous issues involved and devoutly desired to reach such a basis as should bring the Methodist Churches in Japan, who are already in hearty co-operation, into organic union.

Temperance.

"HOW CAN YOU AFFORD IT?"

A business man celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his business in one of our towns by giving a high-class free entertainment, costing $150. One of his business neighbors asked him the question, "How can you afford it?" The response was, "How many 10-cent cigars do you smoke a day?" "About six," said the neighbor. "Well, then," said the other, "I can give an entertainment like this every year on your cigar money, and have $69 left to my credit. Perhaps it is more appropriate for me to ask, how you can afford it?"

The smoking-man has since "gone to the wall." The concert man is still doing business and helping the town. —New Hampshire Issue.

A CALL TO ARMS.

In this patriotic Republic there is a war to be waged, and a victory to be waged or won since our forefathers gave their lives that we might enjoy the blessings of liberty.

Greater than when in '64 our fertile fields were enriched with the blood of our brave soldiers.

This conflict is a war between the church and the saloon, a war of sobriety against drunkenness.

It will be waged until victory perches upon the one banner or the other. The lines are drawn, the battle is on, the fight is fierce.

The foe is powerful and pitiless, a giant that feeds on the toil and tears of millions of people. A monster that blights the happiness, destroys the lives and ruins the homes of our country.

O sons of sobriety, behold the work of this destroying demon, whose death-roll is greater than that of the great plagues of earth! Behold the victims of these arsenals of hell, an army of 500,000 paupers, 300,000 criminals, 300,000 idiots, 100,000 slain every year!

Hear the cries and prayers of wives worse than widowed and children worse than orphaned, and rise in the might of your manhood and pray and vote and work for prohibition, purity and home.

Our country, bought with the bravest blood that ever crimsoned the altar of freedom, will go into swift decay, if not sustained by virtue and temperance.

There are in this Christian land of ours 250,000 saloons against 150,000 churches. O Church of God, awake!—Rev. J. L. Weatherford.

DRINK CAN DO IT.

While crazed with drink, George Lynch, of Chicago, shot and killed W. H. Siebert, his aged friend, at Galesburg. The murderer arrived from the metropolis in the evening in a hopelessly intoxicated condition. During the night visits to the local resorts did not better his condition. At 5 a.m. he went to Siebert's home and knocked at the front door. The old man was awakened and asked, "Who's there?" "It is George. Let me in," was the reply. Sieber threw open the door and turned to light a lamp. Lynch drew a revolver and sent three shots into his friend's body. Siebert died instantly. His aged wife witnessed the tragedy.

UNCLE SAM'S DRINK BILL.

Every year the American Grocer compiles the annual estimate of the "drink bill" of the United States for the preceding year. These estimates have come to have an accepted standing in America similar to the estimates of Dr. Dawson Burns in England. The "drink bill" estimate for the year 1904 recently appeared in the American Grocer, and is here given in full:

"The regular annual estimate of the nation's drink bill, as made by the American Grocer, indicates an increasing use of stimulants in the aggregate as well as per capita. This gain is greatest in the alcoholic beverages, notably in beer, the per capita use of which increased 0.26 gallons within one year, while that of spirits was only 0.02 gallons more.

"The total estimated retail cost of stimulants to consumers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, was $1,498,622,715; the annual average cost for five years, 1900-1904, was $1,364,248,336.

"The record shows a per capita expenditure for all sorts of stimulants by the 81,752,000 inhabitants of the United States in 1904 of $18.33, or $91.65 for each family of five persons. That is equivalent to one glass of beer every day for each one of the population—certainly far from an immoderate use of alcoholic stimulants.

"The per capita cost of coffee, tea, and cocoa was $2.70, against $15.63 for alcoholic beverages, as compared with $2.61 spent for non-alcoholic stimulants and $15.54 for spirituous malt liquors in 1903.

"From the tables of the quantities of liquor consumed (compiled from the official report of the Bureau of Statistics, United States Department of Commerce and Labor) it is shown that the use of whisky has steadily increased from 1.01 gallons per capita in 1896 to 1.48 gallons per capita in 1904, a gain in nine years of over 46½ per cent. The consumption of wine for the same period shows an increase of 100 per cent; beer, 18 4-5 per cent; all alcoholic drinks combined, 31 4-5 per cent. Coffee shows a per capita gain of 44.88 per cent since 1896; tea about the same, being 1.33 pounds in 1896, against 1.34 pounds in 1904.

"It is apparent that the use of the milder stimulants — wine, beer, coffee and tea—has not been able to check the increased use of spirits, of which the quantities withdrawn for consumption have risen from 70,725,745 gallons in 1896 to 121,101,997 gallons in 1904.

"Were the tax on whisky removed, and should temperance sentiment grow sluggish, this nation would be in a fair way to a debauchery that would threaten its life.

"Bringing together into one statement the retail cost of all beverages, as solely estimated by the American Grocer, we find that the United States consumed in 1904 alcoholic and non-alcoholic stimulants to the value of $1,498,622,715. as follows:

Alcoholic drinks	$1,277,727,190
Non-alcoholic stimulants—
Coffee	165,395,525
Tea	47,500,000
Cocoa	8,000,000
	$220,895,525

"Bringing together the quantities of liquors consumed, and estimating retail cost on the basis of previous reports, we have as the retail cost to the American people of alcoholic stimulants for the year ending June 30, 1905, the following:

Beer	$749,514,200
Wines	96,413,028

"The total revenue of the United States Government in 1904 from spirituous and malt liquors, licenses, etc., was $184,893,474—a per capita tax of $2.26, or $11.30 for every family."—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

Little SAM, son of Mrs. Mary and Sam Murphy, was born in Kemper County, near Binnsville, June 24, 1905, and died, after a short illness, on Jan. 5, 1906, aged 6 months and 12 days. Little Sam brightened the home for a short while, and then went to his heavenly home. We laid him to rest in the Binnsville Cemetary on Saturday, the 6th inst., just as the sun was setting. May God's blessings rest on the bereaved ones.

A. C. FLOWERS, P. C.

Mrs. VIRGINIA ANN WOODARD (nee Fowlkes), wife of Joseph Monroe Woodard, and mother of Prof. Jas. H. Woodard, departed this life on Dec. 28, 1905, at the home of her son, in Grenada, Miss. Our good sister in Christ was reared in Monroe County, Miss., where, on Dec. 24, 1865, she was happily married, going with her husband into Alabama, where, in 1872 or 1873, she was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. Andrews, at Union Church, near Northport. Thus she gave an average lifetime to the service of her Lord in the church, being a consistent Christian at least thirty-three years. Hers was a life of service and devotion. Only those who came under her influence of tender ministrations know the value and sweetness of her life. Life's last effort was spent in bestowing a beaming eye and radiant face upon her son, while the radiance of Christ's own person broke upon her released spirit. She talked calmly and triumphantly of her approaching death, which had no terrors. To her the way was clear, and no fear came to her heart. Thank God for the heavenly benedictions that such a life brings into the world, and thank God for such a heavenly world, into which such lives may ascend. She was preceded to the grave by little Lula, only 4 years old, and her husband fifteen years ago, while an only son remains to mourn his loss. When the saints go marching home, she will join them from the beautiful Odd Fellows' Cemetery.

BEN P. JACO, P. C.

Mrs. MARY PERRIN (nee Porter), wife of the late Franklin Perrin, of New Orleans, died at her son-in-law's (Mr. D. L. Martins) in Union St., Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 31, 1905, in the 75th year of her age. She was married June 6, 1853, and joined the M. E. Church, South (Louisiana Avenue, in New Orleans) in which she lived until she came to Memphis in 1894, and joined the Central Methodist Church. In this she lived an acceptable member until she was transferred to the church triumphant above. She leaves two children, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Claude, to mourn their loss. I have known Sister Perrin for more than a quarter of a century, and during all these years I have heard her spoken of by all who knew her in the highest terms. She was devoted to her children, her church and her God. Always the same faithful, modest Christian woman, doing all the good she could in her modest, retiring way, letting her light shine, but not shining her light. The day she was taken ill to die she spoke of loved ones who had gone on before and of the glories they had seen since leaving this world. She met death with the same faith and calmness that she had met the enemy on every battle-field for more than fifty years. Her devoted children did all that could be done for her in her last illness. She had every comfort that one could have in life's last struggle. Though she lived out her three score years and ten, she did not look to be three score. She was followed to the Elmwood Cemetery by Dr. W. T. Bolling, her pastor; her weeping children and many friends, where she awaits the call of the resurrection trumpet. J. W. HUNNOLL.

WALL HILL CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I write to inform the readers of The Advocate how we are getting under headway on the Wall Hill Circuit. The pronoun "we" represents the preacher and the faithful members of the charge, who cooperate with him in the work. In the first place, a word as to why I am here. The Bishop's advisers had in the superabundance of their love and brotherly kindness planned great things for me. A great, long move, that could not have been accomplished without great sacrifice and suffering on the part of myself and family. The days of heroism are not past. Some men are determined that they shall never pass away. In such conduct they are not without Scriptural precedent. (See Matt. xxiii, 4). So impracticable was the plan of the "beloveds" (for I do not credit the Bishop with it, as he is not supposed to be in close touch with all the preachers and charges) that upon representations made by myself and the good people of this charge, I was advised by my present presiding elder to move here.

This charge had been left without a pastor; was within ten miles of the parsonage we occupied last year, and the people had expressed a desire for my services.

Since our arrival here we have been treated with great kindness. The people have received us with the greatest cordiality. One community in the circuit sent us a wagon-load of good things, while the good people of Wall Hill community, where the parsonage is located, continue to remember us in a substantial way.

I served this charge in 1887 and 1888, and no nobler people can be found than we have here. I hereby ask those who are friendly toward me to pray for me, that I may do a good work this year. J. M. HUGGIN.

The Reason for Higher Prices on Shoes.

Have you considered that a part, at least, of the advance that you are now being asked to pay for your shoes is due to a tariff on hides, which benefits neither you nor the man who raises the cattle? The price of cattle on the hoof is regulated by the demand for and price of beef.

The tariff on hides simply enables the Packer Trust and large hide dealers to get an extra profit on this commodity. It brings no extra profit to either the cattle grower or the shoe manufacturer. With the removal of this tax our manufacturers will either be able to furnish you better shoes at the same prices, or the same shoes at a slightly less price. The shoe trade generally is interesting itself in endeavoring to get this unjust tax repealed.

Write your Congressman to-day either a letter or a postal card, stating that shoes are costing more money, and that in your opinion the tax on hides, which is for the benefit of the packers, should be repealed.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

"All the Argument Necessary."

The International Journal of Surgery, August, 1905, under the heading "CYSTITIS" says: "In the treatment of Cystitis water is the great aid to all forms of medication. Moreover, BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is the ideal form in which to administer it to the cystitic patient, as it is not only a pure solvent, but has the additional virtue of containing substantial quantities of the alkaline Lithates. Patients should be encouraged to take from two to four quarts per day if they can, and the relief they will obtain will be all the argument necessary after the first day or so.

"IN URIC ACID DIATHESIS, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, LITHAEMIA, and the like, ITS ACTION IS PROMPT AND LASTING."

Dr. Geo. Ben. Johnston, M. D., LL. D., Richmond, Va., Ex-President Southern Surgical and Gynecological Assn., Ex-President Virginia Medical Society, and Prof. of Gynecology and Abdominal Surgery, Medical College of Virginia: "If I were asked what mineral water has the widest range of usefulness, I would unhesitatingly answer, BUFFALO LITHIA WATER In Uric Acid Diathesis, Gout, Rheumatism, Lithaemia, and the like, its action is prompt and lasting. * * * Almost any case of Pyelitis and Cystitis will be alleviated by it, and many cured. I have had evidence of the undoubted Disintegrating, Solvent and Eliminating power of this water in Renal Calculus, and have known its long continued use to permanently break up the gravel forming habit."

THE BOYHOOD OF OUR LORD.

For January 21, 1906.

In the study of God's Word we have some beautiful pictures of youths' lives, and a marked feature in the Word of God is obedience. How tender was Abraham toward Isaac as they talked on their way to the mount where the father was to offer up his only son as a burnt offering—what a prefigure of God, who so loved the world as to offer up his only Son! As heaven came to the rescue in Isaac's case, so our Lord was given the victory over death in the ever-blessed resurrection.

What sweet obedience and honoring of his father was in the conduct of the boy Joseph, and how great was his reward and honor in the last days of his father, Jacob!

How beautifully it is told us of little Samuel, who learned to even talk with God when a mere child!

Behold the love that bound together the hearts of the two boys, David and Jonathan! What a picture of the boy David, as he tended his father's sheep, and with almost childish simplicity he tells the king of his victory over the lion and the bear! At the same time Jonathan was at his father's side, learning the art of warfare.

We come on down the record and read of Josiah, the boy-king, who, at the age of 8, took the reins of government, and in ten years more began a reformation that reached to the outer borders of Israel.

It was only recently that we had the lesson of the boy Daniel and his three companions.

Continuing in the New Testament, we learn the important part a boy played in the feeding of the 5,000—Paul's sister's son, who did a boy's part in helping to rescue his uncle from his enemies.

This is a "boys' lesson," and what an abundance of material to arouse the interest of the boys of our schools!

In studying the lives of all these boys, we find that they were, first, obedient to their parents or to those who had charge over them, and on this as a foundation, they built a life of honor and usefulness. The boys' commandment is the only one that has a promise; but our attention now is called to the boyhood of Jesus as given us in only one short passage in God's Word—that is the visit to Jerusalem, and what happened there. It was when Jesus was 12 years old that his parents took him with them to Jerusalem. The occasion of the visit was the celebration of the Feast of the Passover. Jesus, just like the boys we know, was of an investigating turn of mind; he had an inborn thirst after knowledge—and remember that whatever part of his life is revealed to us, it is for us to study and teach, and as we follow Jesus let us present the boy Jesus to the boys as an example sent to us to be followed. He went about the temple as if it was his home, for was it not "His Father's house?" He went among the learned doctors of the law—the same scriptures that we have to-day in the Old Testament.

It being the time (12 years of age) when he was a child of the law, he had arrived at the age of accountability, and it is not a matter of surprise should any boy want to know what that law was that henceforth he should be under its protection and its authority. So among the learned men he lingered, forgetful of his parents, who had departed on their homeward journey. He was asking and answering questions, and his manner astonished the assembled masters.

In the midst of the conversation his mother entered; she had come in search of him; because she supposed that he was with them somewhere among the many travelers, who were returning from the feast. When his mother had told him of their sorrowing search for him—the study of his advent, the visits of the angels to his mother and to Joseph, and the fulfillment of phophecy in regard to him leads us to interpret his reply very much as follows: Mother, you have been told by a messenger from my Father in heaven what manner of child I was to be. The angel Gabriel told you many things that you have treasured in your heart, and, knowing all these things, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

However, he left the temple with his rejoicing parents and went to his home at Nazareth, and was subject unto them, and "He increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."

It is a matter of fact that a boy's life, under good home influences, and his obedience to his parents, are the solid foundation for a character far more of value than the world's wealth.

Jesus increasing in stature is an evidence of his fine health, and we must conclude that his mother was amply able to instruct him so that he would increase in favor with God and man.

What an abundance of heart that prompted Mary's song, beginning with the 46th verse of the first chapter of Luke. Mary must have read and thought much on Hannah's song of prayer in the 2d chapter of 1st Samuel. Howbeit, Mary's song lets us see her heart and mind, and tells us what a mother by whom the boy Jesus was reared. Our boys need that we be boys among them, entering into their boyish ideas of life and religion, and with all sympathy direct them in the way, not holding them off with the arm of austerity, but in heart-to-heart talks presenting the boyhood of Jesus in the light of to-day, and learning with them—for there is no teacher that does not learn in teaching — and so coming closer and closer to Jesus until they, before they are tempted to put it off by argument, are ready to accept Christ as their Savior.

How sweet the thought in manhood, that the Savior we love and follow is the Savior of our boyish days, when mother taught us of him; and a boy that is taught in this way never can exactly remember the time of his conversion—the work of grace was given day by day. Only the time of rejoicing is in the reflection that Jesus is more dear than the allurements of the world.

Let the boys be assured that this glimpse of Jesus' boyhood days is given them that they may feel that there is a place in God's heart and service for every boy. So let us redouble our energy to reach out after the boys and hold them to the influence of the church, sunday school and home; and as they increase in favor with God it will naturally follow that they will increase in favor with man.

Respect from the most ungodly and careless is commanded by a boy or a man who lives in the favor of God and walks in the footsteps of Jesus.

"THE SPIRIT-FILLED LIFE."
(Eph. v, 18-21.)

Dear Leaguers—

Do you remember that last week we spoke about having Christ dwelling in the heart—the welcome guest? If love for him occuples every nook of the soul, why there will be no room for hatred, jealousy and such things. Just so it is with a spirit-filled life.

Let us take a positive view of the first verse of our lesson: "And be not drunk with wine wherein is excess; but be filled with the spirit."

It is not so much the absence of sin, whether in the shape of drunkenness, rage, gluttony or the like that we need urge, but the presence of the Holy Spirit. Do the shades of night obscure the glorious light of the midday sun? Does the swampy home of the water-lily taint its delicate purity? Will a person of degraded habits care to associate with the gentle and lovely? Nay, you answer to all my questions. No more, dear readers, can the spirit of evil and the Spirit of God possess the heart at one and the same time. Pray the Christ to abide with you always, and thus fill your life and fulfill its holy cravings.

I just love the 19th verse of Ephesians. Let us read it together: "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." I must give you a key illustration to a Sunday school lesson that I read not long since:

"A missionary to Madagascar relates a most interesting and pathetic story of trying days there. A number of native Christians would assemble at midnight in the house of the missionary for religious instruction. On one occasion the blessings of God came upon them in great power until they said, 'Mr. Ellis, we must sing!' 'No,' said he, 'it is as much as your lives are worth to be heard.' They continued to talk about the love of Christ until they exclaimed again, 'Sing, we must!' He cautioned them, and they added, 'We will sing in a whisper.' So on their bended knees they quietly sang a hymn in a whisper. 'But I could only weep,' said Mr. Ellis, 'knowing their peril. * * *'" Do you not like these words, "making melody in your heart to the Lord?" I do. They are so expressive of love, of true happiness, of overflowing gratitude. Are you gifted with the power of song? Then, like the lark, which sings and soars and sings and soars, use the talent given you to the glory of the hearer.

Suppose, for a little bit, we talk about the last verses of our topic. "Giving thanks always for all things unto God, the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." It is an easy and natural thing to be thankful for joys that come to us, but does Paul refer only to the sunny happenings of life? Scarcely. He beseeches the Epheslans to give thanks "for all things." Sorrows come to us—deep sorrows. Oh, friends, trust him then—"Just learn from Jesus," and he will bless, he will sustain, he will give you the grace to cry "Thy will be done."

A seed is planted in fertile ground. It disintegrates. It is as nothing, but wait—by and by a tiny sprout peeps up; green leaves unfold; a tender, beautiful plant is born; sweet flowers nod in the morning zephyrs. Is this not like the woes to which many fall heir? They weigh the spirit down; they seem to break the heart—but if, in faith, we call to our God to help us, he will sanctify the affliction and will bless us with exceeding great peace.

"The meek shall inherit the earth." Our Savior was submissive, though kingly withal. He wants us to be lowly and not "seek our own." He knows to what such a spirit will lead us—"to an inheritance incorruptable, undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

EUGENE JOHNSON, P. E.

TRENTON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have been kindly received on the Trenton charge. When we arrived at the parsonage, Dec. 28, there was a large crowd waiting to welcome us into our new home. We were then invited by the ladies into the dining-room, where they had prepared for us a good supper, and, with as many of the company as could get seated around a long table, with Rev. R. A. Sibley, a superannuate, at the head, we enjoyed the good supper prepared for pastor and family.

Doctor, pray that I may do a good work here for my Lord. We have not forgotten those good people of Slate Springs, Paris and other charges I served in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference. I hope and pray that they will stand by their pastors as they did by me, and the Lord will bless them. "God be with them until we meet again," and may the Lord bless my old presiding elders and my colaborers in the ministry. They have been a blessing to me.

R. T. NOLEN.

WATER VALLEY, MISS.

Dr. Boswell: Yesterday was a great day for Water Valley. Dr. Hamill was with us. The pastors of the different churches have arranged to unite in the Sunday evening services during January. We will give these evenings to discussion of the Sunday school interests. The month's work will be concluded with a house-to-house visitation of the town by committees from each school. We had this visitation last year, and it brought us large returns. Greater things are expected from it this year. So we had Dr. Hamill come yesterday and give us a great beginning. We had three addresses from him at different churches.

In the morning, at Wood Street, he spoke to a packed house, fully 800 people, and many were turned away for lack of room. It was so in the evening at the Baptist Church. In the afternoon, at the Presbyterian Church, he spoke to more than 500. In each of these services he was at his best. So we feel that our work is auspiciouly begun. Next Sunday evening we have another union Sunday school service at Wood Street, and so on around.

In a few days we will move into our new parsonage on Main Street. It will not be long, I trust, until the new church is commenced. Our people are a unit for its early construction. Our present quarters are inadequate for our growing work.

We miss Brother Thames and his good family since their removal to Oxford. Our neighboring town is to be congratulated on their going there. By the way, would it not have been well since the reorganization of the districts to have called this the Oxford district? W. W. WOOLLARD.

Water Valley, Miss., Jan. 9, 1906.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The beginning in the district is auspicious. The outlook is bright and promising. The preachers are all in their places and starting into the "new year" hopefully. The people gave us a warm and cordial welcome among them. They had the district parsonage in order, furnished with everything needful. We arrived at an unearthly hour—1 o'clock in the morning—in the pouring rain, but we were met and conveyed to the district home, where a blaze of light, prepared table and inviting beds welcomed us.

Pray for us that we may serve the church in our service of the Lord.

Yours cordially and fraternally,

L. M. LIPSCOMB.

COTTON

Increase Your Yields Per Acre — COTTON — Values Above Par

It is a well known fact that cotton, or any other crop, produced with Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers will bring the highest possible price on the market. Make healthy, strong, well-developed, early cotton, with full grown bolls on the fruit limbs at the base as well as all the way up to the very top and tip ends of the branches of the cotton plants, by liberally using

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers.

They contain all the materials necessary to supply to your land the elements which have been taken from it by repeated cultivation year after year. These fertilizers will greatly "increase your yields per acre." Accept no substitute from your dealer.

"GENERAL" FOR 25 CENTS.

The Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railway is distributing a very beautiful colored lithograph, 18x25 inches, of the famous engine "General," which is now on exhibition in the Union Depot, Chattanooga, Tenn. The picture is ready for framing, and will be mailed to any address for twenty-five cents. The "General" was captured by the Andrews' Raiders at Big Shanty (now Kennesaw), Ga., on the Western and Atlantic railroad, April 12, 1862, and was recaptured by Conductor W. A. Fuller, Anthony Murphy and others, near Ringgold, Ga., after an exciting chase of about ninety miles. It was one of the most thrilling exploits of the Civil War. The object of the raid was to burn the bridges on the Western and Atlantic railroad, and cut off the Confederate Army from its base of supplies. A booklet, "The Story of the General," will be sent free upon application.

Two women in Mexico, in love with the same man, and jealous, settled their difficulty in an open duel with knives. One of them received five stabs, and soon died.

Mr. Hearst, failing to secure a recount of the votes in the late New York City election by appeal to the courts, will probably secure a recount through the Legislature, a measure to that end being now before the body, with chances in favor of its passage.

Mayor McClellan and his friends seem now to be in the lead in New York, and as the Mayor's break with Tammany appears to be permanent, there is talk of reorganizing that machine and leaving the boss Murphy out.

The Government now has under construction seven first-class battle-ships. Two more have been ordered, each of 16,000 ton displacement. Our Navy it is said, will in a few years be next to the largest and strongest in the world.

Congress has before it a bill regulating the tariff for the Philippines. It meets much opposition from both sides, and it is likely there will be hard work getting it through.

The Southern bankers attending the Southern Cotton Convention in the city last week, at a formal meeting, pledged their moral and financial support to the Association in its efforts to "maintain a fair and equitable price" for cotton. They also recommend a complete system of warehouses for caring for cotton.

Diplomatic relations between France and Venezuela have entirely ceased, and war between the countries is not improbable. Great excitement prevails in Venezuela, and business is largely paralyzed. The country is also troubled with revolutionists, who have the sympathy and active support of citizens of France.

A resolution before the lower house of the Mississippi Legislature asking the Federal Government to reimburse the State for money spent in maintaing quarantine last year was defeated. Mississippi is able and willing to foot its own bills. So thought a majority of the representatives.

If the programme marked out by some members of Congress and others is carried out there will be four States added to the Union, viz., Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma and another of the Indian Territory. Against this is another party who want only two States—joint statehood for Arizona and New Mexico, and Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The latter party is likely to succeed.

Mistakes do not often occur in printing the paper money, but a singular one occurred recently. A platemaker issued to a printer a couple of plates, one for five-dollar bills and the other for one dollar. The result was the bill read for five dollars on one side, and for one dollar on the other. The work of printing continued for an hour before the mistake was discovered. The printed bills were immediately burned.

A STORY OF A FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

There is a beautiful story told of Florence Nightingale, the famous nurse of the Crimean war, which shows that when she was a child she had the nursing instinct developed.

Her wounded patient was a Scotch shepherd dog. Some boys had hurt and apparently broken his leg by throwing stones, and it had been decided to hang him to put him out of his misery.

The little girl went fearlessly up to where he lay; saying in a soft, caressing tone, "Poor Cap, poor Cap!" It was enough. He looked up with his speaking brown eye, now blood-shot and full of pain, into her face, and did not resent it when, kneeling down beside him, she stroked with her little ungloved hand the large, intelligent head.

The vicar examined the wounded leg. "Well," said the vicar, rising from his examination, "so far as I can tell, there are no bones broken; the leg is badly bruised. It ought to be fomented to take the inflammation and swelling down."

"How do you foment?" asked Florence.

"With hot cloths dipped in boiling water," answered the vigar.

"Then that is quite easy. I'll stay and do it. Now, Jimmy, get sticks and make the kettle boil."

"But they will be expecting you at home," said the vicar.

"Not if you tell them I'm here," answered Florence, "and my sister and one of the maids can come and take me home in time for tea, and"—she hesitated—"they had better bring some old flannel cloths; there does not seem to be much here. But you will wait and show me how to foment, won't you?"

"Well, yes," said the vicar, carried away by the quick energy of the little girl. And soon the fire was lit and the water boiling. An old smoke frock of the shepherd had been discovered in a corner, which Florence had deliberately torn in pieces, and to the vicar's remark, "What will Roger say?" she answered, "We'll get him another."

And so Florence Nightingale made her first compress and spent all that bright spring day in nursing her first patient—the shepherd dog.—Christian Observer.

SUGGESTIONS.

Coarse salt and vinegar will clean enameled ware that has been burned or discolored.

Sometimes in damp weather the salt becomes so clogged together that it is unfit for table use, but if a little cornstarch is mixed with it the grains will stand apart nicely and the saline properties remain undiminished.

Relieve toothache, make a flannel bag about four or five inches square, fill it three-quarters full of common salt, and heat the bag in the oven, and apply it to the side of the face. The salt retains heat for a considerable time, and gives much relief.

There is always a right way and a wrong way of doing things, and the right way to mash potatoes is to rub them through a wire sieve. You can then be sure there are no lumps left, and when a little milk and butter are mixed in, the result will be most appetizing.

The woman who would save her steps will always keep a small board sprinkled with salt and water when ironing. If the iron be passed two or three times over the salt on the board the roughness often resulting when it has been used for a lengthened time will be removed.

Special Notice.

We will give to all new subscribers at two dollars a year, and also to all who will renew at two dollars a year, one copy of the new Hymn Book, cloth-bound edition. In all cases money must accompany the order. The book will be mailed from Nashville or Dallas. Persons desiring to take advantage of this offer should make same known.

Glances at the World.

Commenting on the outlook for prosperity during the present year, Bradstreet's, "a journal more likely to be over-conservative than over-enthusiastic, takes this hopeful view," quoted in the Literary Digest: "If satisfaction with the past and confidence in the future are at all reliable guides, 1906 is likely to equal, if indeed it does not surpass, the year drawing to a close. The volume of orders booked ahead exceeds any previous year in the country's history, and high prices as yet seem to exercise no effect upon consumptive demand. Iron and steel of all kinds are heavily sold ahead, as are also shoes, cotton and woolen goods, lumber, hardware and a myriad of other products. Wheat enters the winter in excellent condition and with an enlarged area. Predictions as to 1906 building are even more sanguine than a year ago. In any discussion of general business prospects the sentimental effect of possible stock-market unsettlements is not to be lost sight of. That barometer of future trade has so far risen triumphantly superior to insurance scandals, impending rate legislation, trust and rebate prosecutions, revelations of some dishonest banking methods, high money, and the effect upon foreign markets of the Russian collapse. It is, however, still too early to judge of the effect upon our trade of events in that very much disturbed monarchy. It is a question whether our gains in the grain trade from this source will not much more than offset our losses in cotton. It is, perhaps, too early also to forecast the effects of the pushing to the front of labor organizations of demands for union recognition or other concessions in the coal, printing, building and other trades. Conservatism in financial affairs generally, as well as in labor matters, is the pre-eminent necessity of 1906."

For some time past it has been a mooted question as to whether under the law the work of digging the Panama Canal could be let to private contractors. This has been settled affirmatively by Attorney General Moody, and in accordance with that opinion the Commissioners, with the consent of the President, have decided to so let it, and advertise for bids. "This decided the matter, and the plans are now being formulated by the Commission to subdivide the work into sections upon which bids may be asked. Each section will be of an average length of two miles, which will enable twenty-five or thirty contractors to take part in the work. The Canal Commission has found over a hundred responsible contracting firms in the United States that are capable of undertaking the work." The construction will be under the direct control of Engineer Stevens. In an interview Mr. Stevens suggested that if the work is to be done in a reasonable length of time the eight-hour law and Chinese Exclusion Act will have to be repealed so far as Panama Isthmus is concerned.

While there was what the New York Sun calls a "Moral house-cleaning" during 1905 in Cincinnati, and throughout Ohio, in Philadelphia, and to a partial extent in New York, it is sad to think of the increase of crimes committed by individuals in every section of the country. The Chicago Tribune, having gathered statistics on the subject, gives out the following: "There were 9,212 deaths by violence, or an increase of 730 over the year 1904. A total of 9,982 committed suicide in 1905, as against 9,240 in 1904." The number of divorces, cases of arson or larceny or highway robbery, bank wrecking and other serious offenses are not given. But in the aggregate they mount high up into the thousands, and are continually on the increase. We are far from our ideal as a people. In the matter of lynching there is some encouragement, only sixty-six having occurred last year—the lowest on record for many years.

Mr. William J. Bryan is making a tour of the world. Naturally enough, he visited the Philippines—doubtless did it on purpose. Not being unknown to the Filipinos as an anti-imperialist (the name applied to all who stood opposed to holding the islands as United States territory), the leading citizens tendered him a banquet, among them Aguinaldo. Speeches were made, some by natives, who took occasion to advocate Filipino independence. But Mr. Bryan did not commit himself on the subject. This was wise on his part. Not that he was denied the privilege of free speech, but he might have stirred the hot blood of the natives and aroused hopes, that just now have no show of being realized. Report says the Filipinos were disappointed, while the Americans present were pleased. Mr. Bryan will give the public the benefit of his observations when he returns home.

An important legal question is to be settled by the State courts of Louisiana. The question simply put is this: Is a municipal license to sell liquor in the hands of a saloon man good, in spite of the fact that the parish or district has voted against the sale of liquor? The town council of Bastrop licensed the sale, and the judge of the court has instructed the Grand Jury to indict the sellers, holding that the sale is illegal, on the ground that the parish voted against the sale. This he says must be regarded as the law until he is overruled by the Supreme Court. A similar state of things exists in Avoyelles, and also Tangipahoa Parishes, in both of which liquor is being sold under licenses granted by town councils, notwithstanding the parishes voted against the sale. In Tangipahoa the case is slightly different. The town council of Ponchatoula authorized the issuance of license. A short time afterward the Police Jury ordered a local option election for the District, which went overwhelmingly against license. The question there is: Does the action of the district make void the order of the town council, or is the town council superior to the Police Jury? It appears that the matter cannot be settled short of the Supreme Court of the State.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE REPORTS

Legal Conference

The Legal Conference presents the following report:

First—We desire to submit to the Conference the report of the special committee of the Legal Conference relative to the suit recently conducted relative to Centenary College. This report is herewith submitted, including the judgment of the Court.

The Conference is hereby requested to provide for the expenses of this suit, viz., the sum of $146.93.

Your Board has also passed a vote of thanks to Judge John Clegg for gratuitous professional services as our attorney. We request the Conference to concur in this.

F. N. PARKER,
Secretary Legal Conference.

ORPHANAGE BOARD.

The Orphanage Board of the Louisiana Annual Conference respectfully present the following report:

Our agent, C. C. Wier, reports that he has raised in cash and subscriptions up to date $4,601.60, the larger part of which has not yet been collected. He has been much hindered during part of the year by quarantines.

During a part of 1904 he acted as agent without salary. He has been compensated for his service during 1905 at the rate of $100 per month during the time prior to his appointment to Natchitoches charge. His accounts have been audited and are found to be correct. The agent has been authorized to invest $2,500 in a cottage property to be used as a temporary home for orphans, the same to be sold and reinvested when enough money is secured for a permanent home.

Mr. H. H. White has been appointed a committee to prepare a charter of incorporation for the Board.

We respectfully present the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we request the Bishop to reappoint C. C. Wier as agent for Orphanage Board.

"Resolved, That our agent be welcomed within the bounds of our charges, and given cordial opportunity for public and private solicitation of funds, at whatever time during the year suits his convenience.

"Resolved, That Richard Wilkinson be elected a member of the Orphanage Board in place of H. W. Rickey." R. H. WYNN, Secretary.

JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE.

(No. 2.)

After due consideration of the suggestion embraced in the resolution adopted by the Conference and referred to our Board for action, pertaining to the securing of homes for our superannuated preachers, we beg leave to submit the following report:

First—That the committee, consisting of the President, the Treasurer, and Agent of the Board, is authorized to accept donations in cash or property, to solicit for same, to plan, arrange, locate, and contract for erection and equipment of said homes.

Second—That it shall be the duty of the Agent to keep the needs of this movement before the public, visit property, and investigate titles to same whenever necessity requires, and in every way to forward the movement.

Third—We further recommend that Rev. R. W. Vaughan be appointed Agent to represent this Board.

Fourth—It is understood that the title to all properties acquired for the purposes herein specified shall be in the name of the Conference.

CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

To the Bishop and Members of the Louisiana Annual Conference:

Dear Brethren: We, your Committee on Publications, have endeavored to consider carefully the important question of religious literature, and to estimate the extent to which the interests of the Church are being served by our periodicals and publications.

The subject is as complex as important, and its satisfactory solution has not yet been accomplished.

The diffusion of knowledge is much wider than formerly, and a remarkably high standard of culture obtains among the people called Methodists.

It is no longer possible for a church periodical to please its constituency with a dash of local color, as one amuses a child with gaudy tints, or rally men to its standard by a bare plea for loyalty. Excellence of mechanical execution, wealth of thought in the presentation of religious truth, vigorous and elegant expression, these are the things that establish the popularity of a Conference organ.

Orthodoxy itself may become stale and unpalatable if not well seasoned with the spices of life.

The "way our fathers trod" commonly needs new paving, and most certainly we should not wear their shoes.

The Church paper must have continuous growth in merit if its circulation is to be increased or even sustained.

This appears to be the inexorable law of its life.

We have examined copies of the following periodicals:

The Nashville Advocate, the Quarterly Review, the New Orleans Advocate, the Epworth Era, and the Sunday School literature.

In large and gratifying measure these publications are meeting the demands of our membership for high class religious literature, and merit both praise and patronage.

As to the official organ of the Louisiana Annual Conference, we recommend the consistent and honest efforts by the editor and publisher to give us a first-class Church paper.

No one man is responsible for its failure and lack of excellence, mechanical or otherwise.

The recent improvements are timely, and we trust this progress shall not cease until the paper is in every way worthy of the great Church which it represents.

The way to better things is not perhaps a pleasant path. Nor may we hope to approximate perfection even in religious journalism by a process of negation.

The three patronizing Conferences are responsible for the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The initiative is with these bodies. And the Louisiana Annual Conference should not hesitate to assume in full measure its share of the responsibility.

The vital interests of the Church are involved. The Methodist people of Louisiana are not reading the Conference organ, and we do not believe that the fault is primarily with the preachers or the people, but with the paper.

If the commendable changes already made in the paper are phophecies, then let their fulfillment be most speedy.

We present for your consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the Publishing Committee be requested to make the subscription price one dollar per annum.

"That the Publishing Committee of this Conference be instructed to secure, if possible, the consolidation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Alabama Christian Advocate."

"Resolved, That we request the publisher of The New Orleans Christian Advocate to secure a club rate with the Quarterly Review, the Nashville Advocate, the Epworth Era and Go Forward.

"Resolved, That we request the agents of the Publishing House to form a club, including all of their own periodical publications.

"Resolved, That the Publishing Committee of the Louisiana Conference is hereby instructed to arrange for a call meeting of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate for the consideration of the resolutions herein presented and which may affect their duties.

"Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be and is hereby memorialized to take such action as it may deem necessary for the consolidation of the various Christian Advocates of the Church, in order that we may have fewer and better papers.

W. E. BOGGS, Chairman.

SUNDAY SCHOOL REPORT.

Your Board regrets that they cannot this year report an increase in the collections and in the number of schools observing Children's Day, and request that the pastors so far as possible observe the same during the current year. To aid you in so doing, the Board will furnish to any pastor so desiring a full supply of Children's Day programmes, provided a collection is taken and the amount remitted to the Conference Treasurer.

We commend to you the Sunday school literature of our Church and call your attention to its new dress and marked general improvement. Our Intermediate Quarterlies, Teachers' Magazine and Children's Visitor so far as we know have no superior. The Children's Visitor is a healthy, clean, religious educational sheet, shock full of wholesome reading for young and old. It has now passed the 100,000 mark in circulation and should be far more widely circulated. The Home Department is a valued adjunct to Sabbath school work and we commend it to the consideration of our pastors.

We recommend that the pastors place the Missionary Libraries, Section A and B, in every Sunday school as a circulating medium for the missionary educating of our young people. The Study Circle is growing slowly, but surely, having now reached in numbers some 10,000, and we know nothing which will accomplish more for our schools in the intelligent directing of the same, and hope that classes shall be formed all over our State.

Your Board has voted to the work conducted by Rev. J. L. Sutton in the convict camps of the State all the Bibles and hymn books asked for, with a full supply of Sunday school literature, and suggest that in taking your Children's Day collections you make use of this fact to increase their size.

The Board is glad to report that arrangements have been effected for four Sunday school institutes to be held within the State during the month of March at the following centers: New Orleans, Lafayette, Mansfield and Ruston, and we request the following committees to take charge of all local arrangements: For New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts, at New Orleans, J. R. Westerfield, W. W. Carre, J. B. Kent, W. S. Hohner and I. D. Wall; for Crowley and lower half of Alexandria Districts, Brother Singleton, of Lafayette Church, A. M. Mayo, H. N. Pharr, W. T. Holloman and R. E. Bobbet; for Arcadia and Monroe Districts, O. B. Staples, G. G. Gill, John M. Davies, J. B. Reily and T. G. Reily; for Shreveport and upper end of Alexandria Districts, J. C. Roberts, L. A. Cooley, J. C. Joyner, W. T. Holloman, and R. E. Bobbet.

These institutes will be conducted by Dr. Jas. Atkins and Dr. and Mrs. Hamil.

We urge all pastors to do their utmost to secure the attendance of their Sunday school workers and shall depend upon the Presiding Elders to aid in all ways possible.

In closing our report we would urge upon our pastors the claims of the children and suggest an annual revival service in the school, closing with Decision Day. Respectfully,

JNO. F. FOSTER,
Chairman of Board.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The report of the General Board on the fall opening of the schools under our control and those affiliated reporting shows an enrollment of 5,597 new students and 14,192 total enrollment.

Four colleges, ninety-four secondary institutions and eight affiliated schools did not report. Nearly all the secondary institutions not reporting are under the charge of the Board of Missions.

Vanderbilt University, Tennessee.—The chief items of interest connected with the university are our plans for rebuilding. You know our main building was destroyed by fire April 20, 1905, occasioning a loss not only of the main building itself, but of the library and our laboratories of physics and chemistry. The total loss amounted to about $275,000. Against this, we had insurance of $115,000. The amount of salvage in the building and contents cannot be accurately estimated. The value of apparatus and books saved was comparatively slight. The walls of the building have turned out to be in better shape than we feared, and will be worth much in rebuilding. Subscriptions amounting to $50,000 or more were made by citizens of Nashville. Our alumni led the way in this movement and subscribed $15,000 to the above amount. The faculty, students and alumni from a distance are all doing what they can. Several thousand dollars more will be added from this source. Other friends have also promised to help and we believe the university will be in a stronger position when our work of rebuilding is completed than it was before the fire. We are now engaged in restoring the burnt building and also in erecting a chemical laboratory. This latter building will be erected largely out of funds left the university by the late Mrs. Mary H. Furman, of Nashville, Tenn. The receipts from the Furman estate will be supplemented by other funds, so as to make possible the erection of a building sufficient for our needs. We are making plans also for the erection of a library, but we have as yet no funds in hand for the purpose. No present need of the university is so great as an endowment for library purposes and money sufficient to erect a suitable building.

Of our Conference school, Mansfield Female College, we regret to se that owing to the yellow fever and the continued quarantine and the general failure of crops, that attendance from a distance has materially decreased, though the local patronage is the best in any of its recent history. The new building was completed this year at a cost of a little less than $15,000. There remains a debt of $8,756. Of the subscriptions made by the citizens of Mansfield there remains due $6,610, some of which never can be collected. Of the $2,500 special very little has been paid up to date. The Assessor of DeSoto Parish listed the school for taxation at a valuation of $20,000. The Board has employed C. M. Edam, Esq., as attorney, and will resist the taxation by all legal means.

The Board recommends the payment of $600 to President Sligh for the support of the beneficiaries for the past session.

The Board also has appropriated the balance that may remain after the paying of other obligations to Board of Trustees, to be expended on the liquidation of the debt.

The Board has appropriated $299 to pay the Board of Trustees of Centenary College for beneficiaries of the Conference up to last June, as per resolution of last annual Conference.

The Board recommends the appropriation of $50 for expenses in connection with the Preachers' Institute.

The Board recommends that the Board of Education pay tuition in the Correspondence School of any undergraduate unable to pay for same, if said party is recommended by his P. E. and confirmed by the Board.

The Board appropriates the necessary sum to meet the expense of the Secretary and the Commission which visited Shreveport.

The Board appropriates the sum of $146.95 to pay the costs of the Centenary suit, provided the Conference refers it to the Board of settlement.

The assessment upon this Conference by and for the General Board is $330.

The Board recommends the non-acceptance of the assessment by the General Board of the assessment of $330 for Paine and Lane Institute by a very narrow margin.

The Board recomends by a majority of one the appointment of C. C. Miller as President of Centenary College, and Thos. Carter and H. B. Carre as professors Vanderbilt University; A. A. Bernard and J. W. Reid as students in Vanderbilt University, and M. H. Honeycut as student in Millsaps, and that C. B. Carter be appointed Conference Secretary of Education.

The assessment for education for this year is placed at $4,500, to be put upon the various districts in the same way and manner and proportion as the other collections of the Conference.

Profs. Thos. Carter and H. B. Carre and Rev. R. H. Wynn are nominated as Committee on Preachers' Institute.

J. M. HENRY, President.

REPORT, BOARD OF MISSIONS.

To the Bishop and Members of the Louisiana Annual Conference: Dear Brethren: Your Conference Board of Missions is compelled to announce a very serious falling off in the collections ordered by the Conference for Mission work. Last year we paid $7,576.61 for Foreign Missions; this year we have contributed only $5,803.80. For Domestic Missions we collected $4,232.37 in 1904; this year the total amount of our collections for this purpose is $3,859.60. For both Home and Foreign Missions we have given a little less than 30 cents per capita. This presents a condition truly deplorable, when we consider the demands of the territory which we occupy and the needs of the fields where the foreign missionaries are laboring in the face of almost insuperable difficulties. Should eight or ten annual conferences fall as far behind in this respect as our Conference has, the whole work of our parent Board of Missions would be seriously injured. We appeal to you not on the basis of your loyalty to the Church, but on the ground of your love for the Lord Jesus Christ. We urge the pastors to preach upon the subject of missions, and especially to emphasize the crying needs in our own great State. We believe that every single charge can, and, beyond question, should pay the missionary assessments in full. It ought to be the ambition of every preacher in this Conference to come to the support of the missionary at home and abroad. The preacher is the party who can do most, and who must be responsible for success or failure at this point.

The assessment placed upon the Conference this year for Foreign Missions is $8,470, and for Domestic Missions $6,500. This will require about 46 cents from each member of our Church. Shall we not make every effort to pay this to the very last cent?

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to begin our missionary collections at the very beginning of the year, and to raise, if possible, the whole amount assessed within the first quarter of the Conference year.

We respectfully call the attention of the presiding elders to Paragraph 361 of the Discipline, which reads:

"It shall be the duty of the presiding elder to preach on the subject of missions annually in each charge in the district to see that efficient and well-defined plans be adopted for raising missionary funds, and to conduct with his preachers a missionary institute early in the Conference year, and see that they hold missionary mass meetings."

We call the attention of the presiding elders to the fact that this paragraph is mandatory and advisory.

Your Board requests the appointment of N. E. Joyner as Conference Secretary of Missions.

Respectfully submitted,

N. E. JOYNER, Sec'y.

THE MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

The Missionary Institute which was held by the Woman's Foreign and Home Mission Boards in Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, with the definite aim of inspiring enthusiasm in the women of this section of the Southland, came to a close on the night of January 19. Never before have we of New Orleans had brought so clearly before us the conditions and needs in foreign lands, the indifferent attitude of our Southern women (ourselves) to the slavery of little children in mills, factories and mines in our own land, and the dangers that threaten our church and our commonwealth through the illiterate, superstitious and degraded immigrants who come to our shore in ever-increasing numbers.

The Institute opened Tuesday morning, Jan. 16, and was presided over jointly by two of the most prominent leaders of the women's organizations of the M. E. Church, South—Miss Belle H. Bennett, President of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, and Mrs. J. B. Cobb, Associate Secretary of the Foreign Board.

The programme was arranged to cover every phase of mission work, and no one session was given wholly to either department of the work, with the exception of the night sessions, when only one speaker addressed the assembly. Each day at noon Miss Bennett led the Bible study, taking for her theme the minor prophets. We will not attempt to follow the programme further than to mention many clear and able papers, which deserve great credit.

Mrs. Cobb made the opening address, taking for her subject the "Aim and Scope of the Inspiration" and said that it was hoped that additional inspiration and broad development of missionary work and Bible study might flow from the present conference of missionary workers. Mrs. Cobb made several fine talks during the Institute, not the least telling of which was the one on Thursday afternoon, when she told of her experiences of her recent trip through Mexico and Cuba. She visited in those countries the schools which are conducted by the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions. She told of the debased condition of the people, who have been reared in the tenets of the Roman Catholic Church as interpreted for them by the Spaniards. Mrs. Cobb has been identified with the missionary movements of the Church all of her life, and has given years of unremitting toil for their success. She is a noble, consecrated woman, and her Bible lessons will long be remembered.

Among the most attractive speakers for foreign work were Miss Alice Waters and Miss L. Glenn. Miss Waters has been three years in China, where she was in charge of the school at Sung-Kong. This school has an attendance of about 300 Chinese girls. Miss Waters spoke many words of encouragement about the work in China. They have had a number of conversions in the school, and Christianity is spreading in the Chinese Empire, and so effective has been the work of the missionaries, that China herself views the results with astonishment.

Miss Glenn has spent thirteen years in Brazil, and has charge of much of the work that is being done there. She told of the schools that have been established, and the great good the missionaries are doing among all classes in Brazil, as they are patronized not only by the poorer classes, but the daughters of some of the most influential citizens, attend the schools taught by the American missionaries.

Mrs. W. H. Pittman and Miss Mabel Head gave many interesting and helpful suggestions as to methods of interesting juveniles and young people in missions and securing their co-operation.

Miss Belle Kearney, who has just returned from a tour of the world, told of "Mission Fields from the Point of View of an Outsider." The keynote of her address was, "The gauge of a religion or a civilization is the place it assigns to woman." Measured by this rule, she showed how sadly lacking are all but the Christian religion. As she portrayed the shocking picture of the social condition of woman in China, India and Japan, no one present could fail to realize the duty and the immediate necessity for sending the glorious Gospel to uplift these down-trodden and benighted women.

The central thought that pervaded every address and every paper given by the Home Mission Society was, What is the solution of the social and industrial problems that confront the South to-day? What these problems are was set forth in a series of talks and papers, the first delivered by Rev. P. O. Lowery, dealing with the "Foreigner in Rural Districts." It is a well-known fact that the Italian is becoming a factor in the laboring market of the rural district, where he is fast displacing the negro in the cotton and cane fields, and even in the saw mills. Mr. Lowery made a strong plea for schools in the country for Italian children, as education was the best method of raising them morally, mentally and spiritually.

Miss Estelle Haskin, a graduate of Scarritt School, and for some years a practical worker in the Settlement Home in Dallas, told of what has been done in a practical way with tangible results in other cities. She was followed by Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, whose paper on the "Foreigners in New Orleans," gave some startling facts about our own city. Much of her paper was devoted to the Italians, and she told of their illiteracy and false standards of living, their ignorance of sanitary laws, their superstition and their faith. She told of districts in this city where Italians are living, herded together like beasts, families of eight and ten cooking, eating and sleeping in one room, surrounded by filth unspeakable and odors indescribable, with an utter disregard for all laws of health and sanitation. The religious and moral destitution of the foreigners in our midst is appalling.

Professor Owen Lovejoy, Assistant Secretary of the National Child Labor Association, made the closing address. He told the sad story of child labor in the midst of the most prosperous sections of this country. Many an eye filled with pity for the little sufferers as he described them under 13 years of age, toiling in the breakers, the mills, or the glass factories ten hours a day. Graphically he pictured the wan, thin faces and stunted, half-nourished figures of the children, who were being cheated out of their birthright by rich and powerful corporations.

Now we have more than overstepped the prescribed limits of this article, and must close without telling of the fine address of Miss Bennett, who, for an hour and a quarter, held her audience spell-bound, while she told the history and work of the Home Mission Society; or of the masterly way in which Dr. Aldrich treated a "Layman's Solution of City Problems." Neither have we touched on Bishop Morrison's brilliant sermon on the opening night, or Miss Helm's fine paper on "Social and Industrial Conditions," nor Miss Sophie Wright's appeal to girls.

A description of the Institute would truly be incomplete without mention of the exhibit. While the walls of the church were hung with maps, charts and illustrations, the Sunday School room was fairly transformed into a museum, where many curios from China, Corea, Mexico and Brazil were displayed. Costumes of every degree of fineness, from the dress of the peasant to the regalia of the noble, were exhibited. Shoes, books, fans, rich tapestries, laces, hand-paintings and fine sewing were spread to view alongside of pottery, heathen gods and idols. The Home Mission Society had an exhibit, too, consisting of pictures of institutional work, kindergartens, boys' clubs, etc., much of this exhibit being sent by Dr. Josiah Strong, of Chicago.

Much enthusiasm was displayed at these meetings, and it is earnestly hoped that the impressions made, the aspirations felt, and the lessons learned may crystallize into active service of ever-widening influence.

RELIGIONS OF MISSION FIELDS AS VIEWED BY PROTESTANT MISSIONARIES. New York: Student Volunteer Movement, 1905. 300 pp., cloth, 50c; paper, 35c.

With the constantly increasing interest taken in distant parts of the world the study of racial environment and advancement is likewise growing. Even the subject of missions, formerly regarded as important among a few especially zealotis Christians only, is before the public as never before. A tangible proof of this latter statement is found in the fact that within the past nine months fully 125,000 mission study text-books have been sold and used by students in some 400 colleges and universities and by classes made up of women and young people of every Christian denomination.

This book will be of help to all who desire to study the different religions of the earth.

LITERARY NOTE.

Probably no story that Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has written for a number of years has excited so much interest as the Christmas story concluded in the January number of Scribner's Magazine, entitled "The Dawn of a To-morrow." It deals with a very pressing question of the times—the need for an interest in something besides mere money-getting and the pursuit of selfish ends. In this second part the author recounts the further enlightening experiences of Anthony Dart in a typical East London district, and in an intensely dramatic situation shows the influence upon the depressed and hopeless of a sincere belief in the effectual power of Christianity. The story is a powerful human document with the real note of genius.

ADDRESS OF BISHOP C. B. GALLOWAY

At the Funeral of Bishop Keener, Sunday Afternoon January 21, 1906.

We bury to-day one of the most remarkable men in all the Southwest. An ecclesiastical leader of rare gift and vast influence, a preacher of apostolic spirit and power, and an eminent citizen of passionate patriotism and undaunted heroism, who made for himself a large but unique place in the story of his times. There was a charm in the originality of his genius and an awe in the grandeur of his character, and a splendor in the power of his personality and a flavor in the quaintness of his humor and a surprise in the vastness and variety of his public services that together produced a man worthy of high place in America's Hall of Fame. There were some notes in the psalm of his life that rarely fall upon the ear of the world. There are some lessons in the toils and triumphs of his great soul that will make him an inspiration to every generation of reverent and aspiring spirits. We had nothing like him. In many respects he dwelt apart—a star of the first magnitude—a genius without genealogy. The sudden going away of this remarkable man—our venerable and venerated father in Israel—gives us all a strange sense of orphanage. We were accustomed to seek his counsel and listen for his voice. Though for several years he had retired from active superintendency in the Church, we had his inspiring presence and felt the touch of his steadying and guiding hand.

Most of Bishop Keener's great life was bound up with the city of New Orleans. Into the texture of his very being he wrought his noble history. He mixed his richest blood in the mortar that cemented the stones of its vast structure from deep foundation to lofty dome.

This was the scene of his hardest toils and his greatest triumphs—his deepest sorrows and his highest joys. Here were his most sacred treasures, and here his own ashes should gently rest.

During the past fifty years the two most conspicuous figures in the pulpit of New Orleans were Dr. B. M. Palmer and Bishop John C. Keener. Differing widely in their superb gifts and distinguishing characteristics, yet strongly alike in most of the qualities that gave each greatness and the virtues that make them immortal, they would have been premiers in any cabinet, leaders of any host, stars of the first magnitude in any skies. For fifty years they fought and wrought together in the same city of their brotherly love, and through the eternities they will rejoice together in that other city, without foundations, whose walls are jasper and whose streets are pure gold.

Nearly sixty years ago two young itinerant Methodist preachers were sent to the city of New Orleans to take up the work which had tested the fiber and almost broken the heart of other apostolic men. They were cultured, consecrated young men, whose faith had never been weakened by bitter reverses and whose courage had never been foiled in life's fierce battle. They were full of hope and high resolve. One was a graduate of Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., with the impress of Wilbur Fisk upon his strong character; the other a graduate of Randolph-Macon College, with the name of Landon C. Garland on his diploma. One was John C. Keener, the other was Holland N. McTyeire. Both became historic men. Both were editors of the "New Orleans Christian Advocate," and both were bishops of conspicuous ability and commanding influence. Closely united in their confidential friendships and connectional responsibilities, they must be near together in the companionship of the skies. Of his honored colleague and his self-sacrificing labors in this city, Bishop McTyeire thus wrote in his "History of Methodism:"

"The systematic and comprehensive plans laid and carried out by Dr. John C. Keener date an epoch in the present New Orleans Methodism. He was appointed by Bishop Paine pastor of Poydras Street Church in 1848, met the yellow fever, and outlived it in 1849, and has since resided in the city, a witness and, under God, the chief director of the prosperous condition of its Methodism."

It is not my purpose to give even in outline the eloquent story of a long and really great life, or follow the triumphal steps of a brilliant history. In those glorious four score years and seven there are thrilling facts and historic incidents enough for an immortal volume. Born in Baltimore in 1819, with the richest Teutonic blood in his veins; endowed with genius; educated at Wilbraham, Mass., and Middletown, Ct.; entering upon business life as a wholesale druggist; called to the ministry, a member of the Alabama Conference; transferred to New Orleans, where he was pastor and presiding elder; Chaplain in the Confederate Army; editor of the "New Orleans Christian Advocate;" a Bishop of the Church; founder of the missions in Mexico, and the inspiring advocate or strong leader of all our great connectional enterprises, are the bare facts of well-nigh a century. Through all those eventful years he was everywhere conspicuous and always distinguished.

Not the story of a great life will I attempt to give at this solemn hour, but some estimate of a masterful man. There are lessons in that apostolic life worthy of all emulation.

His life embraced the most tempestuous period of our ecclesiastical and national history, and for fifty years he was a conspicuous actor therein. The year after he entered the ministry in Alabama the memorable General Conference of 1844 was held, which resulted in the division of the Church. Then came years of contention and litigation, followed by four years of war; these to be succeeded by the bitter period of reconstruction. Happily before the hour of his going the era of peace had dawned, with a spirit of reunion in the nation and of fraternity, and federation in the Church.

A few of the characteristics which so strikingly distinguished this great man I venture to recount. He was a magestic personality. His massive frame was a fitting home for his stalwart character. In all his physical, as well as mental movements, he had the tread of a giant and the stride of a commander. His very appearance was suggestive of serious purpose and rugged honesty and fearless courage. As he so graphically described Bishop Johsua Soule, the Wellington of American Methodism, and his ecclesiastical prototype, so may we say of Bishop John C. Keener —"his was a character of colossal proportions, grand without infirmities."

There was strength in every sinew and steel in every nerve, and iron in every drop of blood. He had the head of a commander. His wonderful face was a study for artists; suggestive of genius and a revelation of granite character. Who can ever forget it? His large hand was made to wield the battle ax of Richard, rather than the light sword of Saladin. There was authority in the tones of his voice; and majesty in the sweep of the imperial thought.

In all his movements he reminded me of some great ocean liner, walking the seas with as firm a tread when lashed into fury by a storm as when placidly shimmering like a lake under a cloudless, starlit sky.

He did everything grandly, whether preaching to a vast congregation on some majestic theme, or delivering a missionary address on some notable occasion, or officially presiding over some high senate of the Church, or expounding some constitutional principle or policy in the councils of his colleagues, or driving an ox team over the prairies into Texas during the war with his family to escape the Federal armies. He could not do or say a commonplace thing. I doubt if Bishop Keener ever entered any company, whether conference or convention or congregation, that he was not instantly and universally accorded a chief seat.

When shall we look again upon such a towering personality? His very presence stirred every sentiment of the sublime. He made one think of high themes and turn his eye upward toward the shining summits. His was the majesty of a mountain, scarred, it may be, from summit to granite base, but unshaken in its deep foundations, and calmly oblivious of every storm and scudding cloud.

Another distinguished quality of this masterful man was his decision of character. A man of his positive nature could not long remain in doubt or suspense about anything that involved personal conduct or character. However patient and painstaking the processes of his investigations, when conclusions were reached they were clear-cut and final. From them he rarely ever took appeal and not often found occasion for reargument. Never hasty in judgment, it was not easy to revise well-formed opinion. He knew his own mind, and others could not fail to understand him. Positive in conviction, he was emphatic in statement if not dogmatic in utterance. Nobody ever thought of him as a man in soft raiment or as a reed shaken by the wind. He wore the garb of a spiritual and mental mountaineer, and the authoritative notes of his silver trumpet rang out loud and clear on the morning air. There was nothing in him of the Brother Pliable. He was little affected by the size or noise of the multitude. His conclusions had been reached without regard to their popularity—their acceptance or rejection by others. He loved the confidence and approval of his brethren, but would not sacrifice a conviction or surrender an honest judgment in order to secure it.

But, while tenacious of opinion, he was not intolerant in spirit. Indeed, he had respect, even to admiraton, for those who differed with him if their views were strongly supported.

On one occasion, discussing in his own masterly and philisophical way that mystical character of the far-away time, he said: "Job always fought in a dark room." So, alone with God and in the solemn councils of his own great intellect, did this mighty man solve the problems of life and work out the basal principles to which his eternal hopes were securely anchored. That gave him calm confidence and clear decision and unshaken purpose.

One of his well-known and most striking characteristics was his inflexibility of purpose. He had an imperial will that no discouragements could daunt and no obstacles could thwart. It seemed to challenge impossibilities. He appeared a stranger to discouragement and innocent of the sense of despair. If defeated, he never knew it or refused to acknowledge it. That gave him a Napoleonic courage in the prosecution of an enterprise that compelled admiration of the man if not approval of his plans. When the night was darkest, he proclaimed with loudest voice his unshaken faith in a more hopeful morning. Before the ashes of war had cooled, standing amidst the smoking and tumultuous ruins of fire and tempest, he sounded a trumpet and announced the resurrection of our Southern Methodism.

And this same spirit he carried into every cause he espoused and every duty assigned. If he saw any lions in his path, he never ran from them or walked around them.

Bishop Keener was an ecclesiastical statesman of rare prescience and high courage, but of a most pronounced and aggressive conservative type. He had scant patience with any suggested change that did not assure improvement. For mere experiments in legislation he had instinctive antagonism. The discipline under which the fathers wrought such mighty things he thought should be handled with great care. Only less grand to him than the ark of God was the discipline of his Church. While in no sense an idolator of the past, he would not surrender any measure the wisdom of which had been so marvelously vindicated by unexampled success. The great constitutional safeguards of our polity he watched with a sleepless and godly jealousy.

No doubt his highest efficiency as a great ecclesiastical leader was sometimes seriously affected by his excessive conservatism. We cannot undervalue the pressing needs and inevitable changes of the growing years. To recognize things and adjust our legislation and administration thereto is the demand of wisdom and the logic of history.

But we cannot withhold admiration for one who stands for something. In these days of a shifting expediency and a nimble diplomacy and knight-errancy it is at once refreshing and inspiring to feel the sturdy strength and independence of a man.

In his last address to the General Conference he reaffirmed with emphasis his adherence to our great ecclesiastical polity in these words:

"Having had opportunity for so long a time to know and estimate our connectional system, I wish to record my testimony to its value—a system that places a pastor in every church and provides a church for every pastor; that penetrates every neighborhood, preaches at every crossroads, builds a church in every village, and reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, keeps up with the pioneer, and includes the Indian reservations; a system in which thousands of ministers are annually appointed to go and none refuse, often going to a work with only a name, and financially naked as a rock, but returning in a year with sheaves of precious converts, a circuit established, a church and parsonage built. Such a patriarchal military system could only have been the outgrowth of the divine influence that made Mr. Wesley the spiritual father of his people and guided him in shaping connectional Methodism, which he held to be as essential for efficiency as the doctrines which he preached."

Bishop Keener was passionately devoted to the system in which his long and noble life was set. He was intensely and aggressively Southern in every fiber of his being. Though born in Baltimore and educated in New England, his profoundest sympathies were with the social and political and ecclesiastical ideals of the far South. And to the end of his long and checkered life that devotion never knew the slightest variableness or shadow of turning. On the issues that first divided the Church and then the nation his opinions became his deepest convictions, and these convictions were but slightly affected by the lapse of years.

For personal injuries he never harbored resentment, but for wrongs against a cause or a people he allowed small room for repentance and had little hope of amendment. While, doubtless, he recognized a Providence in the results of our civil war, and rejoiced in a restored peace and reunited country, he resented the slightest imputation upon the motives of his people, and never apologized for a single act; and in these intense convictions he was, if possible, more firmly fixed by the agonies and horrors of reconstruction in the South.

He was a man of marvelously brilliant gifts—gifts that would have distinguished him in any land or age of the world. His genius was many-sided, and each flashed with a splendor all its own. He had poetic genius, without the technique of the poet. Undoubtedly the divine afflatus was his. Many of his sermons were prose poems, and all his utterances betokened a soul into whom the muses had sung—and yet a philosophical cast of mind. The grasp and sweep of his thought indicated a man who was acquainted with grove and academy.

And who could ever forget the brilliancy of his wit or the sparkle of his humor? Had he not restrained, he might have rivaled the best things of Sydney Smith or Jonathan Swift.

He had a strangely alert and eager mind that continued its search for knowledge up to the day of his going away.

Like the great Mr. Gladstone, who at 86 issued an annotated edition of Butler's Analogy and wrote metrical translations of Homer, this veteran of the South displayed all the mental alertness and eagerness of his ardent young manhood. He prepared two volumes for the press and imported the freshest books from foreign shores.

As an author he won enduring fame. In earlier life he wrote a book that has become a Methodist classic, and will so remain as long as covetousness is to be scourged and the stewardship of wealth needs a conscience. Had he never written another line, the author of "Post Oak Circuit" would be accorded a high place among the leaders of modern Christian thought.

Bishop Keener was a great preacher—one of the greatest I ever heard—though not what is known as a popular preacher. He lacked those histrionic talents that please the multitude, and was too serious a soul to amuse the galleries. He was a man with a message, and often spoke with a tongue of flame. He only discussed great themes—doctrines that were vital and eternal. Those who ever heard his great sermons on the Temptation of Jesus, the Resurrection, the Transfiguration, or on Ezekiel's Vision of the Valley of dry Bones, can never forget his master deliverances and their profound impression. At the General Conference of 1870 he was elected to the high office of a Bishop in the Church of God. In that exalted position his genius shown with an unwonted brilliancy, and in the discharge of its sacred duties his great name will reach most undying fame.

For twenty-eight active years he bore its heavy burdens, and met its exacting and multifarious responsibilities with lability and conspicuous fidelity that demonstrated his worthiness to be a successor of the apostolic men whose names he cherished and whose illustrious examples he daily emulated. He had the missionary fervor of Francis Asbury, the rigid adherence to constitutional law of William McKendree and the consistent and persistent conservatism of Joshua Soule. He magnified his apostolic office.

Throughout the Church his powerful leadership was everywhere felt. And many a long year will come and go before the silvery echoes of his mighty voice will die upon the ear of American Methodism.

However much any of us may have differed in judgment with Bishop Keener as to the wisdom of any official act or conectional policy, of one thing there was never a dissenting opinion—first and foremost he placed the interests of the Church. He never had any personal ends to serve or personal ambitions to subserve. All his concern was for the apostolic Church, which was to him dearer than life. As one of his junior colleagues, grateful for a thousand courtesies, helped often by his wise counsel and inspirited by his unremitting and unselfish labors for the Church, I lay a flower of love upon his honored grave.

But above all and best of all, Bishop Keener was a deeply spiritual man. He knew by a wonderful experience the secret of the Lord. Into the highest mysteries of the spirit-world possible to a soul in this mortal life he had been graciously introduced, and with them he had large and intimate acquaintance.

He dwelt much in the realm of the unseen and communed freely with the spirit of the living God. In his sublimely beautiful farewell address to the General Conference—his last will and testament to the Church—he disclosed the depths of his own spiritual life in these wise words:

"The new birth is the keystone of the Wesleyan doctrine. This is that scriptural holiness which Mr. Wesley sought to spread throughout England and America—that the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God; that as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. My brethren, let nothing divert you from preaching this great law of life: 'Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God.' Put men in the guidance of the Holy Spirit and he will see to the rest. He will lead them through green pastures, beside still waters; he will "'Make them for some moments feast

With Jesus priests and kings.'"

His home life was beautiful. Within that sacred circle there was the genial warmth and sweet unrestraint of affectional confidence. There the dignified official presiding over ecclesiastical councils and the great preacher speaking with the sternness of a Hebrew prophet, and again with the passionate pleading of an apostle, gave way to the gentle, confiding, companionable husband and father. I never saw anything more beautiful than this venerable man of 80 years showing the same knightly attention to the mother of his children as when, more than fifty years before, he proudly led her to the bridal altar. His end came, no doubt as he would have preferred—quietly, in the afternoon of a beautiful day. For a long time he had been sitting at the gate watching the coming twilight shadows, ready to go with the going down of the sun. Every preparation had been made for the journey—even the hymns selected for this impressive service—so he stepped into the celestial chariot and went home to God. In his cottage home in which he lived so many beautiful years, near the slow-moving tides of our greatest river, he sweetly fell asleep, to awake on the bank of that other stream, clear as crystal, that flows near the throne of the King.

LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.

The following letter of condolence was sent to Dr. S. S. Keener from the Faculty of Centenary College, with which Bishop Keener had been identified as President of the Board of Trustees for many years:

Jackson, La., Jan. 20, 1906.

Dear Dr. Keener: The Faculty of Centenary College, as a body and individually, wish hereby to express to you their sincere sympathy in this great loss of your venerable father. With his going out the Church is deprived of one of her greatest bishops, the State gives up her noblest son, and Centenary College loses her right arm.

But, as so much of life is paradoxical, so his death is largely in the seeming. "He still lives." His influence pervades the life of Southern Methodism. "He grew flowers in the garden of his heart and sweetened the air with the perfume of his pure spirit."

His life gives abundant evidence that he could, with slight change, sing with Tennyson as he weighed anchor yesterday:

"Sunset and evening star;
And one clear call for me!
And now is the moaning of the bar,
As I put out to sea."

Hoping that you may understand what we cannot express of brotherly sympathy to you, and that you will extend the condolence of us all to the family, we are, fraternally yours.

THE FACULTY OF CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA. C. C. MILLER, President.
J. L. McGHEE, Secretary.

REPORT, BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

The report of Dr. P. H. Whisner, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, shows an increase in collections over last year of $7,945.44.

In our own Conference, however, there is a slight falling off, due no doubt to the very short crops in some parts of our State.

The Board would earnestly call the attention of the preachers to the importance of this great arm of our missionary work. This collection ought to be in full, as it is not a large one, and there is pressing need for every dollar of the assessment.

We had before us at this Conference applications aggregating three times as much as the money in hand to be appropriated.

We have in more than one of our former reports embodied a resolution requesting and authorizing the President of our Board to appoint a man in every district to represent the cause of Church Extension before the district conferences. The men have been appointed, but from some cause very few of them have been heard.

Again we offer for your adoption this resolution:

That the President of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension be instructed to appoint a man from every district to represent the cause of Church Extension before the district conferences, and that the presiding elders are hereby respectfully requested to set apart an hour during the district conferences for that special purpose.

The funds in hand have been appropriated as follows:

Dr. P. H. Whisner, on half collections	$939.65
Big Pecan Church	125.00
Chicot Church	100.00
Marion Church	125.00
Mangham Church	150.00
Tallulah Church	300.00
Simsboro Church	70.00
Melden Church	40.00
Church Point Church	28.00
Total appropriation	$1,877.65
Balance in treasury	1.65
Total collection	$1,879.30

The assessment to the Louisiana Conference for this year is $2,750, apportioned as follows:

New Orleans District	$384.00
Baton Rouge District	420.00
Crowley District	401.00
Alexandria District	361.00
Shreveport District	463.00
Arcadia District	419.00
Monroe District	304.00
Total	$2,750.00

Respectfully submitted,
J. L. HOFFPAUR, Sec'y.

A dear old nurse who has become deaf and nearly blind said to one who pitied her: "You are mourning for me, my dear, and there's no need: I am as happy as a child. I sometimes think I am a child, whom the Lord is hush-a-bying to my long sleep; for when I was a nurse-girl my missus told me to speak soft and low, to darken the room, that her little one might go to sleep; and now all noises are hushed and still to me; and the bonny earth seems dim and dark, and I know its my Father lulling me away to my long sleep. I am very well content, and you musn't fret for me."—The Watchword.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1906.

BISHOP JOHN C. KEENER.

Our Church is again called to mourn the death of a chief pastor. Bishop John Christian Keener died at his home in Dublin Street, New Orleans, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, Jan. 19, 1906. He was born in Baltimore, Md., Feb. 7, 1819, the son of John Christian Keener and Mary Brice. Both parents were consecrated and active Christians, and early impressed his mind and heart with the truths of our holy religion. When only 9 years of age his father placed him in Wilbraham Academy, in Massachusetts, under the care and tuition of Dr. Wilbur Fisk, one of the greatest men American Methodism ever produced. Here he remained ten years, and there can be no doubt that under the influence of Dr. Fisk his life was shaped for all the future. From the Academy he went to Wesleyan University, where he graduated in 1835. At the close of his college course he entered into business with his father, who was a wholesale druggist. At the death of his father he assumed charge of the business. He was converted and joined the Church in 1838, and in 1842 he was licensed to preach, and joined the itineraney. The same year he was married to Miss Mary Anna Spencer, of Alabama. This was a happy union, that lasted the space of sixty-one years. Eight children blessed this union. Of the eight, five were with them at the celebration of the golden jubilee—three sons and two daughters. The daughters, noble and graceful, and highly intellectual, were "polished after similitude of a palace." The sons were all preachers—not only active and useful, but prominent in the Church. Rev. Christian Keener's life was spent wholly in Louisiana. He died lamented, and a tablet to his memory is fixed in the wall of Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, which church he was instrumental in building. Dr. John O. Keener died in the prime of his life, the honored President of the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala. The only surviving child is Rev. Samuel S. Keener, D.D., of the Louisiana Conference.

Bishop Keener's work as a preacher began in Alabama. His ability was recognized in the very beginning of his career, as evidenced by the fact that he filled appointments in Tuscaloosa, Montgomery and Mobile, then, as now, foremost places in Alabama Methodism. At that date New Orleans was the hardest place to fill in the Church. Not because it was a large city, nor merely because it was the Southwestern stronghold of Romanism, but because it was looked upon as the grave-yard of preachers. None but strong, courageous and first-class men could have any hope of success in the city, and none but men of martyr spirit were sought for the place. And when they were found and acclimated, the law of the Church allowed them to remain indefinitely, the city being exempt from the operation of the time limit. Bishop Robert Paine, who had charge of the work, in looking for a man for New Orleans, fixed upon John C. Keener. But such was his knowledge and appreciation of the situation and its dangers, and such his tenderness of heart and concern for a man and his family, that he deviated from the custom of making the appointments, and notified the young preacher and his wife what he intended to do. This he did especially to save the bride a sudden shock. But the wife was as heroic as the husband, and "counted not her life dear unto herself," but forsaking all, came for Christ's sake to this great city. This was in 1848.

The young preacher had not been in the city long until, like his predecessors, he was stricken with the dreaded plague—the yellow fever. He lay at death's door, but recovered, and from that day to this he has lived in New Orleans, a period of fifty-seven years, and through all these years, in one capacity or another, he has ministered to the people—many of them, among the older ones, his own sons and daughters, in the Gospel. The foundation had been laid before his coming. The Church was in a fairly prosperous condition, but far from being strong, either in numbers or wealth. He addressed himself at once, and with all the strength of his mind and heart, to the work before him, and became at once a leader of the people, and the work greatly prospered. His first appointmnt in the city was to Poydras Street. Before the close of his first year the church building was destroyed by fire. This was a calamity. But with the insurance money obtained, and the help of the congregation, and of others living outside the city, especially of Judge Edward McGehee, of Woodville, Miss., who donated the lot and furnished much of the money for building, he succeeded in erecting the Carondelet Street Church, at that day one of the largest and most imposing church buildings in the connection.

From the date of building Carondelet Street Church Methodism in New Orleans began to flourish. A Christian Advocate was enterprised and a Book Depository was established; and as early as 1866 the Church in the city was able to entertain the General Conference. With all these undertakings John C. Keener had more or less to do. Between the years 1864 and 1870, the years known to Southern men as the years of "reconstruction"—a period of time that tried the souls of patriotic Southrons—Dr. Keener, as he was then known, served Louisiana Methodism as no other man did. Our Southland had been laid waste by war—aliens had charge of the government of the Southern States, and by order of the Secretary of War, Edwin M. Stanton, the Southern Methodist churches in New Orleans were occupied by men called "loyal preachers." The order was issued to Bishop Ames, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North), and by him our pulpits were filled with preachers from another church. Dr. Keener made a trip to Washington City, and in a personal interview with President Andrew Johnson succeeded in securing the return of our churches to their rightful owners. This was a service of great value, never to be forgotten.

From 1861 to the close of the war, Dr. Keener was Superintendent of Chaplains in the Confederate Army west of the Mississippi River. After the close of the war he returned to his loved work in the city, serving as pastor and presiding elder. In 1866 he was elected Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in which capacity he served with distinguished ability. No man wielded greater influence as Editor than he. He commanded attention. At the end of four years he was known throughout the whole Church, and in 1870, though not the most conspicuous man as a talker on the floor of the General Conference, he was the most influential. It was at this Conference that he was elevated to the Episcopacy, being elected by a small majority over the most popular preacher in the Church.

As everywhere else, so among the Bishops, he was known as a strong man. Long before he became the senior member of the Board he ranked among the foremost. As an executive officer he was equal to the best. As a preacher he had few superiors. His sermons were thoroughly prepared—they were masterpieces. They were often profound—too much so for the hearer of average intelligence, but not infrequently they were so clear and forcible as to be overwhelming. The finest definition and elucidation of the subject of prayer we ever heard was from his lips. And who ever heard him with any degree of attention on the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, and on the parable of the prodigal son, can never forget. The one he denominated, "God's call to repentance from the hell-ward side;" the other, "God's call to repentance from the Heavenward side." They were great sermons.

As a General Superintendent he traveled all over the Church, and was interested in every department of the work. He was painstaking in making the appointments, being always as much concerned for the churches as for the men who were to supply them. Soon after his election as Bishop he projected a mission in Mexico, and became much attached to it. He enlisted others in its welfare, and secured money sufficient to buy ground and establish a church in the city of Mexico, the largest amount being contributed by his life-long friend, Mr. R. M. Walmsley, of New Orleans. The Mary Keener Institute of Mexico, in which he took much interest, was named after his sainted wife.

From 1870 to 1898 Bishop Keener exercised the functions of his office, when, at his own request, he was relieved of active duty. Since then he has lived quietly at his home in New Orleans, occupying his time in reading and writing. He did much of both. During the time he has published one book, and, if we mistake not, he left another ready for the printer. The reading of his last year was of the highest order — the latest books on Biblical criticism. He has pointed out to the writer several times the fallacies of the destructive critics. The higher critics of this order he could not tolerate with the least degree of allowance.

During these last days he not only lived quietly, but happily. The writer, who has been associated with him during the past five years, and two years of that time his next-door neighbor, knows something of his feelings and prospects in view of death. The matter was frequently the subject of conversation. The sting of eath had long since been extracted. Something ver two years ago he had a spell of bleeding at he nose—an affliction that carried his mother nd one or two other members of the family to he grave. After recovering from the attack he told the writer that he would likely go that way himself. He did barely escape. And said the good Bishop: "It is an easy way to die."

On the morning of Jan. 19, 1906, his friend and family physician, Dr. E. L. McGehee, was at his home, having called at the Bishop's request. There were some matters of business about which he desired to consult the Doctor. During the consultation, about 10 o'clock a.m., he arose to get a document from his desk. Just as he got upon his feet his heart failed, and, placing his hand on his chest, gasped: "O, I am in such pain here!" Dr. McGehee and his ever-faithful granddaughter, Miss Mary Wilkinson, gently eased him to the floor. Restoratives were applied, and he soon rallied, and for a while seemed entirely relieved. Dr. McGehee remained with him until 2 o'clock, and left him in care of an experienced nurse. In about two hours he was attacked again, and before a physician could reach him he passed away. And a great man and prince in Israel went to his reward.

The funeral exercises were conducted at Carrollton Avenue Church on Sunday at 3 p.m., and were attended by a large concourse of people. The simple and impressive ritual of the Church only was used, the address being made by Bishop Charles B. Galloway, and prayer was offered by Dr. W. H. LaPrade, of Jackson, Miss. The same hymns sung at the funeral of the Bishop's wife more than two years ago were used on the occasion, the Bishop having made request to that effect. They were finely rendered by singers from several of the city churches, who were led by Prof. T. O. Adams. The interment took place at Washington Cemetery, where rest the remains of other members of the family.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

A CALL FOR AN APPOINTING POWER.

It is a little remarkable that almost simultaneously there should appear in two non-episcopal church papers a call for bishops. One article is headed, "Let Us Have Bishop-Moderators;" the other, "Shall There Be Baptist Bishops?"

What inspired these articles? There can be but one answer. The writers see so clearly the advantages of a system that gives every man a place, and every place a man, that they are willing to try it in their respective churches. These advantages can be had only under a system of general superintendency, committed to one man as in Episcopal Methodism, or to a select committee, as among some non-episcopal Methodists.

The Baptist brother is weary of seeing so many preachers out of work, traveling the country over, preaching trial sermons, and losing time. He is tired of seeing so many pastorless churches delaying to fill the vacancy, by resting awhile, or trying so many different men. He is heart-sore over the practice of rejecting good men, of long experience, because they have "committed the unpardonable sin of growing a few gray hairs." He is tired of unworthy men going into distant sections, imposing on innocent people.

In view of all the above troubles, he says: "If I had no authority but common sense for the innovation I am about to propose, I should feel myself warranted in proposing it. However, I am not without the best Scriptural authority. I can point to Paul and ask: did he not hold a position of authority among the churches he founded? Did he not send pastors to some of them? Did he not rebuke their sins and follies? Did he not command at times, as well as exhort? We have applied this Pauline principle in the administration of our great missionary organizations. No slip-shod methods are allowed there; neither do we get uncertain results. Every missionary is held responsible for his particular field. He must make a full report to headquarters every three months. Pastors are transferred or retained, according to the prayerful plan of consecrated officers; not according to the whim of some over-independent local committee. There is no loss of time hunting pastorates, and little chance for imposition by the unworthy. Wire-pulling, lobbying, political scheming are ruled out of the churches. A man stands or falls by what he has proven himself able to do. His work is the only thing that counts. Whatever changes may come to the local fields, there is always a supreme administrative body in authority. I commend such a system to the prayerful consideration of our denomination at large. We need an authoritative body. I say it fearlessly. Let the authority repose in a board of trustees, in a board of secretaries, in a bishopric, or a presbytery; I care not what the name or the form of the authoritative body is; just so we have one. The time is ripe for reform. For the betterment of our great denomination, for raising the standard of our Baptist ministry, but most of all, for the advancement and strengthening of Christ's kingdom, it is necessary that a polity so full of faults should in some way be remodeled."

The Presbyterian brother who wants "Bishop-Moderators" attributes the present growth and prospects of the Episcopal Church in New York to the "administrative strength," "oversight and control" of the Bishop and his Coadjutor. Among Presbyterians he says there is "nobody to direct affairs."

"This defect in administration crops up in our Presbyterian organization everywhere. It lies back of the vacancy and supply disability, while at the same time it lends itself to spasmodic and irresponsible leadership and control. Just within cry of my pen, in a center of learning, is a Presbyterian church—vacant for more than a year—with a people fast becoming hopeless and disintegrated because they cannot unite on a man. This center needs a strong reformed church in it. The $1,100, or more, that the people are able to pay, should be supplemented to a salary of $1,800 or $2,000—that the minister here might measure up in every way to the president of the normal school, and that the 500 students flowing through that center every year might feel the virile quickening of the Reformed faith, with all it has to offer to the coming educators of our youth. But for want of administration, the lack of any one beyond the stated clerk of presbytery to suggest anything, the lack of some one man to give strong advice with the authority of a position, the lack of earnest sympathy with power back of it to do things—for the lack of all this, the church is allowed to drag out its weary 'hunt' for a man at $1,100, without a house. I learned recently that what would be considered the veriest stronghold of Presbyterianism was suffering from the same lack."

Now, we have no hope of living to see the day when Baptists will have anything like Methodist Bishops, or Presbyterians have Bishop-Moderators, and we call attention to the matter that our own people may be helped to see themselves as others see them, and to stand in their lot and remain content.

PERSONAL.

The church members at Bay St. Louis have expressed themselves as well pleased with their new pastor, Rev. O. G. Halliburton.

Rev. Wm. Schuhle was sick last week, and unable to reach Jackson, La., in time to meet his engagement on Sunday. He is up now, and at his post.

Dr. W. B. Palmore, Editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, in his "goings to and fro over the earth," spent Sunday last in this city. In the morning he preached at the Louisiana Avenue Church, and in the afternoon delivered a lecture at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall.

Rev. D. L. Parrish entered upon the work of his new charge, Parker Memorial Church, on Sunday, the 14th inst., as did also Rev. H. N. Harrison at Burgundy Street, and Rev. T. S. Brown, City Missionary. All the hold-over pastors were in place.

Rev. Theo. Copeland arrived in the city last week and began his work as Pastor of Rayne Memorial Church. Brother Copeland comes to New Orleans from the South Georgia Conference, where he has had a successful pastorate at St. Luke's Church, Columbus. We trust his work in this city may be as pleasant and as successful as in the field he has just left.

Dr. W. H. La. Prade, at the invitation of the family, came from Jackson, Miss., to take part in the funeral exercises of Bishop Keener. On Sunday, at 11 o'clock, he preached for Rev. J. E. Wray, pastor of First Church, formerly the Carondelet Street Church. The sermon, as reported by Brother Wray, was one of great strength and beauty, and was both entertaining and edifying. Dr. LaPrade's old friends were glad to see him.

President C. C. Miller, of Centenary College, who was in the city attending the funeral of Bishop Keener, gave us an appreciated call on Monday. Brother Miller is in fine health and spirits, and reports everything at Centenary working smoothly. He is delighted that the Conference accepted the Clinton compromise on the College question. The spring term opens on Feb. 1, and he suggests that as the best time to enter students.

Bishop Galloway's address at the funeral of Bishop Keener was one of surpassing beauty, and a just tribute to the great man of the Church. The Bishop may live long and deliver many more funeral orations, but he will never have two more such subjects of discourse as Justice Lamar and Bishop John C. Keener. At night Bishop Galloway was greeted by a large congregation at Louisiana Avenue Church, and he gave them a charming sermon on Ezekiel's vision of living waters.

On Monday evening last the friends of Rev. Richard Wilkinson and wife, members of Rayne Memorial Church, and others tendered them a "farewell reception" at the residence of Mr. T. J. Ferguson. It was a brilliant affair, and largely attended, the whole lower floor of the spacious residence being crowded so as to leave nothing but standing room. After an hour or more of social intercourse and partaking of delicious and appetizing refreshments, the large concourse was called to order by Mr. J. R. Westerfield, and in a short and appropriate talk, accompanied by resolutions of confidence and expressions of affection, on behalf of the brethren, presented Dr. Wilkinson with a purse of four hundred and twenty dollars and an elegant gold-mounted watch fob. On behalf of the ladies of the congregation, Mrs. C. E. Wernick presented Mrs. Wilkinson with a silver bread-tray and a dozen each of silver knives and forks. Dr. and Mrs. Wilkinson were deeply touched, but they managed to express their gratitude in fitting words. They leave the city this week for their future home, Monroe, with the good wishes and prayers of hundreds of people of this city.

THE LATENT POWER OF THE CONGREGATION.

The first quality of leadership is the ability to stir up latent power. This is a principle of general application, and we propose now to apply it to the work of the Church in its organized capacity.

The latent power of the congregation is the sum of the latent power of each member, plus a certain indefinable power gained through unity and concord of effort. There are few congregations in which there are not several members with latent power which needs to be brought into action.

It is impossible to estimate the latent power which lies in any of these individual members—and likewise also of the congregation as a whole. There was a wonderful power latent in steam till Watt evoked its spirit from the waters and set it to move the great arms of machinery. Science has climbed the height of the skies and seized the spirit of their thunders and bound it to do the work of men, moving swiftly in the trolley car or carrying his message instantaneously across continents.

What science has yet to open up no one may say. The wind still is mostly unharnessed, and yet here it is strong enough to drive every train of cars—both passenger and freight—which runs in this broad land of ours. The tide is yet unbridled, and along our shores it develops power sufficient for every manufacturers' wheel in America. Other powers might be mentioned, but these are sufficient to indicate that science has yet vast conquests to make in subjugating to the uses of man the vast powers about us.

There are likewise unharnessed powers in the moral and religious world—yet needing to be bridled. There are luke-warm members who ought to be strong with fervent zeal. There are worshippers who pray not in public and yet the Lord has given them talent to be thus employed. There are men of strong business ability, who ought to use some of it to plan the business of the Church—the financial and charity sides of its organization. But above all and beyond all, there is much needed—a deepened piety and a reconsecration to the work of the Master. Too often the congregation is in the cold clutches of indifference when it ought to be warm with fervent zeal.

It is somebody's business to harness these latent forces. Nor does the duty lie altogether upon the pastor. It is his in the foremost place. Second to him come the elders, while close in line follow the deacons. The Sabbath-school superintendent and his board of teachers also have a most important part in this great work. Large forces are to be harnessed, and it requires the united effort of all those who are already in the line of duty. But let us repeat that the pastor must take the lead in all this.

There are two causes for the manian accurate perception of these will fest latency of which we speak; and largely help in removing the disadvantage. One is the lack of appreciation of influence. A man sometimes moves in a larger sphere than he imagines. Another reason is the failure to see what is the accumulated force of small power continually applied. Some, because they cannot do everything, do nothing. Since they cannot blaze as a star, they will not shine as a candle. The few work and the many look on. Is not this the experience in your congregation? Not thus are the woods clothed in green, but by every leaf and twig and bough doing its part. And so shall the world be clothed in Christian beauty, when every servant of the Master will stir himself up in the "hidden man of the heart," and every congregation do battle for the Lord with its unitedly aroused latent power of the present.—The Presbyterian.

GENERAL NEWS.

Alexandria will be bountifully supplied with liquor the present year. Already twenty-eight retail dealers have taken out license at $1,000 each, and four licenses were issued for beer at $300 each. And there's more to follow.

Express agents in Mississippi to the number of forty-four have put themselves on record as opposed to handling C.O.D. packages of liquor in prohibition territory.

"Aunt Kitty Boyd," an old-time colored woman, 110 years, and never sick a day in her life, was burned to death in Chattanooga on the night of Jan. 14.

The "Greenwood Enterprise" says that "more than 100 banks have been organized in Mississippi during the past two years," and that during this period the banking capital of the State has about doubled.

Guarantee I guarantee Plants to give purchaser satisfaction, or will refund the purchase price to any customer who is dissatisfied at end of season. These plants are grown in the open field, on Seacoast of South Carolina, in a climate that is just suited to growing the hardiest plants that can be grown in the United States. These plants can be reset in the interior of the Southern States during the months of January, February, and March. They will stand severe cold without being injured, and will mature a head of Cabbage Two to Three weeks sooner than if you grew your own plants in hot beds and cold frames.

My Largest Customers are the Market Gardeners near the interior towns and cities of the South. Their profit depends upon them having Early Cabbage; for that reason they purchase my plants for their crops.

CHURCH EXTENSION AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Our Annual Minutes for 1904 state the following facts as to our foreign missions: The number of congregations is 309; the number of church buildings, 130. This leaves 179 congregations that are without a house of worship. Of the 130 churches 61 have received aid from the General Board of Church Extension. The General Board has also authorized all our Foreign Mission Conferences to use in their own bounds all they pay to the cause of church extension. The assessment to these Conferences was $737, and on this assessment they paid $1,667.75. The same year they paid on their assessment for foreign missions $148.11, which shows their appreciation of the importance of the Church Extension organization in their work. I call attention to this fact for the reason that some of our home Conferences are allowing their Church Extension collection to be neglected while they are paying for more than they are assessed for Foreign Missions. I am not to be misunderstood as indicating that any of our people are doing too much for Foreign Missions, but our Church Extension collection is of so great importance to the foreign, as well as the home church, that the same zeal and devotion to the cause of Church Extension that any of our people show for any of our church interests is due to the cause of Church Extension. I am told by those who are fully informed that our work in the foreign field cannot prosper without churches in which to assemble the people. The Mission and the Church Extension Boards consist largely of the same persons, and they are working together and for the same ends, each in its place, and neglect of the demands of either is a very great embarrassment. The Board of Church Extension has always been very careful not to burden the Church by increasing the assessment, and, in fact, if the assessment should be paid in full by all the Conferences it would not provide more than one-half of the amount we are asked for from year to year. I send you the following letter from our Brother W. E. Towson, of our Japan Mission, that your readers may see a specimen of the calls that are made upon us from our Foreign Mission fields. I hope our good people can be induced to not only agree to pay all they are assessed for Church Extension, but that large voluntary contributions shall be constantly coming into our treasury to enable us to provide for all such calls.

Yours Truly,

P. H. WHISNER, Cor. Sec.

Kobe, Japan, Oct. 30, 1905.

Rev. P. H. Whisner, D.D., Secretary Board of Church Extension, M. E. Church, South, Louisville, Ky.: My Dear Doctor—Our East Osaka Church, the only church building we had in that great city of over 1,000,000 inhabitants, was totally destroyed by fire, as the result of a lamp accident, in the early part of this month. This was the church for which your honored predecessor, Dr. Morton, labored so earnestly and so successfully. I am glad to say that the house was fully insured and that, with the land and the insurance money, now in hand, amounting to $2159.00, we have all or more, than was originally put into the property. This is explained by the fact that building materials having greatly increased in cost, as a result of the Chino-Japanese war, we increased the amount of our policy to more than the original cost of the structure. While this is true, still the amount of money now in hand is less than one-half of what will be needed to erect a similar house. The reason for this is that we are now living, and will continue to live for some time, under "war-prices." The cost of living, price of building materials, etc., have risen tremendously since the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war, and there is no hope for much decrease.

We must rebuild and do so speedily. The Church was moving on rapidly and we were considering how we could enlarge the building in order to accommodate the rapidly increasing congregation, when this terrible blow came upon us. We are now worshiping in the parsonage, seated on the floor in true Japanese style. The parsonage is a hundred feet from the street and is now behind a fence twenty feet high, according to city regulations, shutting off the ruins from the gaze of the curious. Of course, we cannot expect to do much even in the way of holding our own hidden away in this style.

Our east and west churches are about one and one-half miles apart, the business section of the city being between us. Our territory does not touch theirs, much less overlap. Methodism needs to be strongly represented in this the "commercial metropolis of the east" and it behoves us to erect a larger house than the one destroyed. We should take no backward step, if we are to do our part in the evangelization of this great city, and fully represent the interest of Methodism.

With what we have in hand I can provide $2500.00, but we will need not less than six thousand dollars, if we are to erect a house at all commensurate with our needs and the exigencies of the situation. This is putting the matter at a low estimate and does not look to building a brick house, such as is planned in West Osaka. It does not provide for furnishing, and is in fact only an estimate. In a few weeks, I can be more definite, after looking into the question more fully, consulting with carpenters, etc.

What hope can you hold out that the Board of Church Extension will help us? I have written to Dr. Lambuth in reference to our sending in an application, also to Bishop Galloway. May I trouble you to send me an application blank, and a book of plans of church building? By doing so you will very greatly oblige me.

With best wishes and high respect, I am, Very sincerely yours,

W. E. TOWSON,
P. C. of East Osaka Station.

Sunday School

(By W. B. Campbell.)

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

Sunday, Jan. 28, 1906.

John the Baptist was the greatest man born of woman previous to the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven. Jesus said so himself. See wherein this greatness consists: "What went ye out to see? A reed shaken by the wind? No, a man strong in purpose, filled with the spirit, separating himself from the world to prepare for a great work; but what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? No, they would have found such in a king's house. John clothed himself with such as the desert produced; but what went ye out for to see? A prophet?" Yea, and more than a prophet—he was a voice, a voice that has resounded down the ages, calling men to "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world."

The place where Jesus came to meet John was near Bethabara, and also near Enon, a point on the banks of the upper Jordan, some fifty miles north of Jerusalem. The waters of the river were shallow, but near Enon there was much water, supposedly in pools, that had been washed deep by the current of the river. Multitudes from the surrounding country and even from the city of Jerusalem had come to hear the preaching of John, and John had suited his sermon to the needs of his hearers. The burden of his discourse was the change in life needed by all—preparation of heart for the reception of the Redeemer.

"What shall we do, then?" the people ask. Be charitable. "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none." The publicans were anxious, as also were the scribes and Pharisees; and when they spoke John was aroused. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?"

The discourse and ceremony of baptism was drawing to a close, when all eyes were turned to one who was walking over the rocky pathway toward them. John knew who it was, and said again: "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!" Those two, who were so much to the world in God's plan of redemption, met there by the riverside, and Jesus asked John to baptize him. John, who had been so bold in his sermon, denouncing sin and condemning hypocracy, now became gently modest in the presence of him whose shoes he was not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

"I have need to be baptized in thee," said John, "and comest thou to me." "Suffer it to be so now," said the Lord; "for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

Then the two walked into the water, and Jesus was baptized of John—but look! the assembled multitude are casting their eyes upward, for, descending straight from heaven is a dove, embodying the Holy Spirit; it is the sign that had been promised to John of the Father, and the voice was heard, saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

What wonder, what joy is written on the faces of the surrounding people. The happy event comes to a close. The people depart for their homes. Not so with the Master; his work was begun; he was just tasting of the cup that he must drink for the world's redemption. He was led of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.

The Lord goes into the wilderness not alone. The Father sends angels to minister unto him. However, there is loneliness in the thought that touches the heart—away in the barren wilderness for forty days! away from the loving mother and happy home; surely the Master had the natural longing for human friends; for He was human as well as divine. O the sadness that was His lot on earth! It calls forth our most tender love. Let us rejoice that we live in a day and time when the earthly character of our Lord stands out before us in a light never given before; because the more the world is taken up with matters purely worldly, the more the thoughtful ones turn in search of things more enduring.

Now, when honesty and uprightness are a scarcity among men, the brighter shines the Christian life. There is today the most urgent necessity for lives above reproach, for men are not inclined to read and investigate; so if the disciple of Christ lives and mingles among the people, they read the most impressive sermons that can be delivered. So in the words of the golden text: "Prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only." Every work done for the Master is rewarded, and we do not wait for our reward, for it is given every moment of our lives, for when all around is rush and hurry and anxiety, we have in our hearts that peace which passeth all understanding.

You have in your class one boy or one girl that never seems to give attention, and is a disturbing element. Make yourself love that one, because you know how hard it is at times to keep the mind on the subject in hand. Remember how often in your room at home, as on your bended knee you are pleading for some blessing, and at such times you have found the mind wandering away from that sacred place, until you cleared yourself and began your prayer over again.

There was a child in a primary class that was most difficult to control, and who caused others to take their attention away from the lesson. This child's home was visited, and almost at the first of the visit, the teacher was told how the child came home and repeated almost all that had been said of the lesson.

Prompt attendance helps your class and your superintendent also.

Motherhood

MOTHERHOOD is the reward nature bestows upon healthy womanhood.

Women whose vitality has been sapped by disease cannot safely give birth to children. In pregnancy and in childbirth weakness of the mother is revealed in the pain and agony she suffers.

This great medicine drives out every vestige of inflammation and weakness, and gives tone and strength to the delicate organs which mature the child. The pains of pregnancy are banished by Wine of Cardui, and miscarriages, which blast so many fond mother's hopes, are prevented. Flooding, which so often occurs after childbirth, is corrected when Wine of Cardui is used during pregnancy.

Wine of Cardui babies are healthy babies, because, during the months of pregnancy, the mother is able to give them necessary vitality and strength.

With these facts presented to American women no expectant mother should be satisfied without the re-inforcement that Wine of Cardui will give her. Every mother should be able to treat herself in her home with this valuable medicine.

Polycarp, N. C., Jan. 11, 1902.

I am the mother of seven children and while in pregnancy with the first six suffered untold misery until they were born. One month before the seventh was born I began to take a bottle of Wine of Cardui, which gave me relief after taking three doses. I used the remainder of the bottle until the birth of the child, and was stouter in three days after the birth than I was in a month after the birth of either of the first six. I am 29 years old.

THE INVINCIBLE TURK.

No longer content with murdering Armenian Christians, the Turks now add insult to injury by plundering the American Christians. Turkish tramps with zeal unsurpassed, sanctimony unparalleled, and gall undivided, go from town to town gathering cash and commendation from Methodist preachers and others too easily duped in the name of charity. Calls from four of these artists within a week, asking for money and then for old clothes, hats, etc., lead me to suspect that my previous charity in this cause might have been used to better advantage.

Brethren, if you must give your money, pray trouble not yourselves to write letters of commendation. These fellows can speak for themselves.

J. R. COUNTISS.

Greenville, Miss.

SECOND CHURCH, BATON ROUGE.

My Dear Doctor Boswell—We begin our second year in this charge auspiciously. The people seem to be pleased at our return, and we are thankful that God, in his good providence, has cast our lot amongst such pious and loyal people.

My congregations yesterday were unusually large, both morning and evening. I had six additions in the morning and two at night, making a total of eight.

Rev. Jno. L. Sutton has canvassed our congregation and secured twenty-five subscribers to your paper. I expect to raise my benevolent claims easier on account of this. A reading people will always be a giving people. Success to your paper. Fraternally,

ALPHONSO S. TOW....Y.

I AM A SPECIALIST IN EYE TROUBLES.

I CAN HELP YOUR EYES AS I HAVE HELPED OTHERS.

I can give you all the references you want.

I will send you my illustrated book on the EYE if you will write me fully as to your EYE troubles.

Do it now!

DR. ALBERT I. ORR,
Eyesight Specialist.

Deafness Cured

At last, after years of study and research, the wonderful nature forces have been harnessed together and DEAFNESS CAN BE CURED. If I did not know positively that my method could cure I would not allow my name to be connected with this treatment. My standing is such that I cannot afford to misrepresent or distort the facts. I know what this treatment will do and what it has done, and can safely say, "It is the greatest, grandest and simplest in the world today." It seems to make no difference with this cure as to age, how long standing or deep seated the deafness is, its cures are permanent. Test your hearing with a watch. If you do not hear it five feet away, you are deaf. Write me, giving age, sex, cause, how long deaf, if you have Catarrh, Rheumatism, or Nervous trouble, and if you hear better in noisy places, and all particulars bearing on your case, and I will give you my truthful opinion as to whether your case is curable or not. I give an absolutely scientific opinion, with a full explanation of your case and a Booklet on Deafness and Head Noises free without charge. The advice contained in this book has been the means of saving the hearing of hundreds of people. Write today to the discoverer, Guy Clifford Powell, M.D., 1202 Bank Bldg., Peoria, Ill., for free information, including his valuable free book.

CATARRH IS VERY DANGEROUS.

HOW CAN YOU REFUSE MY TRIAL OFFER?

THE WEEDS WILL CONTINUE TO GROW.

Ninety per cent of humanity are unconsciously breeding and nursing germs of diseases in their systems, like neglected gardens growing weeds instead of flowers. Your system is like a garden. It is the natural hot-bed for breeding millions of germs of disease. Did you ever see a garden where all the weeds were destroyed one year, but that they also made their appearance again next year. If you could destroy the seed of every weed in that garden this year, the air if nothing else will carry more seeds in it next year.

Air is the agency that carries the germs of disease into the head and air passages and it must be the agency to remove them. Let the weeds grow in your garden and they will choke and ruin all that is good. Let the germs of disease continue to multiply in the air passages of your head, throat and lungs unmolested and you are doing far worse. You are destroying the system of a noble human being worth more to you than all the gardens in the world. YOU MUST KEEP ON WEEDING.

I am making the only common sense offer ever made to the reader of this paper. Carefully read it, ponder over it, then act qqlckly, confidently and be assured that you will be fairly and honestly dealt with.

I CAN CURE YOUR

CATARRH

I WILL PROVE IT FREE!

Because I KNOW What My New and Wonderful Discovery Has Already Done for Hundreds—will Do for You—I will cheerfully and willingly send a full Treatment to you, Prepaid, Absolutely FREE, for TEN DAYS' TRIAL.

I offer what is really a Blessing to sufferers from Catarrh—Head Bronchial and Throat troubles.

A new and wonderful medical discovery that cures by striking right at the root and cause of the disease—by KILLING THE GERMS.

A CURE for YOU, no matter what bad shape you are in.

Now I do not ask you to take my word nor that of the cured hundreds. Instead, I want you to try this treatment, entirely at my personal risk, at my expense. Just say the word, and I will send the treatment to you, without pay or promise on your part. If, at the end of ten days' treatment, you do not feel like a new being, if you do not honestly bless the day that you answered this advertisement, simply return the treatment to me. You are nothing out. Isn't that a fair and honorable offer? Your word decides it, I fully trust and believe.

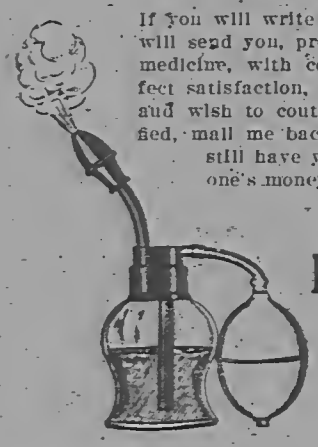
My afflicted friend, do not suffer longer from this cruel disease, Catarrh. Don't drag out a miserable existence; a curse to yourself, a nuisance to those around you. Don't let down the bars to more dangerous disease. (CONSUMPTION MOST FREQUENTLY STARTS IN CATARRH.)

My new treatment is applied direct. No drugs to swallow; its application is a pleasure. As if by magic, it stops the hawking, spitting, sniffing and snuffing, relieves the maddening head noises; does away with the nauseating dropping of mucus into the throat; the queer, stuffy and oppressed feeling of the head; the painful burning and smarting of the air passages. Soothes and heals the irritated membranes, and leaves the head CLEAR AS A BELL.

It is folly to take medicine into the stomach to kill the germs of Catarrh in the head. Air was the agency that carried the germs of disease there, and it must be the agency to remove them.

My treatment positively cures Catarrh, Asthma, Head Colds, Pains and Roaring in the Head, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Headache, Partial Deafness, La Grippe, and all diseases of the air passages by a patented method of dry inhalation.

The treatment is easily carried with you; may be used anywhere, at any time.



Read what grateful persons write:

"Your treatment has done me more good in three days than all others I have used in a lifetime."—J. D. S. ATKINS, Durham, N. C.

"After using your treatment one week, I have got my hearing back, which I thought was lost forever."—REV. ALBERT EGLI, Elgin, Ill.

"I have been using your Medicator three weeks, and would not take $1,000 for it if I could not get another. I can sing again, something I have not done for two years."—MINNIE COLLINS, Hayner, Ala.

MY SPECIAL TRIAL OFFER.

If you will write me, even a mere postal card, mentioning this paper, I will send you, prepaid, my new Spray Medicator with full treatment, of medicine, with complete directions for a quick home cure. If it gives perfect satisfaction, after ten days' trial, and you are pleased in every way, and wish to continue the treatment, send me $2. If you are NOT satisfied, mail me back the treatment (costs only 12 cents postage) and you still have your money. Ideal fairly with everyone, and want no one's money unless benefited. THE E. J. WORST CATARRH TREATMENT THE ONLY SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT FOR CATARRH ENDORSED BY THE UNITED STATES HEALTH REPORT.

Read What They Say.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13, 1900.

We are constantly receiving letters from all over the country asking for information on the subject of Catarrh and the air passages of the head. We have been asked time and again to recommend some remedy which can be used with good results for these diseases.

To benefit the public at large, and to answer their questions, we have recently commissioned our Board of Experts to investigate the subject of Catarrh and its cure, to find some remedy, which would successfully meet the conditions and be easy and simple of application. The report of the Board of Experts has been handed in, and as a result, we are pleased to recommend a treatment which is manufactured by the E. J. Worst M'f'g. Co., idea of Medicated air treatment very successfully, and has designed the neat and efficient little instrument which is becoming so well known as the E. J. Worst Catarrh Medicator. It conveys the true principle of forcing the medicated air as an agent into every air cavity of the head.

As a result of this investigation we are pleased to extend to E. J. Worst's Catarrh Treatment the unqualified indorsement of the United States Health Reports.

Do you hawk and spit up matter?
Do you have watery eyes?
Is there buzzing and roaring in your ears?
Is there a dripping in the back part of throat?
Does your nose discharge?
Does your nose feel full?
Do you sneeze a good deal?
Do crusts form in the nose?
Do you have pains across front part of head?
Do you have pain across the eyes?
Is your breath offensive?
Is your hearing impaired?
Are you losing your sense of smell?
Do you hawk up phlegm in the morning?

A Perfect Treatment.

It stands without a rival in the world for nearness and cheapness in its effect upon people who are troubled with catarrh or any of the above named diseases. Any child can use it. The medicine taken into the stomach cannot reach. Every air cell of the head drinks in its life-giving properties; every inhalation weakens the disease and leaves in its stead new vital force.

If you have a COLD, try it.
If you have SORE THROAT, try it.
If you have BRONCHITIS, try it.
If you have a COUGH, try it.
If you have CATARRH, try it.
If you have buzzing or roaring in the head, try it. If you have headache, try it. If you are partially deaf from the closing of any of the tubes leading to the inner ear, try it. Hundreds have reported immediate good results and permanent cures.

Your Friend Who Drinks.

I WILL SAVE HIM

I Have a HOME CURE, whose proof is FREE, That Restores FOREVER The Farthest Gone, That Conquers The Disease and The Desire, That Rebuilds Nerve Strength and Ambition.

No one, except the victim himself, knows the mental sufferings, the noble fights and the ignoble falls of the drinking man. Others see only his transgressions and his frequent lapses. Again and again they watch him secure a foothold that crumbles to sand. ... suggest WILL-POWER CANNOT conquer that devouring thirst, the trembling craving that is voiced by every nerve-cell of the helpless, hopeless victim of inebriety—the condition that leaves man no longer master of himself, but a half-crazed martyr to perverted appetite.

Advice and kindly words will not help your afflicted friend, any more than a straw will save a drowning man. What you must do to rescue him is to "throw out the life-line," in the shape of an actual, tangible CURE for the disease.

To prove that I have such a cure, I will send in a plain wrapper, so that no one can guess its contents, a large treatment, sufficient to test its wonderful merit, free of all expense.

A marvelous change will at once be evidenced. The terrible, incessant craving will vanish, appetite return, the nervous grow steady, the haggard appearance will vanish, the eyes grow clear and the sufferer will again be able and inspired to take his proper place in business and society.

I appeal to the WORST cases—I glory in such cures—cases that again and again have failed to yield to other treatments. My record is 100 per cent of cures—CURES TO STAY CURED. And I have the proof to verify my claims.

No matter how hopeless the case may seem, do not despair. Remember mine is a home treatment. There is no advertising the fact that it is being taken—no kindling of neighborhood gossip. Nothing but the blessed reality of a perfect cure.

Remember, I do not ask, and will not accept, one single penny of pay, till I have proven that my simple home remedy is an absolute unfailing cure. You take not a particle of risk and the gain is priceless.

Glances at the World.

General Joseph Wheeler died at the home of one of his daughters in New York on Jan. 25, after a short illness of pneumonia. He was for long years a favorite in the South, having been a dashing and successful cavalry officer during the Civil War. After the war he represented his State (Alabama) several terms in Congress. At the breaking out of the war with Spain he offered his services to the United States, and was appointed Major General of Volunteers. At the close of that war he was commissioned Brigadier General in the Regular Army, and saw service in the Philippines. For several years past he was on the retired list. He was a brave and gallant soldier, and greatly respected throughout the country.

There has been trouble down in Alabama in one of the big schools run in the industrial interests of the colored people. It is at Talladega. In connection with the school is a farm. The authorities saw fit to employ a Southern man as superintendent of the farm. The students objected, basing their objection solely on the ground that he was "a Southern white man." They appealed to the President, who did not heed their objections. Then they appealed to the Secretary of the American Missionary Society, which fosters the school. The Secretary upheld the President, and the students, many of them, determined to leave the school. This is another evidence of the hatred of young negroes of Southern men. The members of the faculty, it appears, favored the retention of the superintendent, presumably because they regarded him as qualified. And, surely, a Southern man, with knowledge of Southern climate and methods of farming, is more competent than any other to run a farm in the South. The negroes cannot see it that way. To know that a man is from the North fills the bill, in their estimation.

At first glance it looks as if it would be right to take the tax off of alcohol to be used in the arts, and probably it would be, if there were any well-grounded assurance that free alcohol would be used nowhere else, except in the arts. But there is no such assurance; on the contrary, there is every reason to believe that it would not only greatly increase the sale of certain medicines, so-called, that are much used as ordinary drinks, and on which the Revenue Department has recently placed the regular liquor tax. The fact that the whole liquor power of the country is being used in behalf of the move is sufficient to condemn it. They say it will greatly stimulate its production, and give employment to thousands of persons, besides cheapening the article. Why should they want free alcohol, if not to increase their profits in drink? They well know that simply to take off the tax will not stimulate the arts sufficient to double the facilities for its manufacture, or greatly increase the number of laborers for its production. If to increase and cheapen drink, they are right — and Congress would do well to retain the tax.

A strange state of things is being revealed by a trial for libel now going on in New York. The suit grows out of certain statements made in one of the New York society journals, of which there are two or three—possibly more. Two of them are under the same management — one called Fads and Fancies, the other Town Topics. The papers are devoted exclusively to the very rich of the city, and they get no notice of a favorable sort, except upon payment of a high price. The things brought out in the trial are remarkable. One is that the editions of the papers are very small—purposely limited, one of them getting out no more than 250 copies each issue. The other is that the subscription price is $250. It was said in court that the papers pay handsomely. A millionaire must be afflicted with an immense amount of vanity, else puts an exceedingly high price on a good word in his behalf. It would appear also that these society papers are designed to cut those who decline to patronize them, as they employ legal counsel, whose business it is to censor their columns to see that they keep inside the law whenever they feel like "touching up" the obstreperous upper tens, and some people had rather pay high than be undervalued in society. Such is life!

The signs indicate that more attention is being paid to the miscarriage of justice at this time than ever before. The facts are appalling. Attention has been called very recently to the fact that here in New Orleans several women—a half dozen or more—have been murdered within the past half-dozen years, and nobody punished, or, if punished at all, so lightly as to practically amount to nothing. Murderers of women either get off with a few years' confinement or are pronounced insane. It is not at all probable that a dozen murderers of women were insane or justifiable. The trouble must be with the law. It is certainly not with the judges. A little over eighteen months ago there was a steamboat disaster, in which nearly 1,000 persons lost their lives. Investigation by Federal authorities fixed the responsibility on certain officers, and, though there has been several trials, no one as yet has been convicted. And so it goes. If a man has money or influence, though known to be guilty of offenses, civil or criminal, he can fight the law, and for years go free. They simply fight, and stay proceedings until witnesses die or leave the country, and the gallows or prison is cheated of its dues. No country can long survive, or be safe under such lax administration of law.

For more than a year there has been manifested a good deal of concern in behalf of the underpaid school teachers of New Orleans. Apparently everybody was interested in their welfare, wishing that by some means they could secure larger salaries. But as property was being taxed to the utmost limit no increase in revenue could come from that source. A movement was started to increase the license on the retail sale of liquor. It looked as if the campaign would succeed, but the City Council declined, and blocked the way. The poor teachers, it was said, must suffer on, and do their hard work on little pay. Still, interest in education kept alive, and the School Board—the guardian of the children's and teachers' welfare, felt called upon to stand between them and real suffering, and proceeded to do something regardless of the Council's guardianship of the saloons, and raised the salary of possibly the only well-paid officer in the service — the Superintendent of the City Schools. His salary was raised from $2,500 to $3,000 per year—a raise in one salary sufficient to have given 110 teachers $10 per month additional, which amount, though small, would have been a godsend to the poor teachers. But not a teacher's salary was raised. They must wait until the City Council grants license to a few hundred more saloons, or until property values increase, and there is less demand for police protection. But, alas, the City Attorney has informed the School Board that their action was illegal, and the Superintendent must wait until the Legislature authorizes a raise in salary.

Unless we are really in earnest, we might as well lie back and plait straws.—Zion's Herald.

A PILGRIMAGE TO PENHA.

Picturesque Penha, Brazil's most famous shrine, stands on the summit of a great rock, about five hundred feet high, overlooking the Bay and about fifteen miles from the city of Rio Janeiro, its twin towers and royal palms sharply silhouetted against the bluest of tropic skies and forming a most beautiful picture.

Its incredible story is interesting and characteristic of the Romish Church. In early colonial days, about 1635, a man hunting for game in the woods skirting this rock was suddenly attacked by a gigantic and venomous snake. Dropping his rude weapon in terror, he fell on his knees and begged the protection of Our Lady of the Rock or Cliff (Nossa Senhora de Penha); she (?) kindly sent to his relief a lizard, which was sunning himself on the rock, who attacked and put to flight the serpent. When it is remembered that lizards grow to the remarkable length of 3 feet in Brazil (and, by the way, eaten as delicacies), and also that some of the versions claim that it was an alligator that attacked the snake, the legend does not seem altogether preposterous. In gratitude to his deliverer, he erected a votive altar on the summit of the rock and returned year after year to pay his homage to Nossa Senhora da Penha.

So popular and profitable has Penha become that a magnificent church has replaced the humble hut. It is reached by 365 steps (one for every day in the year) cut in the stone and beginning about two-thirds of the way up the hill. Thousands of the superstitious pray to the miracle-working (?) image during the year, and in the month of October, which is entirely devoted to her worship, Nossa Senhora receives pilgrims, who come from far and near to pay their vows, many of them crawling up the steps on their knees. Of course, a very lucrative business is carried on in wax candles, casts, etc., great rooms being filled with these thank offerings.

As we ascended the long flight of steps we met a pilgrim descending, who had come to pay his vow. We asked if he had ascended on his knees. He replied that he had not, and, furthermore, did not favor such rigid vows, as his wife had crawled up under a tropical sun, and after a severe illness, which exposure and exertion caused her death. We suggested that it was rather inconsiderate in the Senhora, with her miraculous powers, to have permitted the death of one so faithful.

"Ah," he replied; "when our time comes, neither the saints nor Nossa Senhora can save," which furnished us a text from which to preach to him the only Savior.

The entrance to the grounds at the base of the hill is through a grove of splendid mango trees, under whose dense and grateful shade there is erected a long line of bamboo and brush booths, each having a fantastic name, all gaudily decorated with flags and bunting, and all selling cachaca (native rum) beer and coffee to the weary pilgrims. The temporary booths reminded us of the feast of tabernacles, when the tribes went up to Jerusalem, but when we discovered their contents and learned that the crime record for Rio during the month of the pilgrimage is greater than at any time during the year, with the possible exception of Carnival, and that the year in which there is no murder at Penha is indeed exceptional, we again learned the sad lesson, so oft repeated and illustrated in this dark land, that the Romish Church has departed from the simple life of the ancient faith.

GEO. D. PARKER.

Rio de Janeiro, December, 1905.

THE NEED OF A REVIVAL.

Dear Advocate: For some time I have had it in my heart to write upon the need of a revival. During the past few years we have stressed the necessity of education, missions, church-building and enlargement generally, until we are in great danger of losing sight to some extent of the main purpose of our existence as a church. When a preacher comes to the end of the Conference year and stands before his brethren and reports "Not a single conversion this year," the heart sickens at the thought. Why so few conversions? What is the remedy for the present stagnant condition of the church respecting revivals? I would not censure my brethren of the ministry, but I would call all our people to a prayerful consideration of the present urgent need of more vital religion. Upon what shall we base this need of a revival?

First—In the first place it is based upon the decline of home religion. Explain it as we may, excuse it as we do, deny it if we dare, a careful study of the situation discloses the sad fact that there has been a hurtful decline of home religion among us during the past few years. Our homes are more comfortable and beautiful than they ever were, but the father's business has increased, the mother's time has become more fully absorbed than ever before, the children are either at school or at play, and the family hour, when father, mother and children gather in the same room after supper is largely a thing of the past. Business, the lodge and the club take up the father's time. The club, church societies and social duties make large demands upon the mother, so that the home life is made to suffer. Comparatively few people have family prayer, and the whole matter of religious training of the children is relegated to the Sunday school and the Junior League. Because of the absence of a strong religious influence in the home the boys wander into sin and the girls drift into questionable society. My experience is that if we have no strong home influence to co-operate with the church it is extremely difficult to save the children, and if they should be saved it is almost miraculous to prevent their apostasy when they reach maturity.

Second—The need of a revival is based also upon the present spiritual condition of our membership consequent upon modern methods of business and the effects of modern society. The greed for gain has become so strong that multitudes of our men have plunged into the whirlpool of gambling on cotton and fortunes are made or lost in a few hours. Our young men have become infatuated with the desire for sudden wealth and the conscience is put away in the vest pocket, law is violated, religious scruples trampled under foot, and a plunge is taken with terrific moral effect.

If our men have been injured by these vicious business methods, what shall we say of our women, who have become club-crazy? Sometimes they enter a literary or social club for self-improvement; sometimes a card club for recreation. The final test of all business methods and social pleasures is, what is the effect on character? If these things harden the moral nature, destroy the love of home and exhaust one's income, then they are sinful and must be avoided.

Third—The need of a revival is based also upon the reactionary effects of modern evangelism.

I would not class all the modern evangelists as evil nor characterize their work as spurious, but I do declare that in many instances their work has been hurtful to the spiritual life of the people. It has led to an unwholesome dependence upon sensational methods for revival services. It has filled many of our churches with song books of a frivolous character, and it has brought multitudes of unconverted people into the church. An evangelist comes to hold a meeting. He must succeed. He makes appeals and repeats propositions until the people are aroused. Some are influenced to take a public stand which really embarrasses them afterwards and their last state is worse than the first. The pastor may appeal to the unsaved, but the sense of shame because of past responses to the high-pressure methods of the evangelist and a failure to do better causes the sinner to resist. Add to this condition among the unsaved the cold, backslidden members of the church, and you have a situation that may well cause the angels to weep. What is the remedy? It is in our hands. Let bishops, presiding elders and pastors give themselves to prayer, and let them call their people to prayer for a widespread revival of soul-saving, home-redeeming religion. I pray that it may come, and that speedily.

T. W. LEWIS.

MYRTLE, MISS.

We have met with a hearty welcome on the Myrtle circuit. The people are very kind to us. We find plenty of work which we will try to do. We are expecting to build a new parsonage on the work. The people all seem anxious to help. All we need is the hearty co-operation of our people and complete success is sure. Pray for us that God may crown our labors with success.

EUPORA AND MABEN.

Dear Mr. Boswell: The fifth Sunday in December we had with us at Eupora Rev. I. D. Borden, State Secretary of the International Sunday School Convention. Both the Baptist and Methodist Sunday schools united in welcoming him. He gave us excellent service, which has told decidedly in the increase of interest and attendance in our Sunday school. Any place will be fortunate to secure his services. We have been well received here and find the charge in excellent condition. Fraternally.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE REPORTS

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

Believing that the time has come when we, as professed followers of our blessed Savior, should do what is in our power to overthrow the traffic in intoxicating liquors, we respectfully recommend for your consideration the following:

First—Resolved, That as a church we are unequivocally committed to the doctrine of prohibition as the only final method to be employed in the complete destruction of this nefarious and damnable business; but where prohibition is impossible, as is the case principally in our large cities, that our ministers and laymen and women be requested to secure high license as a preliminary measure towards prohibition.

Second—Resolved, That we memorialize the Senate and House of Representatives of our state to enact such law or laws as will limit the police juries of our parishes in issuing licenses for the sale of liquor to the following conditions: That licenses be granted only to those who have secured a petition signed by a majority of the legal voters of the town, parish or ward in which it is desired to sell whisky. That no saloonkeeper shall be allowed to have screens of any kind in front of doors or entrances to his place of business. That minors shall not be allowed, under penalty of the law, to enter saloons, and that persons securing licenses shall give bond for the carrying out of said regulations, in default of which both his bond and license shall be forfeited. That solicitation of orders for liquors in prohibition towns or communities be prohibited.

Third—Resolved, That we memorialize the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States Congress to enact such law or laws as will prohibit the sale of liquor known as the C. O. D. business, and that we respectfully urge upon the Louisiana delegation to that body that they use every honorable means in their power to aid and assist in the enaction of this law for the protection of local option communities.

Fourth—Resolved, That we pledge to the Anti-Saloon League of Louisiana our hearty cooperation and support in any and every honorable means looking to the speedy and final overthrow of the liquor traffic in our beloved state.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Dear Brethren: Your committee on Sabbath observance, after prayerful consideration present the following report:

Recognizing the Sabbath as an institution of divine authority and perpetual obligation, conserving as it does the highest interest of man's physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual nature, we cherish it as one of God's greatest gifts to man. We believe, with Daniel Webster, "That it is the bulwark of our liberty, because the bulwark of our morality." We are sorry to learn that in some parts of our land owing to the large influx of foreign population, the violation of Sunday laws is on the increase. Statistics show that while our population has increased 27 per cent during the past decade, the increase of Sunday labor is 58 per cent during the same period of time and at the same time there is an increase of Sunday amusements in the form of ball games, circuses, shows, races, picnics and excursions. So that a great question confronting us today is whether the peaceful, holy and blessed Sabbath revered from our fathers and enshrined in the life and history of our nation shall continue to bless the coming generations or give place to a godless holiday and workday.

There is great need for earnest, persistent and united effort on the part of all good people that this sacred day, so essential to our national well-being and to the prosperity of the kingdom of God may be preserved and perpetuated.

Therefore we recommend that as ministers of the Gospel we will seek to be godly examples to our flocks by conscientiously observing the day ourselves; that by preaching on the subject, by private instruction and by circulating Sunday literature we will do what we can to create a sentiment that will secure the enforcement of our Sunday laws, and thus protect our natural riglits. That we appreciate and indorse the good work being done by the Sunday Rest League of America, and that we will gladly co-operate with Dr. Edward Thompson and avail ourselves of the helpful literature furnished by the league. Address Dr. Thompson, 115 1-2 Soledad street, San Antonio, Tex.

CENTENARY COLLEGE COMMISSION.

New Orleans, La., Jan. 5, 1906.

To the Bishop and Members of the Louisiana Conference: We, your commission, appointed by the last session of the Louisiana Conference, "to negotiate with Shreveport or its representatives for the consummation of an agreement as to the terms for the location of the college of the Louisiana Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in the city of Shreveport, La.," beg leave to submit the following report:

In obedience to the order of the Conference we visited Shreveport and had a meeting with the Progressive League of that city on January 17, 1905, four members of the commission being present.

We found that a representative of another prospective institution was on the ground ready to accept the proposition of the people of Shreveport if we did not close with it, so that it was impossible to defer positive action in the matter without entirely defeating the expressed purpose of the Conference "to accept some such proposal." Not feeling at liberty under our instructions to thus defeat the will of the Conference, we agreed on behalf of the Conference to accept the offer made by certain citizens of Shreveport of a voluntary tax for ten years, or until such earlier time as it shall reach the sum of $110,000, which voluntary tax the Progressive League engages to use its best efforts to bring up to the maximum amount of $110,000. We agreed on the other hand to pledge amounts equivalent to $110,000, as follows:

First—The grounds and buildings of Centenary college at an agreed valuation of $40,000.

Second—An annuity raised by the educational collections of the conference equal to 4 per cent of $40,000.

Third—And $30,000 in money.

We agreed further to begin work on the college within the year 1906.

[Note—This report was without signatures.—Editor.]

REPORT ON DISTRICT CONFERENCE RECORDS.

New Orleans—This record was examined and approved, being excellent in form, clear and distinct in its chirography and marginal notes in fine order, making an excellent model.

Crowley—Record approved, being fairly well written and is in good form and marginal notes distinct.

Shreveport—Record examined and approved by the committee appointed by conference in New Orleans January 3, 1906.

Alexandria—Record approved, except that there is no record of the approval of the minutes of any of the sessions, which constitutes a serious defect.

Baton Rouge—This record was presented to the board. It is so badly written that it can scarcely be read and is miserable in form and a disgrace to the district. Better have no record than such a one.

Arcadia—Record found correct and neatly kept.

Monroe record not presented.

N. S. CORNELL, Chairman.

EPWORTH LEAGUE BOARD.

To the Louisiana Conference: We are gratified to learn through the report of the general secretary that there have been 600 senior and over 100 junior leagues chartered during the year, with a membership of about 17,000, and that the circulation of the Epworth Era has been increased more than 5,000.

The Era is ably edited and is one of the most popular periodicals of our church, and deserves a place in every Methodist home.

The 10 cent assessment is for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the central office and we urge that all preachers in charge impress their leagues with the necessity of meeting this assessment in full.

The board would request the presiding elders to give one day of the District Conference to Epworth League institute work, and if possible to secure the services of Rev. Dr. F. S. Parker.

C. D. Atkinson and W. W. Holmes were appointed as representatives of the board to assist the presiding elders in this institute work and also to co-operate with the officers of the state conference.

The meeting of the Seashore Assembly was postponed last year on account of the yellow fever. The excellent programme of last year will come to us most excellent this year. We recommend that Rev. C. D. Atkinson be appointed commissioner from our conference, to meet with commissioners from the Mississippi, North Mississippi and Alabama Conferences in the management of the Seashore Assembly.

W. W. HOLMES, Acting Secretary.

RESOLUTION.

In accordance with the compromise entered into by the legal conference and the plaintiffs in the case of John C. Keener et al. vs. Legal Conference, and in order that the Conference may be enabled to properly carry out this agreement, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the legal conference be invested with all the powers of the annual conference, in so far as those power may be exercised in the nomination or confirmation of members of a board of trustees of Centenary college, and that it or a maority of its members be ordered to meet with the board of trustees of Centenary college at its meeting next commencement for the purpose of naming or confirming a board of trustees of Centenary college for the Louisiana annual conference.

R. W. TUCKER.
F. N. PARKER.

RESOLUTION.

Resolved, That it is the intention of the Conference in continuing the Shreveport commission that the said commission have authority to take all necessary steps for the execution of the plan set forth in the report of the commission, made at this session of the conference.

LETTER FROM A COUNTRY PARSON.

Our session of conference held at Gloster was the most pleasant I ever attended, even to the very last amen. I was glad when Bishop Galloway "read me out to—to—go back home." You see, Doctor, the mistress at the parsonage had some hens setting and could not afford to disturb them, and I had two fine fat pigs in the pen and a nice patch of turnips and a fine lot of stove wood on hand to cook them with, and, you see, a move would have caused some disturbance along the line. And, besides, just before I started for conference, we got such a "pounding" as I had never seen before—two wagon loads at one time, and it is not all gone yet.

On my return from Gloster the madam and the babies were ready for a vacation—or occupation, rather—so we spent two weeks visiting home folks and the scenes of our childhood days. This is a duty that every preacher owes, not only to himself and family, but especially to the old folks at home. Preacher, visit the old people at least once a year, for this is an important part of your duty.

Well, on our return from this visit over rough country roads and belated railroad trains, weary, wornout and sleepy, we reached the parsonage about sunset. A good, thoughtful neighbor had prepared a supper for us that would have tempted a king's appetite, and it goes without saying that we did justice to the occasion. After we had prepared to retire for the night to our great surprise we saw through the dim moonlight the approach of a Japanese army? No, it was another "pounding." The graded school (of which we are all proud) had suspended its rules for the occasion, and such a crowd of young folks and older folks—it was a gala day at the parsonage that night, and we are still feasting. Surely the lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places. This is the one side.

Some weeks ago the good people of my charge decided we needed a new parsonage, and proceeded at once to sell the old one and promised possession at a stated time, but by some unavoidable delay the new one was not ready for occupancy at the time promised, and the buyer of the old parsonage moved in at the stated time. So doctor, "do thyself no harm, we are all here." How pleasant and how beautiful for brethren to dwell together! But by the time my time comes around to scribble again we will be domiciled in a new parsonage.

LIGHT AND HELP WANTED.

Many years ago I read Bishop Jessie T. Peck's book, "The Central Idea of Christianity." In it he carefully examines the divergent claims that have been made for a solution of this question, and finally concludes that holiness of heart and life on the part of man is the central idea.

Early Methodists were always greatly concerned that every church member should be without spot or blemish in character, wholly absorbed in living to the glory of God in every department of life. Quantity was freely sacrificed for quality.

What has been termed the "doctrine of entire sanctification," a work of grace subsequent to regeneration received by faith, was accepted as orthodox and so proclaimed from press and pulpit. In my early ministry "Wesley's Sermons," "Clarke's Commentaries" and "Watson's Institutes were the authorities upon church doctrines, given by General Conference action and Board of Bishops for undergraduates' course of study.

To teach or preach doctrines contrary to said standards was considered disloyal. At some time and somewhere, all unknown to me (light wanted), it has been discovered that Wesley, Clarke and Watson are not in harmony with the Bible in their teachings of this "Central Idea of Christianity."

The number is not small of itinerant Methodist preachers of this twentieth century that boldly preach and print that in regeneration we receive the fullness of God's ability to bless while we are in this state of earthly mortality. Growth in grace and knowledge is all that can be expected to follow regeneration.

Surely no one will deny the fact that "Brethren are not in unity" upon the doctrine of entire sanctification. Among some bitter feeling, culminating in discourtesies, have occurred. If any doubt this, let him review the files of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

I can furnish personal knowledge of incidents where discourtesies have been inflicted; but it is not necessary to my present object to do so. I am troubled about the health of Zion. For lack of unity upon this doctrine Methodism suffers a loss of spirituality, if not more.

Is it impossible to ascertain a correct solution of this vexed question as to mode of attainment? Is there no body of delegated men competent to investigate and then declare the scriptural view? Is the Board of Bishops and General Conference powerless to inform the world the orthodox view of Methodism upon this question?

If "holiness to the Lord" is the central idea of Christianity, and the mission of the Methodist church is to spread scriptural holiness over the land, what question of more vital importance can occupy the time of the next General Conference than to ascertain whether or not the great divergence of opinion now existing and resultant friction ought to continue, thereby fulfilling Paul's prayer (Ephesians, 3d chapter, 13th verse), "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

This question ought to be settled and settled right. May the Holy Spirit help. Amen.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE JOURNAL.

The editors of the Mississippi Conference Journal of the session for 1905 expect that publication to be ready for distribution during the first week in February.

By order of the Conference it is to be distributed among the pastors upon the basis of the members in the pastoral charges. Where the statistical tables show the number of members, the question of the number of copies to be sent is a very simple one; but where the work has been changed, the question is not so simple.

For this reason the editors request that all pastors whose membership is not indicated by the statistical tables will write at once, giving the number of members on the charge, and where there is any probability of confusion in regard to postoffice and express office, giving the most convenient postoffice address and the nearest express office.

The brethren will find in this journal the usual number of typographical, and other mistakes. These mistakes, like the poor, are always with us. If their correction in the columns of the Advocate will be of any satisfaction to any brother, or do any good, the editors hope the brethren will not hesitate to go into print. Reading proof is a sovereign cure for vanity.

Let the brethren give full time for the transportation of the shipment, and then inquire at the postoffice and the express office before writing to the editors about them.

Most unhappy people have become so by gradually forming a habit of unhappiness, complaining about the weather, finding fault with their food, with crowded cars, and with disagreeable companions or work. A habit of complaining, of criticising, of fault-finding, or grumbling over trifles, a habit of looking for shadows, is a most unfortunate habit to contract, especially in early life, for, after a while, the victim becomes a slave. All of the impulses become perverted, until the tendency to pessimism, to cynicism, is chronic. —Success.

RESOLUTIONS BY PREACHERS' MEETING.

The following resolutions were adopted by the New Orleans Methodist Preachers' Meeting on Monday, Jan. 29, 1906:

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God to call our venerable and beloved Senior Bishop, John C. Keener, from this to the better life; therefore, be it resolved

First—That in the death of Bishop Keener our Church has lost one of its strongest men and most efficient officers—a man who has given a long and consecrated life to the service of the Church, and who has been a prominent factor and foremost leader in our Methodism.

Second—While we realize the great loss and that we shall not soon see his like again, we are deeply grateful to God, who gave him to the Church, and for his long and efficient service, and the assurance that the Church's loss is his eternal gain.

Third—As a man of masterful intellect, great decision of character, having the full courage of his convictions, and withal a tender and sympathetic heart, he will ever be held as a worthy example for the younger men in the ministry. We will cherish his memory and endeavor to follow him as he followed Christ.

Fourth—That these resolutions be published in the Christian Advocate and in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Mary Ann Jones, wife of Rev. Edmund Jones of Mobile, Ala., and mother of ex-Lieut. Governor Col. J. H. Jones of Mississippi, was born in Orangeburg district, South Carolina, October 1, 1815, and died near Woodville, Miss., January 3, 1903, aged 90 years.

Sister Jones' father, the Rev. James H. Mellard, was a prominent member of the South Carolina Conference in the early history of that body. He filled for many years some of the most important stations and stood in the forefront of that body of stalwart soldiers of the cross. Her husband, Judge John Edmund Jones, whose residence was in Mobile, Ala., which was the scene of his distinguished services, was both lawyer and preacher, doing the work of each without conflict with the duties of either. He would preside on the bench during the week and preach the everlasting Gospel of the Son of God on Sunday. He was in labors abundant and even to this day there is the aroma of a good name and affectionate memories of John Edmund Jones.

In all these activities there was the helpful, sympathetic encouragement of the devout and consecrated woman in the home. How much of the successes in life are due to the silent though salient and powerful bracing which are furnished without stint by her who "Thou didst give unto me!"

Sister Jones was the fond mother of seven children. Some have gone to heaven and the others are on the way. "They are seven." She gave three boys to the lost cause. The bones of one are bleaching in the dust near the historic city of Vicksburg, while the other two sleep in North Mississippi, where they fell in defense of mother, home and native land. The surviving son, Col. J. H. Jones, passed through the trying scenes of war, making a brilliant record as a soldier and bringing back to his aged mother the trophies, not of the enemies of defeat, but the evidence of an unsullied and unblemished record, more sacred to the loyal mother's heart than the most monumental expression of the vanquished foe.

Sister Jones' religious career was simultaneous with the beginning of her valuable life. She was baptized by Bishop Asbury in her infancy and was brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Her whole life was one of devotion to every good cause. No wonder that the radiant sunset followed such a life. The windows stood ajar from both the earthward and heavenly side of life until the last expiring gasp closed the avenues on this side.

She leaves three daughters, for whom the writer bespeaks the comfort which comes from the upper sanctuary.

C. A. POWELL.

MEMOIR OF SISTER G. W. BACHMAN.

Mrs. Eugene Susan Bachman was born in DeSoto County, Miss., Nov. 18, 1841. Her parents were Mary and Hubbard Mitchell, who, like Zacharias and Elizabeth, were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. Out of this devoutly religious home came the beautiful character who is the subject of this notice. She professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Church in her 13th year, in which she was faithful and efficient until she was transferred to Heaven Tuesday morning at 3 o'clock on January 10, 1906.

She was happily married to Rev. G. W. Bachman near Sardis, Miss., Nov. 1, 1866. During more than 30 years she was the true and devoted companion of one of our most faithful itinerant Methodist preachers. She was a model wife and mother, according to the picture given in Holy Scripture, Proverbs, 31st chapter, 10-29 verses. In every sphere and relation of life she illustrated the characteristics of true Christian womanhood. She crowned her home by observing the teaching given in Ephesians, 5th chapter, 21-22; I. Timothy, 3d chapter, 11; Titus, 2d chapter, 3-6; I. Peter, 3 chapter, 1-6.

She was indeed a home-maker, as is seen in the true Christian lives of her devoted husband and six affectionate children, the eldest daughter having preceded her 20 years ago. The intelligent, self-sacrificing daughter and the four strong, successful sons attest the blessing and strength of this Godly home. Sister Bachman was a great sufferer for several years previous to her decease. During these years she evidenced due preparation for the better world. She was tender, gentle, modest and kind, and ready to assist those in need of help and comfort. She never had a thought for herself, but always for others. Her life is an unanswerable argument for the Christian religion. When the end came she was rational, calm and victorious. All was heaven to her and consolation to the bereaved family.

The crowning blessing of the last six months of her life was the daily enjoyment of her only grandchild, little Elizabeth Bachman. The father and mother of this bright child have the consolation of this thoughtful kindness to their sainted mother. Brother Bachman and his devoted children are assured of the sympathy of the entire community and of a large circle of friends in this and other states. This world is better and the church blessed because Sister Bachman lived.

THE EVIL OF CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS FOR MONEY-MAKING PURPOSES.

Feeling that there was need of concerted action among our preachers and official boards, the writer introduced a resolution in the late session of the Louisiana Conference declaring all manner of bazaars and church entertainments for money-making purposes to be out of harmony with the spirit of Christ and the best interests of the church. The prompt tabling of this resolution was all but proof positive of a general mixup of the leaders of our Louisiana Methodism in one of the serious worldly tendencies of our commercial age and came as a surprise in that it seemed to represent the mind of the majority. The resolution made no reference to the important and legitimate work of the Epworth League or Home Mission Society in making the social life of the church as pure and happy as it is possible to make it; but the aim was against the mercenary idea of running the church for money-making purposes that tend to dry the fountains of liberality and to enter the church as a competitor with the restaurant and theater in feeding and amusing the public.

The church entertainment is generally planned and executed by the women, either as individuals or as organizations and cannot be too hastily condemned, lest an injustice be done that part of the membership without whose loving service the church would not long survive. The fault does not lie in their motive, but in the false idea that the church must have money, without regard to the principle involved in its getting, and not being able to command the gifts of the family to the extent of their desire, and because so many seem but little interested in supporting the benevolent enterprises of the church, yet so willing to spend money for anything that affords them pleasure, some of our home mission and aid societies have become but little more than periodical oyster soup and ice cream dispensaries and moral entertainment bureaus. They are not to be blamed, but highly commended, for their laborious efforts to augment the depleted treasuries of the church, and upon their own merits their gains would be most honorable. But herein lies the fault: They don't sell their goods upon their merits, but use the reverent name of the church, the bride of the Eternal Son, as the motive to which they appeal to men, and this is not legitimate business. Men do not advertise their wares for sale in the name of a sick wife, or ask people to buy that they might educate their children, or build a "nest" for the newly-mated pair, but because their goods are worth the price asked. In this way the garment sold, the brood of chickens reared, the cake baked or any other commercial commodity put on the market by the deft hand of woman yields a most honorable and legitimate revenue and is hers to do with as she wills, to consume it on herself or as the widow's mite to present it to the Lord as her all. But as a rule her service is worth more to her family than in the marts of trade, and she cannot run restaurants and refresment stands upon their merits, and hence the use of the name of the church to accomplish what her legitimate toil and commercial worth has failed to do. When men buy to help a fellow in need, often something they could get cheaper elsewhere, or could do without altogether, they have created in them either pity or disgust for the beneficiary, and until self-respecting women furnish their own houses and pay their own servants by giving "benefit" entertainments they should not insult a Methodist preacher, who is supposed to be capable of earning a livelihood and worthy of his hire, by offering to furnish him a home by asking the people to eat and drink it out. And how a preacher with self-respect can accept it is more than we can at present understand. If he be considered either a brother "in the Lord," a "servant of the church," or a "messenger of God," he deserves more than to be put before a curious and hungry world as an object of charity. And the day he allows his name, either for his salary or for his home, to go before the world as an appeal for men to buy oyster soup and ice cream from some misguided women who have forgotten or have never learned the Christian rule for giving, he has lost, or is beginning to lose, the respect of first class people, who always honor a manly, self-respecting man.

The church entertainment is a reversal of God's order in establishing the church to save the world, while this is an appeal to the world to save the church. Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers were given "for the perfecting of the saints" and the "edifying of the body of Christ," and any move of the church that counteracts this spiritual mission of the church is an innovation neither authorized nor approved of God. Here, as elsewhere, experience is worth more than speculation, and the rule is in proportion as the church entertainment flourishes the spiritual mission of the church languishes. The day the church dons the cook apron and announces her entertainment program she crosses the Rubicon of her saving power and separates herself from the genuine respect of the world, in contempt for the appeal to the appetites rather than the noble principles to be found in all men. This is no argument against the institutional church, the Young Men's Christian Association or the Salvation Army, with their bathtubs, kitchens and social parlors. These are means of "compelling men to come in," while the sole aim of the "entertainment" is to get their money. The church in Paul's and Wesley's days didn't have much money nor fine buildings, but she had grace and self-sacrificing service and was a saving power—the salt of the earth. But we have never known a church that to any considerable extent depended upon the entertainment plan for money but had lost its saving power and the reverent respect of the world. The zealous workers in these entertainments, except those spiritual ones who do so under protest, are worth but little or nothing in the prayer meeting or revival, and as soul winners they have "lost their savor" and most likely their own households are unsaved. Our present pastoral charge is an example. The church building is a splendid edifice, but recently painted by entertainment money, and we were greeted as the new preacher, at our first service upon a pleasant Christmas Sunday by an audience of twelve persons, men, women and children, strangers and visitors, in a town of 2,000 inhabitants and no other Protestant church. On this same Sunday every branch of commercial life was running in full blast, contrary to the laws of the state, and these same people were liberal patrons of the oyster stews and ice cream festivals, thus easing their conscience in their wickedness or else deciding that all the church wanted of them was their money. But what is a nice church building worth if empty or having no influence over men? Or a parsonage built by worldlings who in its building lost their respect for the pastor who was to occupy it? Such a church and such a pastor is as the salt that has lost its savor and are only fit to be "cast out and trodden under the foot of men." The loss is too great and the gain too trifling to make the sacrifice.

The church entertainment as a source of revenue is contrary to God's rule of giving. At a tremendous sacrifice He gave His own Son, and any method of giving to Him that destroys the self-sacrificing element is contrary to true piety. God doesn't need our money as much as we need to give it. The cattle on a thousand hills are His, and when necessary He fed His people on manna and the ravens carried bread to His servant. But we need the discipline without which spiritually we die. Cheap religion like cheap gifts can't hold the reverence and esteem of the world. When Abraham met Melchizedeck he didn't organize his servants into a goat stew society to get money from the Canaanites, but gave this priest of God a tithe of all. Paul didn't leave Sisters Phoebe and Priscilla to fix up appetizing dishes to sell the covetous heathen to get money for the poor saints at Jerusalem and to build churches and parsonages as much as they were needed, but reminded the disciples of the Lord Jesus, who for their sakes "He came poor," and exhorted them to "lay by on the first day of the week as the Lord had prospered them."

What a chasm between this method of appeal and the jingle of church supper bells! Their gifts were the measure of their love for Christ through "whose poverty they had become rich." The widow's mite "was all she had" and was thus a greater gift than the pounds of the rich. But among our most energetic oyster stew and ice cream dispensers there is a deliberate plan upon the part of many to extract the money from worldlings while they themselves give little. Jerubabel refused to let the adversaries of Israel have part in the rebuilding of the temple, and if the church is jealous of her good name she cannot afford to accept any gift except from one under the reverent sense of obligation and in the giving is led to love the cause of Christ the more. Exactly the opposite is true of the church entertainments. Moses, in building the tabernacle, and David, in collecting funds to build the temple, had no time to fill the stomachs and offer amusements to the people, but preached to them their obligations to God, and their gifts came in abundance. Time spent in revivals and visiting the sick and in united prayer for the unsaved is more profitable than in freezing ice cream and selling grab-bags. Come Thou again O Christ and cast out these latter-day money changers, who as of old are turning "the house of prayer" into "a den of thieves."

The fittest of all for membership in the kingdom are the children. When Christ's ideal is realized, it will be a Church of children—that is, whose membership shall consist in the main of those whose entrance into it was under the natural and easy conditions furnished by childhood, and whose spiritual growth has kept pace with the physical and intellectual development until a well-rounded manhood has been attained under the laws of growth which belong to all the kingdoms of life.—Selected.

"THE TOBACCO HABIT."

"Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor; so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honor."

If the author of "The Tobacco Habit" in the Advocate of January 18 is the same "Circuit Rider," famous for wisdom on the subject of "Baptism," and else, then surely this, his last effort, is the "fly," or rather the whole swarm, in the ointment. Any 10-year-old schoolboy would be ashamed of that chain of argument, in the face of what is being taught in all our public institutions of learning on "Scientifice Temperance," and by the time his "science" gets all the poison out people will have ceased to want to take up such a habit, only surpassed by strong drink. Every argument he uses could be used in favor of whisky with as much "truth" and "poetry" as he claims for his "pet habit."

Dr. Talmage was once asked if a man could be a Christian and use tobacco. He said, "Possibly; but he would be a filthy one." The Bible says, "Let him that is filthy be filthy still;" but offers nothing in justification.

The question is not "Is it less harmful than some other things, but if it is at all harmful?" and everybody knows it is. Then Christians, especially ministerial Christians, cannot afford to set an example that would "cause one of these little ones to stumble." If he does he may look out for the millstone. "The average laboring man" who loves his dram "works with a contentment that is surprising" when he has it, and resorts to all kinds of patent medicines when he has it not. Better let him have it, eh? Circuit Rider seems to hold that men must "chew," and since they must the "natural leaf" is as good as anything to work on. Goats chew most all the time, and are not very particular about what they chew, but sheep have some preferences. If "a nickel's worth of gum will last a week" it is certainly more economical, and dust, even a week's accumulation on the "mantel," does not compare with the dirt the "natural leaf" accumulates, as it is prepared for the consumer by someone already in the consuming business who is "a good marksman."

Because some are intemperate in the use of coffee, pork and language, such as "For the Lord's sake, give him a little rest," is no reason why I should justify myself in wrong-doing. "Be ye temperate in all things." Some preachers and people seem to think that the Lord's name coupled with profanity is the only way of taking it "in vain;" but if we will carefully and prayerfully analyze the term "in vain," if we are honest, we will change our way of speaking and writing and become more reverential.

With shame we confess that some "good sisters feel free to dip," and because they do, like Circuit-Rider, pronounce it harmless. No woman liveth unto herself and no woman dieth unto herself. My grandfather on my father's side was one who was "nauseated by the smell of it," while grandmother drew consolation in her old age through the pipe stem, like so many heroes in temperance (?) fiction.

If the "scapegoat preacher" and his chewing flock should cease to buy, the "merchant and farmer would seek more remunerative employment." We prefer sulphur to drive away Mrs. Stegomyia. I have two boys and I do not want any preacher, be he Circuit Rider or Bishop, to set the example of tobacco using before them. If preachers are not safe examples for boys to follow, it is time there was a change of some kind.

A WORD TO YOUNG MEN.

Dear Advocate:—

I deem it a duty I owe to the young men as well as to myself that I write this article. I am fully aware that our young men do not participate in drinking and are improving in good morals and are seeing the injury whisky is doing in our country. I am an ex-Confederate wounded soldier, was a member of a Mississippi regiment, composed mostly of Irishmen. You can imagine what I have seen in times past in regard to this miserable fluid. I am living here in Jackson, and not far from me a man is living who was bitten by a snake. The physician prescribed whisky, and as the man had been cured of the whisky habit he positively refused to accept of it as a medicine, stating that he had rather die than return to his old habits. The consequence was the man recovered and was yet living the last account I had of him.

In nearly all acounts of killing you see in the large daily newspapers it is stated that the killing was done in a saloon and was caused by drinking the miserable stuff. I am now nearly 70 years of age. I have raised three sons to be grown, and I have not raised a drunkard or a gambler. My sons do not know how to play a game of ball. I do not know the taste of spirituous liquors of any kind.

I beg of you, young men, to refrain from drinking any intoxicating liquor of any kind whatever, under any and all circumstances. I ask this of you, to take the advice of an old friend that will not be here much longer to advise you. Goodby.

RESOLUTIONS.

BISHOP JOHN C. KEENER.

Jackson, La., Jan. 24, 1906.

At a mass meeting called by the citizens of Jackson, La., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted relative to the death of the late Bishop John C. Keener of the city of New Orleans:

Resolved, First, That we the citizens of Jackson, La., in the mayor's office assembled, do hereby tender our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family of the late Bishop John C. Keener of the city of New Orleans.

Second, That the State of Louisiana, the church of which he was long time a bishop, and the cause of Christian education suffer irreparable loss at his going. No man has more fully complemented his theories by practice than he. In his life there was work in behalf of Centenary College, and in his death she was not forgotten, it being a most positive and substantial evidence of this fact that Centenary is a beneficiary of his will. His unselfish, life-long devotion is confirmed in his death.

Third, That in the darkest hour of reconstruction, when the South lay bleeding at the feet of her enemies, and when the college was friendless and penniless—even falling down piecemeal—he laid aside other church affairs and spent weeks driving over the hills and valleys of Louisiana and Mississippi and raised the sum of $20,000 to rebuild Centenary's columns and walls. While we were threatened with the "black plague" of reconstruction times, he, with others, of the now sainted dead secured the release of the college from a $10,000 debt, whereby the state could have appointed colored students to Centenary College.

Bishop Keener, when invited to be present at the recent commencement of Centenary College, in the sublime poetry of his nature, looking upward, replied: "There are two Centenaries for me. By that time I shall be at the big Centenary above." When others despaired, his heart beat stronger with hope.

Now I speak of one who has ascended,
Upon whose saintly head and radiant form
Rest four score years, and with them blended
The sparkling dew of Heaven's morn.
He always hoped, and prayed, and smiled,
And never lacked abundant faith
In Centenary, his adopted child.

The last codicil to his will blesses the college with his dying breath, reminding us of the classic strain. "Even in death 'twere sweet to think of thee." The last stroke of his pen and work of his hand were dedicated to Centenary College and the church; then the great Bishop took ship for the Eternal Shore. An unfinished page shows where he laid aside his pen to answer the invitation of the bridegroom and to be at the wedding feast with Christ.

Wherefore, be it further resolved that we, the citizens of Jackson, La., deplore his death and the loss of an unselfish and devoted friend; and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Times-Democrat, the Picayune and the Christian Advocate of New Orleans.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1906.

In the race of life every man must look ahead and move. To do otherwise is to make partnership with sloth and poverty.

Mrs Hetty Green is quoted as saying: "If people talked less there would be fewer fools on record." It would be hard for a witty Irishman to beat that.

To sit down and whine, or grumble at Providence when misfortunes come will do no more good than to grieve over spilt milk. Take the situation cheerfully and try again.

It is natural for men of advanced ideas to poke fun at the old fogies who hold on to the doxies, and plod along in the way the fathers trod, but the laugh is turned when the fast runners fly the track and the old fogies are depended on to prize them back.

To be poor in this world's goods is no evidence of divine displeasure, nor is it always according to the order of Providence. The Lord's will is that every man labor and accumulate for his own good, and the good of his fellow man.

The purpose of God in the Gospel may be made manifest and the soul brought under conviction, but conviction may be thrown off and God's purpose thwarted. It is only on condition of complete submission to God's will that grace can do its work.

We have long been acquainted with the "Yellow Journal." We are now told that we have among us the "Yellow Pulpit." Both are intended to attract attention and make a sensation. The respectable public will have no more to do with the one than the other.

A little man came to the city a few years ago as pastor of a little church on a corner. He was a stranger—wore a high-top silk hat, and strutted. Somebody said, "He will get out of that hat in about six months." In less than a year he was out of both the hat and the city. Moral: Small men will come to grief if they undertake to attract attention in a big city.

People who attend church solely for the sake of the music, whether it be operatic or ragtime, will not listen with patience to the sermonette which the choir graciously allows the preacher to wedge in between the acts. The music is intended to draw crowds—not to save souls. There is no craftiness in fiddles and flutes and brass bands. They draw and please, but never convict or edify.

IN GEOMETRICAL PROGRESSION.

The editor of the Baptist and Reflector, of Nashville, in an issue of his paper, not very far back (as we see quoted in one of our exchanges), invited all the people to come into the Baptist Church. The invitation was based on the rapid increase of the Baptists—an increase so rapid as to induce the editor to believe that "the stone cut out of the mountains without hands" is soon to "fill the whole earth." This stone, the late Dr. J. R. Graves used to say, "is the Baptist Church."

That Editor Folk believes not only in the perpetuity of the Baptist churches, but that the time will come when there will be no other kind of churches in the world, and that the sooner we all surrender and come in the better, we are not at all surprised, but we are surprised at his saying that geometrical progression represents the rapidity of the increase of the Baptists. "Geometrical proportion," we believe, is the word he used. Certainly he did not weigh the meaning of his words. That the Baptists are increasing at a great rate we all know, but that the increase is by geometrical progression or proportion is far from the fact. On no basis whatever could he truthfully make such a claim. We do not know how many years Dr. Folk allows for the doubling of the Baptists, but on the supposition that they were organized into a church about the time our Lord preached his sermon on the Mount, and somewhere near the place it was preached, as Dr. Folk has asserted, by increasing in geometrical progression—doubling, say, every seventy-five years, they should number to-day about 34,000,000 members. But they scarcely count one-fifth of that number.

If Dr. Folk counts from the origin of the Baptists in the United States—i. e., at Providence, R. I., in 1639—he will be able to make actually a better showing, but if he compares the progress of the Baptists with the Methodists during the period, relatively his showing is not so good. But such a comparison would spoil Dr. Folk's figures. Dating the existence of Methodism in an organized form from 1739, 100 years after Roger Williams organized the first Baptist Church in America, we find that the former has actually outstripped the latter. The numerical strength of both organizations is in the United States.

According to the latest figures we have seen, the Baptists number 4,976,234. The Methodists number 6,350,670. If in 167 years the Methodists have overtaken and outstripped them to the number 1,374,436, what would be the strength of Methodism had it got an even start with the Baptists in the United States? And if at the end of only 167 years Methodism is able to number 6,350,670, what would be the number had our Lord organized it into a church at the same time Dr. Folk says he organized the first Baptist Church? Who can tell?

Dr. Folk tells us that "it will be but a little while until all are in the Baptist Church." Here again he misses his calculation if he counts time as the most of us do. While the Baptists are increasing, it must not be forgotten that others are increasing also. The rate of increase among the Baptists and Methodists is not very far apart. But even if it is twice as great in the Baptist host, it will be centuries, instead of "a little while," before the Baptists absorb the Methodists. And when Dr. Folk takes into consideration the fact that, combining all the evangelical churches, to say nothing of the Roman Catholics, there is a much larger increase, both actually and relatively, than among the Baptists, he will find that the final judgment will still see the Baptists striving in the race. In the forefront it may be, but accompanied by millions who were never immersed. And until all are immersed the Baptists cannot claim to have won the fight.

THE REFORM OF FOOTBALL.

Football as now played is not a sport. It is a fight, pure and simple—the victory depending not on skill, but force. The chances are always in favor of weight. Nor are the intercollegiate combats amateur altogether. They are partly professional. Coaches who have no connection with any school are employed on good salaries; and not infrequently, if reports are true, some of the best players are not bona fide students. Besides, gate fees are exacted—the receipts far exceeding the needs of the college association, a single fight sometimes netting thousands of dollars. The gate fees of Harvard and Yale amounted to something between $60,000 and $100,000. What the managers did with the money is a matter of inquiry.

For several seasons past the brutality accompanying the combats has been a matter of protest, but the teams and the college faculties have paid no attention to the complaints of the public. The loss of life, skull-cracking, bone-breaking and injuries, internal and external, had no effect. These were regarded as the sacrifices schools must make in order to attract students and maintain their prestige. It is even said that a boy feels it an honor to be borne from the field with a broken bone. If he lives, he has something to talk about the remainder of his life.

But there is an awakening. The killing outright of twenty-two young men in the short space of two months and the wounding and maiming of nearly two hundred others is a price too big to pay for the empty honors coming to a school through football. Princeton University has determined to reform its football rules. It has also determined "that the number of intercollegiate contests be materially decreased and the length of the season for such contests be correspondingly shortened." Chicago University has also spoken, members of the faculty taking the grounds that football has descended to the level of common prize fights.

Columbia University has "abolished all intercollegiate athletics and wiped football entirely out of college affairs. This means that sport at Columbia is to be purely a matter of recreation and health building. Gate receipts and the idea of competition with other colleges are to be things of the past."

These reforms have been taken by schools in the North. If more than two institutions in the South have taken steps looking to the preservation of football by eliminating its objectionable and dangerous features, we have seen no notice of it. But we have noticed that some of the strong and popular daily papers are on the right side and contending for the reform rather than the abolition of the sport. It would be a matter of great gratification to many thousands of Methodists if our own Vanderbilt University would take the initiative in the matter and set our smaller colleges a good example. But our hope of seeing this is small. The athletic spirit, too, generally prevails and meets with too much encouragement at the hands of some members of the faculty and the city press to afford any ground for hope of reform. Students at our smaller colleges who have been chafing because not allowed to engage in intercollegiate games will after awhile find themselves in good company. And we dare say none of the great schools will lose students because they forbid football combats.

CIRCUIT RIDER AND TOBACCO.

An avalanche of letters in regard to Circuit Rider's piece on tobacco has come down upon us. We have received many more than we can print. We print one in this issue. Another letter, which contains only a short and sharp allusion, will follow. The others will rest quietly where they are.

The editor is not surprised at being criticised for admitting Circuit Rider's article. Possibly we acted hastily and imprudently, but we are not conscience-smitten — not believing that Circuit Rider intended a serious defense of the tobacco habit. We think a careful reading will show that he intended to save good men who use tobacco from unqualified condemnation, rather than to defend the use of the weed. Circuit Rider is a man of too much sense to undertake a defense of the general use of tobacco.

The letters received on the subject clearly show that we have among us good men not only opposed to the use of tobacco, but men of intolerant spirit. They believe that a person who uses tobacco cannot be a Christian, and declare themselves ready to withhold all support from a preacher who smokes or chews. And, of course, they cannot fellowship a tobacco user.

We believe the intolerant spirit shown in the letters we have received quite as much disqualifies for fellowship as does the use of tobacco.

The editor does not use tobacco.

PERSONAL.

Rev. A. R. Holfpauir, Glenmora, La., is at his post, "determined, by God's help, to have a good year."

Rev. F. A. Grimes desires his correspondents to address him at Washington, Miss., instead of Hamburg, as heretofore.

Rev. W. H. Lane, Decatur, Miss., says: "We are moving on nicely and successfully, indeed, with the Lord's work this new year."

Rev. W. W. Holmes has entered hopefully on another year's work at Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans. The prospect is encouraging.

Rev. J. C. Long, in charge of Neshoba Circuit, is well pleased with the work and the outlook, and is doing well. The report at first Quarterly Conference was very gratifying.

Rev. C. C. Gibson has been cordially received by the good people of Olah, Miss. His health has improved, and he has entered upon his work hopefully—prospects being bright.

Rev. J. W. Honnoll, of Hillhouse, is in fine health, and delighted with his work. He says: "I have the best chance to read and study I have ever had." And to write, too, we suppose.

Rev. R. B. Downer, who has been in feeble health for a long time, has recently lost hearing. But he can use his pen, and our readers will occasionally get the benefit of what he writes.

Rev. J. B. Stone, who recently returned from Texas to his home at Winona, Miss., is feeble in health, but patient and resigned. There are no clouds in his sky. He has the best attention of his dutiful and devoted children.

Rev. J. A. Alford, of Tranquil Circuit, whose postoffice is Eden, Miss., says of his new charge: "Prospects are flattering for a good year. I have a good people to serve, but the harvest is great and the laborers are few."

Rev. T. J. O'Neil, of Philadelphia, has been well received by the members of his charge, and they propose to do well by him in temporal things. We feel sure Brother O'Neil will do well by them as a pastor. He is one of the faithful.

The good people of Leakesville, Miss., are well pleased with the return of Rev. D. Scarborough as pastor, and Rev. W. M. Sullivan as presiding elder—so we learn from the Greene County Herald, which adds: "The work is in hands that will vigorously prosecute it."

Rev. C. F. Emery, on his return to Fifth Street, Meridian, for the second year, was received with the greatest kindness. The Stewards increased his salary, and the congregation gave him a generous pounding. He declares the outlook to be encouraging.

Our ever-faithful friend and brother, T. M. Babington, of Franklinton, La., has again brought us under obligation to him for securing the renewals and new subscribers in and around his good town — all accompanied by check to cover the cost. We tip our hat to the faithful layman, and thank him.

Dr. F. N. Parker, passing through the city en route to New Iberia and other points on his district, spent a while in the Advocate office on Wednesday last. We call attention of the District Stewards and preachers in the Crowley District to the change in the time of the District Stewards' meeting—from Feb. 13 to Feb. 21.

Presiding Elder Mitchell, of the Aberdeen District, has made a good start, much better than last year. Preachers are all in place, and both preachers and people are pleased. Stewards are increasing salaries, and goodwill everywhere prevails. The District Stewards' meeting was harmonious. They likewise did the liberal thing for the presiding elder.

Rev. H. P. Crowe has charge of a large district in the St. Louis Conference, and is hard at work, well pleased, and succeeding. One parsonage and one church have been built since Conference, and three other churches are in process of construction, two of which will cost $20,000 each, and one $30,000. The work prospers. Brother Crowe is a North Mississippi man.

Rev. O. L. Savage continues to favor this office. He has sent us another batch of subscribers, accompanied by this field note: "The work is moving on smoothly; have received forty-eight members since Conference, and have sent in thirty-nine new subscribers (to the Advocate), with 'more to follow! Ha! Who is ahead?' Well, the ex-presiding elder will have to try again.

Dr. Edward Thomson, General Manager of the Sunday League of America, is now in Tennessee. Thence he goes to Kentucky. He expects to give March to Mississippi. All the pastors who desire his services for either preaching or lectures should write him a card at once, as his itinerary for March is now being made. Address him at his residence, 301 Hemphill Street, Fort Worth, Tex.

Rev. A. W. Langley informs us of the death of Mrs. Ellis, widow of the late Rev. S. A. Ellis, of North Mississippi Conference. She died at the home of Dr. Wm. Wills, of Texas, on the 10th, and was buried at Potts Camp, Miss., on the 18th. She was much loved in that community, where she spent the last years of her life. The writer knew her well, and can bear testimony to her consistent Christian life.

The Daily Leader, of New Iberia, La., gives in its issue of Jan. 16 a fine estimate of the character and work of Rev. A. W. Turner, who served that charge during the past two years. He has faithfully preached the Word, pointing out the way of holy living, and fearlessly denouncing every sin. During his pastorate the church grew in membership, and was active in all good works. Brother Turner was popular both in the church and out, and goes to his new charge (Grand Cane) with the best wishes of all good citizens.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Last Sunday was a dreary day in this section, but I found warmth and sunshine in the hospitable home of Brother Campbell at Edwards, Miss.

Despite the unfavorable weather, a fairly good congregation met for worship, and Brothers Wilson Price and J. W. Ratliff made generous contributions to our endowment fund.

Everything is moving on satisfactorily at the College. The second half-session begins next Thursday, Feb. 1. This will be a favorable time for new students to enter. W. B. MURRAH.

NOTICE.

To the Members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference:

The year is fast drawing to a close. This next month is the last meeting before the reports must be sent in and the account rendered. Let nothing interfere with this last meeting. Bring all the work up in full.

The Treasurer reports that we are behind on the pledge. This amount, as you know, is $1,600, $750 of which goes to support our own missionary, Miss Janie Watkins, Lake Charles, who took care of Miss Watkins last year; has accorded this pleasure to us, and we must not be unmindful of our duty and privilege.

In sending in the reports be sure to record very accurately the number of new members, as we wish to know how many of the 800 pledged have been secured.

The money for the scholarship at the Training School has been coming in all too slowly. This is a great opportunity. Let no member of the Society neglect it. Work hard this month and pray fervently that all we have undertaken may be accomplished. Send in the reports on time.

Yours in the work.

MRS. A. F. WATKINS,
Corresponding Secretary.

OUR CLUB RATES.

Twenty subscribers at $1.25 each is the minimum number at that rate. Brethren may get as many more as possible at the same figure. Renewals may also be included, provided all arrearages are paid.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE MINUTES.

The printer promised to finish the Minutes in ten days after receipt of copy. He has now had it over a month. I am using all possible diligence to hurry him in the work, and hope to have the Minutes in the hands of the brethren by Feb. 10, at the latest. Meantime no one is more disappointed than I. TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN EUROPE.

The tenth International Anti-Alcoholic Congress was recently held in Budapest. The proceedings were marked by a sober but none the less earnest and uncompromising opposition to the use of alcohol in any form. Emphasis was placed by word and method upon the need and effectiveness of appealing to reason rather than emotion in the crusade against drink. Of especial importance was the revelation of the prevalence and increase of intemperance in European countries north and south. This will probably come as a surprise to many in this country who have been wont to hold up the temperance of wine drinking Europe in order to prove habitual drinking is not necessarily conducive to drunkenness. Even from Munich, celebrated for its beer, came the severest indictment against beer drinking. From this conference temperance workers in America may strengthen at least one argument and learn one lesson. Intemperance lurks as surely in wine and beer as in whisky, and even more seductively. No less important for effective temperance work is the lesson of direct sober appeal to reason instead of resorting to imaginative overstatement and emotional exhortation. — Southern Christian Advocate.

AN ANCIENT CHINESE ABSTAINER

Several years ago there was published a translation of a very old Chinese religious book, entitled "Oneness in Virtue." No one can tell when it was written, but it was certainly many hundreds of years ago. The writer, whose name was Sun Chien-Cain, speaking of the wine, says:

"Through wine the scholar loses his good name, the magistrate his office, the merchant his trade, and the artisan his work. Person, property, friends, family and life, are all injured. What difference is there between it and a venomous serpent?

"Wine is a cruel ax that cuts down the character. Is it good or evil to give or to press upon a man as a kindness that which may injure him?

"Some may escape the evil, but nine out of every ten are destroyed. Wine may be of excellent flavor, but it is a madman's medicine. Wine is the source of disorder; it bequeaths hosts of hideous things; it spoils longevity and hands down vicious habits."—Exchange.

CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

"There is a famous prescription in use in England for the cure of drunkenness, by which thousands are said to have been assisted in recovering themselves. The recipe came into notoriety through the efforts of John Vine Hall, Commander of the steamship, Great Eastern.

He had fallen into such habitual drunkenness that his most earnest efforts to reclaim himself proved unavailing.

At length he sought the advice of an eminent physician who gave him a prescription which he followed faithfully for seven months, and at the end of that time had lost all desire for liquor although he had been for years led captive by a most debasing appetite.

The recipe which he afterwards published is as follows: "Five grains of sulphate of iron, ten grains of magnesia, eleven drachms of peppermint water and one drachm of spirits of nutmeg. Dose, teaspoonful twice a day; to be taken in water."

This preparation acts as a tonic and stimulant, and so partially supplies the place of accustomed liquor, and prevents the absolute physical and moral prostration that follows a sudden breaking off of the use of stimulating drinks.—Exchange.

MAGAZINES AND LIQUOR ADVERTISING.

It is a gratifying fact that the leading magazines of the country are excluding all whisky and other advertising of alcoholic liquors. Among the magazines in which whisky advertisements have found no place for some months are "Everybody's and "McClure's," both of which periodicals publicly declare that no such advertising can find a place in their pages. All magazines and high-class papers, weekly and daily, will before long take the same position. Liquor-drinking is becoming unpopular with the best type of American life. This fact alone should teach those who are trying to secure the restoration of the army canteen the unwisdom, not to say the folly of such course. Should the canteen be restored, the agitation for its abolition will continue. The government service should no more be contaminated by the presence of the liquor saloon than should the pages of the leading magazines and papers be contaminated by the presence of liquor advertising.

A WORD FROM KOSCIUSKO.

I am glad to say that our work here continues to prosper. We had 118 at Sunday School yesterday. Our Epworth League is doing some good work. The missionary societies are active and the congregations are large. I have received twelve into the church since Conference. We expect Dr. Murrah to spend the second Sunday in March with us, and anticipate pleasant and profitable times.

Have you Neurasthenia?

DR. HATHAWAY
Recognized as the Oldest Established and Most Reliable Specialist.

or commonly known as nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, lost vitality, etc. This is the brain-workers' disease. It is caused by over-work, malnutrition from deprivation of food, sleep, recreation, mental strain, brought on by too much study, severe shock, etc. The symptoms are poor memory, loss of ambition and energy, nervousness, sleeplessness, easily fatigued, severe headaches, dull listless feelings, inability to concentrate thoughts, subject to spells of despondency, indigestion, bad dreams, etc.

If you have any of these symptoms sit down and write to Dr. J. Newton Hathaway, of Atlanta. This specialist has given Neurasthenia special study for nearly a quarter of a century, and there is no other physician in the country more competent to advise or to treat you. He has recently issued a valuable essay on this important subject, which ought to be read by every person, whether sick or well. It is free—write for it. Medical advice free to every sufferer. Other diseases cured. Address Dr. Hathaway & Co., 57 Inman Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

INVERNESS, MISS.

Dear Brother Boswell: I found at Inverness a splendid people, and, I think, ready to enter heartily into the work. We have been received with open arms and hearts, and provision has been made for a home for us until a parsonage can be built. We have, I think, ample assurance that one will be built just as soon as weather conditions permit. Our people seem anxious for it, and, regardless of the short crop of last season, and of present depression in business, express a readiness to contribute liberally to this work.

Already funds have been raised and furniture bought to furnish the house in which we live, and we have a sufficiency to supply the present need. The preacher will not suffer, either, as a liberal assessment will be made for his support. Already the good people have begun to show their concern in a material way.

We have had no "storm," but every day, almost, since we came something has been sent to the preacher's home. We have lacked for nothing for the table or the purse.

I am praying that this may be a year of progress and prosperity for the church. We need a revival all over the charge. Pray that we may have it. We have already visited three of the four churches on the work, and met appreciative congregations everywhere. Have visited nearly all the members of these three churches, and without exception found a cordial welcome. S. B. MYERS.

PLEASANT HILL, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: On my return home I met wife and baby at Sibley, so we hastened to pack up and get ready to move and sell our furniture, as we found that the parsonage was already furnished on our new work.

We notified our steward at Pleasant Hill we would be Thursday night, the 18th, and the good people went to the train to meet us, about fifty in number, while some of the good sisters prepared supper for us, but on account of baby Grace being too sick, we did not reach here at the time appointed, but was one day late.

We assure you that the good people of this place gave us a warm reception—the most pleasant one we have ever received at the hands of any people. Just such a pounding as was awaiting us!—flour, meal, sugar, coffee, rice, oatmeal, cottolene, soda, tea, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, butter and canned goods, all of which none know how to appreciate better than a Methodist preacher and his wife. We are expecting great things of the Lord this year, and ask the prayers of all the readers of the Advocate that I may have revivals throughout the charge. Yours fraternally,

W. A. HART, P. C.

CENTENARY NOTES.

Boys, why not come to Centenary? Now is a good time to enter, as we shall soon begin a new term. Some of you have waited a long time, but usually it is better late than never. Quite a number have come in since the 1st of January, and still you are not here, and you have not gone anywhere else. You boys, who belong to the Methodist Church of Louisiana, what are your reasons for not being here? Is it because you think that our mental capabilities will not equal yours? Or do you think that our crowd is too small for you? If such as these be your excuses, we simply ask you to come and try us awhile.

Since 1827 men have been going out from Centenary, and they are still going. Some of the greatest men in the state have been boys here, and we believe that the record will not be broken by those who are here now.

The Y. M. C. A. at Centenary for the past four years has been one of the strongest and best organized associations of the six Southwestern states. This we are told by the traveling secretaries. A few days ago Mr. W. A. Tener, a secretary, from New York, visited our association in the interest of the Convention to be held in March at Nashville, Tenn. The officers of the Y. M. C. A. are as follows: President, H. E. Townsend; Vice President, T. D. Lipscomb; Treasurer, C. B. Tomb; Secretary, J. F. McKneeley; Librarian, J. E. Craig. All the students on the campus are now members, and a large per cent are taking an active part.

The Union Literary Society, at its regular meeting some time ago, elected the following officers: President, H. E. Townsend; Vice President, C. B. Tomb; Critic, R. A. Miller; Secretary, J. McKneely; Assistant Secretary, J. Craig; Sergeant, E. A. Hoffpauir. A great deal of interest is manifested by the students in the debates that are held every Saturday night, and no little improvement has been made in public speaking. We expect to accomplish a great deal during this second term, and our number is being increased all the time. We hope to have one or more intercollegiate debates some time soon.

To those who are thinking of going to school somewhere during this second term, let me say: We should be glad to have you with us, and we believe it will be with you as it is with so many others—that is, once you are here, you will never want to leave (the experience of many).

HOW TO GET RID OF CATARRH.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and Costs Nothing—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent Southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to DR. J. W. BLOSSER, 469 WALTON STREET, ATLANTA, GA., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

Sunday, Feb. 4, 1906.

Immediately after our Lord's baptism "the Spirit driveth him into the wilderness," and he was there forty days tempted of Satan.

We are not capable of comprehending the horrible fact of the Son of God being tempted. It was the human part of him that was undergoing this ordeal. Not that there was any probability of his yielding, but that, for our comfort in our many temptations, we would know that he had passed through the same trials and troubles. He was with the wild beasts.

After crossing the Jordan, it was not far into the wilderness, and wild beasts, such as the lion and the bear, could roam around without fear of molestation within ten miles of where Jesus was baptized. There was no more desolate country on earth than was this wilderness. It was wild and barren, indeed; no groves of green trees; no grassy slopes—nothing to cheer the tired and weary one; only rocks and ravines, rough mountains and deep valleys; only the peaceful, calm blue sky above to speak peace to the tempted soul.

If in the hour of our temptation we would only look above the earth for support and comfort, our Father would send his "ministering spirits" as he sent them to Jesus in this hour of trial. In our mind, the hardest part for our Lord to bear was his utter loneliness. What a heavenly boon is companionship—to have those near to whom we can go and ask to help bear the burden. Being tempted is the common lot of man. What man is bold enough to tell of the thousand ways in which temptations have come in all their enticing and alluring force? We are ashamed of being tempted. If the victory is gained, be not ashamed, for Jesus was "tempted in all points as we are." St. James says: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation."

Not long ago a young man of this city, a conductor on a trolley car, came into the Company's office at the end of the day's work, and, handing the clerk a purse, said: "Here, take this and put it away, for I have fought the battle of my life against temptation. No living soul saw me pick this up in my car, and it contains a considerable sum of money; many times since I found it I have thought of what this sum would be to me if I kept it."

It was said to him: "Be not ashamed, for our Lord was tempted, too; he has made a way of escape, which will add to your strength in future conflicts." Here was true Christian manhood brought to us in a practical way.

The form of temptation as directed by Satan comes to our Lord as best suited to the person and surroundings; and it teaches us to beware, for Satan selects temptations for us peculiarly adapted to our weakness and desires. While we are watching some weak point in our character, behold the devil will attack us in a most unsuspected manner. Jesus had been long without food, and his first temptation was the suggestion that he use his divine power to make the stones bread. Satan reminded Jesus of the power he possessed. As we think of it now, we wonder why Satan could not see the uselessness of his efforts to make the Lord do as he suggested. Our own appetites are weak points when temptation comes, and great strength is needed to resist the many forms of this kind of trial.

"Man shall not live by bread alone." Satisfying the appetite is not the blessing we should ask, for God has created another want in us—that our souls shall "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," and he has created the human soul in a way that it shall never be satisfied but by his blessed religion, that gives

"Solid comfort while we live,
And sweetest pleasure when we die."

The second temptation was another endeavor on the part of Satan to make Jesus show his power. This time Satan uses a quotation from the Scriptures, but, like all who "wrest the Scripture to their own destruction," he misquoted it. The manner in which a passage of Scripture is applied plainly shows whether one has given God's Word much study.

Why could not the devil see that Jesus' plan of work in setting up his kingdom was all made and agreed upon before he left his throne on high?

The third temptation must have been held back as a last resort by Satan. Jesus knew that Satan was the "Prince of the Power of the Air," and that he had access to the hearts and minds of mankind. "Now," said the devil, "I will vacate and leave you in undisturbed possession of what I have gained, if you will only fall down and worship me." What a horrible suggestion! Now is the time for the Son of God to use his power, and he did. In tones of divine authority he said: "Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve," and Satan left him, and the comfort he needed was sent from the Father by angels, turning the desert place into a place of pleasant abode.

Many times do we need this comfort which was given our Savior, for we are tempted often, and yield and fall often, but let us resist to the last point, being brave soldiers of Christ, taking on the whole armor of God, as described by St. Paul in the 16th chapter of Ephesians; and when we do fall, as we will often, let us, like Jesus in repelling Satan's attacks, use God's Word, giving heed to this passage: "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me." Micah vi, 8.

Let St. Jude's benediction be ours for strength: "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen."

"A Life That is a Trust."—Rom. xiv. 7-10.

Dear Leaguers—"* * * none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." This verse and the three which follow are a precious heirloom, bound and interlaced by the silver cord of unselfishness.

When God's glorious sunshine floods the earth and nature smiles, in response, life seems so full of delightful possibilities. See! yonder comes little Bessie Fairfield. How elastic her step! How radiant her face and how full of hope and happiness her entire appearance! You will speak to her, you say? Why, of course you will, for after a conversation with that bright, Christian girl you feel so cheery at heart, so much stronger for the future, with its vexing problems and its occasional heartaches. Bessie, perchance, little knows what inspiration she brings into your life and mine, and into the lives of all with whom she comes in contact—yet unconsciously and sweetly she is fulfilling the pearly truth uttered by the apostle. Dear girls, let the fragrance of your kindly, unselfish personality bring surcease of pain to the sick, comfort to the sad, good cheer to the lonely, and renewed youth to the old and feeble.

Indeed, one may be, and many are, selfish, as illustrated by that oft-used quotation: "Lord bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife—us four, and no more."

Those who live thus narrowly are not without their influence, but is it the kind of influence you would like to exert? I believe not. No true felicity can abide where the giant Selfishness reigns. Charles Dickens, in his Christmas Carol," tells of the rich man, Scrooge, to whom the ghost of Marley appeared, urging him to dispense of his bounty to the indigent, to remember that his life was a sacred trust, and warning Scrooge to fulfill that trust this side of heaven. He obeyed Marley, who was but God's messenger, and the peace and joy of the Christmas-tide entered his soul.

Our lives are legacies. Whether they are to be desirable ones or not behooves us to settle. We cannot all be great, as were the writers, Shakspeare and Tennyson, or the sculptor, Phidias; or the philosophers, Socrates and Seneca; or the reformers, Luther and Wesley. Though long since dead, behold, they live through their works! I have said, we cannot bequeath to our fellowmen priceless legacies such as theirs, but if we strive to live the Christ life, to emulate "The Crystal" in the sphere alloted to us—why, then, "whether we live, therefore, or die," we "shall be the Lord's."

No one has ever exemplified so perfectly that life is a sacred trust as did Jesus. We see him walk calmly, majestically o'er earth's battle-field, solacing the comfortless, healing the wounded, raising the dead; doing good, and lo! he is the God of the living. We see him incarcerated, scourged, crucified and laid in the tomb, and lo! he is the Lord of the dead. May we not rejoice together this day that we have so wonderful a Redeemer? "Lord both of the dead and the living!"

St. Paul says: "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." I believe, my readers, if we could keep this fact in thought, we would try harder to hold our lives as a sacred trust. To look on his face will be glory indeed, but we must use our talents, whether one or many, so that we shall not be ashamed when he looks upon us. To the world and to our God we owe a glad life, a pure life, a love-filled life, a Spirit-filled life.

"Take my moments and my days.
Let them flow in endless praise."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

EMETTE EUGENE GARDNER died Oct. 4, 1905. He was born in Marshall County, Miss., on Dec. 4, 1884. From his early childhood he was noted for truth and piety. All who knew him loved him. More than twelve months before his death he was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Union. From the day of his conversion to his death he was ever ready to work in his Master's vineyard. As a young Christian, the writer has never known his equal. He was effective in his appeals and a power in prayer. Union Church and community has suffered a great loss by his death. Let me say to the father and mother, sister and brothers of Eugene, that he has gone home to live forever in the beautiful city of God. He is now free from suffering and death, and life to him will be one day of perpetual youth and sunshine. Our loss has been heaven's gain. May we all so live that when death shall come we will be found watching and ready.

W. L. STORMENT, P. C.

B. F. PERKINS departed this life Dec. 26, 1905, at his home near Brooklyn, Perry County, Miss., aged 73 years. He was a good citizen, a true husband, a tender father, a faithful, humble Christian, and a loyal Mason. Like David, he served his generation by the will of God, and then fell asleep. He leaves four sons, a daughter and a wife to mourn his death. We commend them to the Lord of all Comfort, and pray that they may all meet an unbroken family in heaven, where parting will be no more.

W. W. CAMMACK.

On last Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, from the Methodist Church in Verona, Miss., the writer, assisted by Rev. D. M. Geddie, in the midst of many loving friends, laid to rest the remains of Mrs. AMANDA [illegible]CIS TAYLOR, the widow of Rev. T. J. Taylor, who was for many years a member of the North Mississippi Conference. She was born in Henry County, Tenn., Dec. 30, 1840; married to Rev. T. J. Taylor in 1864, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James Roberson, at Moulton, Ala., Jan. 20, 1906. She did not live in vain, for years filling her place well as the wife of an itinerant preacher, which says much for her. Seventeen years ago she was left a widow, with nine children to rear and educate—six boys and three girls. Three of them crossed the river before her. The surviving ones—four boys and two girls—are all grown. The daughters are happily married. The boys are all fine young men; any mother might well be proud of the children she leaves behind. She passed away in the faith of her Savior, in whom she had trusted all her life, and in perfect peace, having wrought well. May God comfort the hearts of the sons and daughters, and keep them in the fold.

J. H. MITCHELL.

We call your attention to the advertisement of Dr. Albert I. Orr, the eyesight specialist, of Vicksburg. The Doctor can furnish testimonials from members of the Mississippi Conference as to the efficacy of his treatment. His book on the eye will be sent free on receipt of a postal.

Hon. J. T. Essary, prominent Attorney of Morristown, Tenn., Ex-Mayor, Ex-Collector of Internal Revenue for Tennessee, Ex-Commissioner of Agriculture for the State of Tennessee, relates his experience with Cancerol.

October 27, 1905.

Dr. L. T. Leach, Dallas, Tex.

Dear Doctor—I think it but just and proper that I address you this letter (for publication, if you desire). For seven years a lump had been forming on the left side of my face, near the corner of the eye, which at first gave but little or no alarm, but it continued to enlarge.

I consulted physicians and my case was pronounced Epithelioma. I wrote for your booklet, and after convincing myself of your reliability and your ability to cure cancer, I decided to put my case in your hands, with the result that after a few weeks' treatment with your Cancerol the trouble is entirely removed and I am well.

I sincerely believe if given the opportunity, you can cure cancer, and would advise all who have the disease not to defer treatment until it has gone too far. I shall always feel grateful to you and thank you for the considerate treatment I received at your hands. I will cheerfully answer any letters of inquiry. I am gratefully yours, J. T. ESSARY.

There is no need of cutting off a man's cheek or nose, or a woman's breast, in the vain attempt to cure cancer. No use to apply the burning plaster and torture those already weak from pain and suffering. CANCEROL is a combination of essential Oils, is soothing and balmy, safe and sure, and has been employed successfully in most every situation in the body. It is essentially a home treatment and is, therefore, a great boon to those in limited circumstances. DOCTORS, LAWYERS and MINISTERS endorse it. A book containing valuable information on the cure of the patient will be sent free to those who write for it.

Cures Eczema.

S. B. Hartin, of Ridgway, S. C., writes Nov. 25, 1904: "Your 'Tetterine' does the eczema on my mother's hands more good than anything we have ever found." Tetterine is a prompt and effective cure for ring worm, eczema, erysipelas, chafe and all diseases of the skin. At all druggists, or send 50c. to J. T. Shuptrine, Savannah, Ga., for box postpaid.

I CURE CANCER.

My Mild Combination Treatment is used by the patient at home. Years of success. Hundreds of testimonials. Endorsed by physicians, ministers, etc. The local application destroys the Cancerous growth, and the constitutional treatment elliminates the disease from the system, preventing its return. Write for Free Book, "Cancer and its Cure." No matter how serious your case—no matter how many operations you have had—no matter what treatment you have tried—do not give up hope, but write at once. Your Friend Who Drinks.

I WILL SAVE HIM

I Have a HOME CURE, whose proof is FREE, That Restores FOREVER The Farthest Gone, That Conquers The Disease and The Desire, That Rebuilds Nerve Strength and Ambition.

No one, except the victim himself, knows the mental sufferings, the noble fights and the ignoble falls—of the drinking man. Others see only his transgressions and his frequent lapses. Again and again they watch him secure a foothold that grumbles to sand. For the strongest WILL POWER CANNOT conquer that devouring thirst, the trembling craving that is voiced by every nerve-cell of the helpless, hopeless victim of inebriety—the condition that leaves man no longer master of himself, but a half-crazed martyr to perverted appetite.

Advice and kindly words will not help your afflicted friend, any more than a straw will save a drowning man. What you must do to rescue him is to "throw out the life-line," in the shape of an actual, tangible CURE fro the disease.

To prove that I have such a cure, I will send in a plain wrapper, so that no one can guess its contents, a large treatment, sufficient to test its wonderful merit, free of all expense.

A marvelous change will at once be evidenced. The terrible, incessant craving will vanish, appetite return, the nervous grow steady, the haggard appearance will vanish, the eyes grow clear, and the sufferer will again be able and inspired to take his proper place in busness and society.

I appeal to the WORST cases—I glory in such cures—cases that again and again have failed to yield to other treatments. My record is 100 per cent of cures—CURES TO STAY CURED. And I have the proof to verify my claims.

No matter how hopeless the case may seem, do not despair. Remember mine is a home treatment. There is no advertisin the fact that it is being taken—no kindling of neighborhood gossip. Nothing but the blessed reality of a perfect cure.

Remember, I do not ask, and will not accept, one single penuy of pay till I have proven that my simple home remedy is an absolute unfailing cure. You take not a particle of risk and the gain is priceless.

Deafness Cured

At last, after years of study and research, the wonderful nature forces have been harnessed together and DEAFNESS CAN BE CURED. If I did not know positively that my method could cure I would not allow my name to be connected with this treatment. My standing is such that I cannot afford to misrepresent or distort the facts. I know what this treatment will do, and what it has done, and can safely say, "It is the greatest, grandest and simplest in the world to-day." It seems to make no difference with this cure as to age, how long standing or deep seated the deafness is, its cures are permanent. Test your hearing with a watch. If you do not hear it five feet away, you are deaf. Write me, giving age, sex, cause, how long deaf. If you have Catarrh, Rheumatism, or Nervous trouble, and if you hear better in noisy places, and all particulars bearing on your case, and I will give you my truthful opinion as to whether your case is curable or not. I give an absolutely scientific opinion, with a full explanation of your case and a Booklet on Deafness and Head Noises free without charge. The advice contained in this book has been the means of saving the hearing of hundreds of people. Write to-day to the discoverer, Guy Clifford Powell, M.D., 1202 Bank Bldg., Peoria, Ill., for free information, including his valuable free book.

Cured After 25 Years.

PERRY, OHIO.

I suffered from Stomach Trouble for 25 years and have tried a great many medicines, but nothing seemed to do me any good until I got hold of Vitæ-Ore. I used three packages and am cured. It has been seven months since I used the medicine and I feel no return of my ailment. IRA M. DODGE.

Catarrh of the Head and Throat.

DOUGLASVILLE, GA.

I do not need more medicine, as I am cured. I had Catarrh of the Head and Throat, had taken treatment from doctors and they would not allow me to sing or talk. Since I used Vitæ-Ore I can do as I please, as the trouble is gone. LILLIAN BURNETT.

Lumbago Cured.

FINDLAY, KANS.

I have given Vitæ-Ore a fair test, and it has done me much good. All last fall and winter I had Lumbago so bad that I could not work, or even walk unsupported. Since using Vitæ-Ore, I have gained 15 pounds, and have not missed a day's work. JOHN LANNING.

Threw Away the Canes.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

I was very badly crippled from the effects of Rheumatism. I was a year and seven months on two canes. I used Vitæ-Ore and was cured completely. I have thrown away the canes, and praise Vitæ-Ore for a complete cure.

W. J. BROWN,
31½ Richard Street.

One Package Helped Wonderfully.

ESKRIDGE, KANS.

I have been sick for four years and paid out much money to doctors, but received no benefit. One package of Vitæ-Ore has helped me wonderfully, in fact, almost cured me. I can walk and work nearly as well as I ever could. The doctors said I had Bright's Disease, Dropsy and Rheumatism. I shall continue with the medicine.

MRS. A. D. FULLER.

A General Toning Up.

NEW ROSS, IND.

I first heard of Vitæ-Ore through a newspaper advertisement. At the time I began taking it I was almost helpless, had no appetite, could not sleep and was all run down. I had tried several medicines, but they did not seem to benefit me any, so I decided at last to give the V.-O. a trial, although at the time I had little faith in it. I have now been taking V.-O. for some time, and its results have been very pleasing. I am stronger than for several years, and although I am now 74 years old, I am able to be up on my feet all the time and my system has received a general toning up.

MRS. ANGELINE HINKLE.

Vitæ-Ore is not a stimulant, not a narcotic, not a drug, but is an antiseptic constitutional tonic for every vital force of man—a food for blood, brain, brawn and bone—and is worth more than its weight in gold to all who suffer from any of the many ills which unfit men and women for the full enjoyment of life and its duties.

READ THIS OFFER

No Ailing Person, Man or Woman, Can Afford to Miss This Opportunity to Get 30 Days' Treatment on Trial.

WE WILL SEND TO ALL Readers of this paper a full-sized $1.00 package of Vitæ-Ore by mail, postpaid, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for within thirty days' time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and doses of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. Read this over again carefully and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good, and not before. If it does not, no money is wanted! WE TAKE ALL THE RISK, YOU HAVE NOTHING TO LOSE. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. We ask no references, we want no security; just your promise to use it and pay if it helps you. Just say that you need it, that you want it, and it will be sent to you, as it has been sent to hundreds of other readers of this paper. We want you to have it and gladly send it, taking your word for the results obtained. There is nothing to pay, neither now nor later, if it does not help you. We give you thirty days' time to try the medicine, thirty days to see the results before you pay us one cent, and you do not pay the one cent unless you do see the results. YOU ARE TO BE THE JUDGE! We know Vitæ-Ore and are willing to take the risk. We have done so in thousands of cases and are not sorry. Your case, no matter how hard or obstinate it may be, will be no exception.

Vitæ-Ore in its original condition is a natural, hard, ore-substance—mineral—mined from the EARTH'S VEINS. It contains Iron, Sulphur and Magneslum, three properties which are most essential for the retention of health in the human system, and one package (one ounce) of the ORE, when mixed with a quart of water, will equal in medicinal strength and curative value nearly 800 gallons of the most powerful mineral water found on the globe, drank fresh at the springs. The mineral properties which give to the waters of the world's noted healing and mineral springs their curative virtue come from the rock or MINERAL ORE through which the water percolates on its way to its outlet, only a very small proportion of the medicinal power in the ORE being thus assimilated with or absorbed by the liquid stream. The rock contains the much desired medicine, the water serves as the conveyance to carry but a small part of its properties to the outer world. Vitæ-Ore is a combination of these medicine-bearing minerals, powdered and pulverized, and partly soluble in water, the addition of which makes the health-giving liquid drink. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as

Rheumatism	Bladder Troubles
Bright's Disease	Stomach and
Blood Poisoning	Female Disorders
Heart Trouble	LaGrippe
Dropsy	Malarial Fever
Catarrh of any Part	Nervous Prostration and
Throat Affections	General Debility
Liver, Kidney and as thousands testify and as no one will deny after using. VITÆ-ORE has cured more chronic, obstinate, pronounced incurable cases than any other known medicine, and it reaches such cases with a more rapid and powerful curative action than any medicine, combination of medicines or doctor's prescription which it is possible to procure. If yours is such a case, do not doubt, do not fear, do not hesitate, do not delay, but SEND FOR IT TODAY!

AN AID TO NATURE

The Rational Method of Curing Disease—Re-Establishes Order and Disease Vanishes.

There is nothing more wonderful than the ECONOMY OF NATURE, the natural forces that are at work in the body, continually, day and night, waking or sleeping, to recuperate from exhaustion, to eliminate that which has served its purpose, to replenish what has been wasted, to supplant decayed tissue with healthy material, to supply new strength and energy for that which has been expended. It is the same vital force that is at work in all forms of life in the whole universe, whether vegetable or animal, and no better term can be applied to it than "the ecouomy of nature," which is truly "management without loss or waste." And it is an economy which is not parsimouy, for nature gives with a lavish hand in bounteous plenty for all the normal and regular duties of life, WHEN HER GENEROSITY BE NOT ABUSED.

But it is an ecouomy, which like all other economies, must have all of its workings IN PERFECT HARMONY, and is of little value when there is a great leak somewhere, when there is a DRAIN which unnaturally depletes the resources and allows of no accumulation. It is an economy whose usefulness is impaired when there is an organ in some portion of the body which refuses to perform its share of the work and does not properly co-operate in the great natural mechanism which so ably controls life, health and all vital energy.

It is when this condition presents itself, when nature, by some abuormal manifestation, is proclaiming HER NEED OF ASSISTANCE, that Vitæ-Ore steps into the breach AS A MOST EFFECTIVE AID TO NATURE, to assist her in her work of recuperation, to whip any recreant force and organ into line, to provide nature with the materials which she demands and the tools she needs in her reconstructive work. WITH SUCH AID THE CURE EASILY AND SPEEDILY BECOMES A FACT. Bruise the skin on any part of the body, and nature immediately starts her healing processes, as all know, but if the blood is poor, the vitality low, if the proper materials for nature's work are not in the body, the wound heals slowly, complications may ensue—HELP NATURE AND THE WORK IS ACCOMPLISHED.

Give the stone mason his trowel and mortar, but if the STONE be not there he is powerless to build, his hands are tied and he accomplishes nothing. IT IS THE SAME WITH NATURE. She is a perfect mechanic, the like of which all man's inventive and creative genius has been unable to duplicate or counterfeit, but like all mechanics, she needs the PROPER MATERIALS for her work and without them is powerless.

As an aid to nature (and at all times, no matter what means are used, we are only assisting nature), Vitæ-Ore is indeed an ideal creation. It contains elements which, when the body is in ill health, are needed by nature for her work of recuperation, and in supplying such materials, IT SUPPLIES HEALTH TO THE BODY, health in all the parts, in blood, brain and nerve tissue; health in those organs upon which health in the entire body is dependent. When there is an abnormal symptom, no matter in what organ, Vitæ-Ore assists nature to remove the abnormality and thus establishes the cure. It is not a cure-all, though its efficacy covers a wide range of ailments and disorders, but is a vitalizing, tonic, healing, corrective and strengthening force that arouses nature to CORRECT ACTION IN EVERY VITAL FUNCTION. It cures many disorders and has the same wonderfully beneficial action in diseases which seem diametrically opposite, all in the same natural way, all by assisting nature to properly perform the functious which always are properly performed in good health, AND THUS ESTABLISHES GOOD HEALTH.

Many ills and diseases may be traced to ONE DISTURBING INFLUENCE, one underlying lesion, and it is by the removal of these controlling causes that Vitæ-Ore cures so many seemingly diversified conditions. It cures the cause more than the disease, the origin more than the symptom, a manner of cure that needs no comment. It assists in re-establishing order, the lack of which is responsible for ill health in any portion of the body, and when this is encompassed, disease vanishes. It is a rational method, the getting down to the very root of the trouble, which should and does appeal to all rational people.

Catarrh of the Head.

MT. ZION, MISS.

My son, who suffered with Catarrh of the Head, has found Vitæ-Ore a sovereign remedy for that disease. It has benefited him more than all the doctors who have treated him and the patent medicines he has taken. He could do no work before he commenced its use, but he can now labor as well as anybody.

JOHN L. POLK.

Not an Ache or Pain.

DANVERS, MASS.

I have taken nearly three packages of Vitæ-Ore, which has done me a wonderful lot of good. I have been troubled for 25 years with lameness in my right limb, pain commencing near the spine, then to the hip joint and to the fleshy part of my leg. For weeks past I have not felt an ache or pain. J. Q. A. BATCHELDER.

Feet Swollen From Rheumatism.

SPENCER, IOWA.

I have suffered much with Rheumatism, but I must say that Vitæ-Ore has given me wonderful relief. My feet were so swollen that I could not walk around the house. After taking Vitæ-Ore the swelling all left my feet and I can walk anywhere with ease. Vitæ-Ore is a grand medicine. OTTO MICKLEY.

Sick Headache and Constipation.

MONTGOMERY, IOWA.

Vitæ-Ore has done for me what no other remedy could. It cured me of Sick Headache and Constipation, for which you may be sure I am happy. My wife also says Vitæ-Ore is the best remedy she ever used. C. S. MCCORMICK.

Cured the Child of Dropsy.

BIG FOOT, TEX.

Vitæ-Ore is the best remedy on earth, in my opinion, and I ought to know, for I have tested it. It cured one of my grandchildren of Dropsy after the doctor declared he could not live. I thank God first for creating it and Theo. Noel for discovering its use for man's ills. W. M. NOWLIN.

Gall Stones.

KANSAS CITY, KANS.

I have been troubled with Gall Stones, and did not know what it was to be without pain until I commenced the use of Vitæ-Ore, since which time I have been steadily improving. Vitæ-Ore deserves all the credit for my improved condition, as I have taken no other medicine since commencing its use. Doctors have said that there was no cure for my disease except an operation. I am 60 years old and now am doing my own work, something I could not do before using Vitæ-Ore.

MRS. J. M. BAIRD,
1225 WAVERLY AVE.

Vitæ-Ore will do the same for you as it has done for thousands if you will give it a trial. Send for a $1.00 package at our risk. You are to be the judge! What sensible person, who desires a cure and is willing to pay for it, would hesitate to try Vitæ-Ore on this liberal offer? One package is usually sufficient to cure ordinary cases, two or three for chronic, obstinate cases. Write today for a package at our risk, giving your age and ailments, and mention this paper.

"Lo! It Is Nigh Thee."

The surprise of life always comes in finding how we have missed the things that have lain nearest to us; how we have gone far away to seek that which was close by our side all the time. Men who live best and longest are apt to come, as the result of all their living, to the conviction that life is not only richer but simpler than it seemed to them at first. Men go to vast labor seeking after peace and happiness. It seems to them as if it were far away from them, as if they must go through vast and strange regions to get it. They must pile up wealth, they must see every possible danger of mishap guarded against, before they can have peace. Upon how many old men has it come with a strange surprise that peace could come to rich or poor only with contentment, and that they might as well have been content at the very beginning as at the very end of life! They have made a long journey for their treasure, and when at last they stoop to pick it up, lo! it is shining close beside the footprint which they left when they set out to travel in a circle.—Phillips Brooks.

Glances at the World.

The politicians, among whom may be classed brewers and liquor dealers generally, have seen a great light. They saw it in Ohio. Up to a short time since they made bold to declare their purpose to repeal the Anti-canteen Law. In searching for a reason for the overthrow of boss rule in Ohio, they found it—not in a revolt against the Republican Party, which is overwhelmingly strong in the State, but in the moral sentiment of the people, as expressed by the Anti-Saloon League. It is thus reported in a dispatch from Washington: "A good many members of Congress have increased respect for the League since the Ohio State election. Some of the public men took the pains to investigate the Republican defeat in Ohio very carefully, and they were convinced that it was the Anti-Saloon League that laid the groundwork for the successful opposition to Governor Herrick. The League, it if said, "has not indulged in threats," but all acknowledge that it is on guard, and will note every man, of any political party, who undertakes to re-establis the canteen in the Army, and compass his defeat at the next election. The League is strong in ten or twelve states, and is a power to be reckoned with.

Investigation into Panama Canal matters comes dangerously near revealing scandals in the business. The gentleman who is commissioned to purchase supplies has shown his knowledge of what the Government is bound to provide in the way of "necessities" in a very strange way. What use the Government has for sewing machines, and suit cases, and silverware, and gentleman's collars and other things of like nature down in Panama, would be hard to tell. That these things are useful household conveniences is true, but they were not contemplated in the appropriation for the canal—no more than it was intended to pay the passage of laborers' wives to the isthmus, which, it seems, the Commissioners did. It has also developed that while Chairman Shonts is drawing a salary of $30,000 a year for his service as Commissioner, he is also drawing $12,000 a year from the Clover Leaf Railroad as its President. This does not look like he was merely holding a nominal relation to the road for the protection of his interests. Railroad men do not make a rule of paying large salaries to men who hold only nominal connection with their roads. Mr. Shonts says he will give up one place or the other if Mr. Roosevelt thinks he ought. Dispatches from Washington indicate that the Senate will force him to quit the Commission, or give up his place in the railroad business. With two big salaries to look after, a man cannot well serve two masters.

Two men have recently died remarkable for their great wealth. One was a merchant prince, who, it is said, never turned a dishonest penny into his treasury. The other made his money dealing in railroad securities and city railway stock. His methods were regarded as legitimate, but in pursuing them it is likely that others were made to suffer more or less. Both men were also remarkably liberal. Their public benefactions were munificent. Their private charities, especially those of Mr. Marshall Field, were numerous. The difference between the two men was in moral character. Mr. Field was not only an honest man in all his dealings, but his private life was clean. He was an example worthy of imitation by all young men entering public life. The other man was utterly lacking in cleanness of life. The sacredness of marriage and family life did not appeal to him. So glaring was his disregard of these sanctities that his charities, which great wealth enabled him to bestow, were powerless to condone or hide. Mr. Field goes to his grave honored wherever known, the other goes unhonored and unwept.—as will all such men, no matter how many million of dollars they may leave.

The work Congressman Williams, of Mississippi is doing mightily pleases the good people of that State. The State law against the sale of liquor has been largely nullified by whisky vendors, who carry on their trade through the American Express Company. The business in C. O. D. shipments got to be so extensive that the citizens took steps to stop it. But the liq dealers secured injunctions, and stopped prosecutions, on the ground that they were operating under the Interstate Commerce Law, and could not be stopped. The result of the hearing before the United States Court has not as yet been made public. In the meantime Congressman Williams introduced a bill in Congress, which, if enacted into law, will put an end to the invasion of prohibition territory by liquor dealers, who ship their goods for cash on delivery. It is this bill that pleases the people. If passed, it will not only benefit Mississippi, but the whole country as well. Many telegrams of approval have been sent Mr. Williams since the introduction of his measure. We hope it will be passed.

There is one sacred place in the Capitol of the United States. Into that place no person is allowed to go except Congressmen, and the Capitol attendants. That place is the lobby of the House of Representatives. This lobby "is so sacredly reserved for the members that the rules forbid the Speaker to entertain a motion to admit others." The sanctity of this precinct was innocently invaded a few days ago by two ladies and two gentlemen under the escort of a senator, who, it appears, was ignorant of its exclusive use, and of the rule of the House. While the senator was temporarily absent from his guests the Assistant Doorkeeper, with apologies for interfering with their sight-seeing, "escorted them hurriedly beyond the dead-line." It is perhaps well that no congressman caught these "innocents" on their preserves. There might have been a congressional investigation instituted, and punishment of the Doorkeeper for neglect of duty. We wonder what secrets are kept under lock and key in that forbidden room!

THEN AND NOW.

Dear Brother Boswell: With your permission, I want to speak through our paper of this county—"South Warren: What It Was Forty-four Years Ago: What It Is Now."

Some portions of our fair Southland are in a high state of prosperity in almost every particular, while other portions are, or seem to be, laboring under the displeasure of an all-wise, all-powerful being, the Creator and Preserver of all things.

When I was here (in South Warren) forty-four years ago, almost everything indicated prosperity. The well-to-do people lived in splendid houses—large, roomy houses—some of them bordering closely on to splendid palaces, good enough for a king. They—most of them—fared sumptuously every day. Their children were thought to be too good to do manual labor; so when not in school, they were allowed to roam at large. In most places they had good schools, good churches; large, fine plantations, well stocked with laborers, mules, horses, etc. Corn and meat were cheap, because of the great quantity that was raised here. The people demanded the best talent our Conference had. Rev. Geo. H. Clinton, then in his prime, afterwards transferred to St. Louis and stationed in First Church, was preacher-in-charge on Warren Circuit. Afterwards Dr. H. F. Johnson was pastor here. The ministry was well—yea, bountifully supported.

But times have changed. The wealth of this county is nearly all gone. The people that were here forty years ago, with perhaps a few exceptions, together with their children, are gone. Churches have gone down. Plantations gone to waste! Many of the fine residences laid in ashes; others in a dilapidated condition. Instead of well-filled houses on preaching occasions, as was once the case, you can now, in some instances, count your congregations on the fingers of your two hands—in some instances on one hand. The men, as a rule, do not go to church. The boys are walking in the footsteps of their fathers. You can hear the sportsman's gun all day long almost any Sunday. One afternoon a few Sabbaths ago I met two squads of hunters (five or six in each squad), most of them boys, who looked to be 16 years old and under.

At a negro dance, not a great while since, a crowd of white boys—of the lower class, of course—crowded in and actually danced with the negro women. Some of the negro men complained about it—said that they could not get partners because of those white boys.

But, Mr. Editor, this is not all. Some young men, who are known to be of no account under the sun—said by some to be not worth the powder and lead it would take to kill them, are allowed to enter the homes of our fair young women, associate with them, dance with them, etc. To me, this is a sad, sad picture.

It may not be wise in me to write of these things; yet I can scarcely refrain from doing so. We have some good people here. They talk to me freely about these things. We are working, talking, writing, hoping, praying for better times. It is hard to keep one's spirit up in full view of so much wickedness. "How long, oh Lord, how long!" Will he ever hear our prayers for this people? How, oh, how we need a deep-seated revival here! Will it ever come? My heart aches. I spend many sleepless moments pleading with God in behalf of the people of my charge. Will not my brethren of the ministry, and others, join me in one earnest prayer for this people?

H. P. LEWIS.

Vicksburg, Miss.

CONFESSIONS AND IDEAS OF AN IMMERSIONIST.

(By a Circuit Rider.)

An intelligent professor who is a Greek scholar (and a Baptist) recently wrote a reply of 2,600 words to my little book, "A Trial in Court." Some of the readers of the Advocate will find the extracts given below both instructive and amusing:

First—In his comment on Mark, 7:4, and John, 2:6, he says: "No one denies they (the Jews) sprinkled themselves."

The word translated "wash" in Mark, 7:4, is "baptizo," the word our Lord used when he said "baptize the nations." Now, according to this Baptist brother it means at Mark, 7:4, to sprinkle. Hence the theory that it always means to immerse receives a setback from one of their own members. He says, however, that the Jews "did not wash the 'cups' by sprinkling, but by dipping them into the water."

But he failed to cite a passage proving that they were cleansed by dipping. He simply supposes they were immersed, failing to distinguish between ceremonial purification and ordinary washing of dishes.

He made no comment on the "tables" or "beds" of the passage, knowing the impossibility or impracticability of immersing them.

Second—In answer to my query, "Do you suppose the prophet would tell Naaman to dip when the law reads, 'Sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times,' he says: "Yes, perhaps, for it was a test of obedience to the prophet's command, and Naaman could best be tested by being commanded to do a thing that the law might not require. Hence he told him to dip instead of sprinkle himself."

Now here is an admission from a Baptist that the law required sprinkling in case of leprosy. But what an anomaly to test his obedience by requiring him to become disobedient.

Third—In his comment on Matt., 3:16, he says "apo" means from, or out of, hence there is no argument here for either side" (immersion or sprinkling).

This is a surrender of the Baptist contention, for it is well known that they have claimed that Matt., 3:16, is irrefutable proof that Christ went into and came up out of the water. Verily he wrote once too often for the good of the immersion theory.

Fourth—He says that the King James translators transported "baptizo" into English, leaving it untranslated because it had many meanings. "They were not forced to use immerse, since the word had many meanings, such as dye, tinge, purify," etc.

This is a concession for which Pedo-Baptists have contended, and the professor in granting it has killed the theory of his church that it means immersion only.

Fifth—In his comment on Act, 11:15, he says, "'With water' is simply the instrument used and in no sense affects the meaning of the Greek word 'baptizo' used. The question is not how the water was applied, but what was the effect of the water being applied."

Baptists have contended all along for the "how"—the mode of immersion—but the above admission is indeed refreshing. Of course, the "effect" is cleansing, symbolizing the influence of the Holy Spirit.

He also says that the phrase "with water" looks neither like the water was applied to the multitudes nor the people to the water.

Sixth—When I read the following absurd or contradictory statement I smiled out loud:

"Baptizo has the meaning of covered." "The garment was stained by the blood of Aegisthus,' but by being covered with blood." "The blood gushed out of the wound and went all over the garment; that is, covered it." "The garment was covered with blood, just as in the case of immersion in water." "Stained, but stained so much that it was covered with blood." "By blood going all over it. How about that answer?" "Stained by being covered with blood." "When Homer says 'the lake was tinged (ebapteto) with blood' he means that part of the lake on which the blood fell was tinged by blood spreading over it, which implies a covering, as in case of immersion." "Covering that part of the water on which the blood fell. When I (the professor) say the blood fell from my finger onto the book and tinged it, I do not mean it tinged the whole book, but that part on which it fell." "Nebuchadnezzar was covered with dew." "He walked on allfours and the dew went all over his body; that is covering his body; hence his body was immersed in dew. It matters not how the dew got on him, but it does matter what the dew did. And what it did was to cover his body or clothing, from which we may safely conclude he was covered or immersed in dew." "He was neither wet nor moistened," just covered."

If the above is not "reducing a position to an absurdity", then nothing absurd has ever been written. But it is the dying swan's last song, or the drowning theory catching at a straw.

DR. BROOKS CRITICISED.

I have read carefully Dr. Brooks' on scriptural sanctification and portions of it I have read more than once, and quite a number of our young preachers are now reading this book and I think it proper to call attention to some of its defects.

The book is to be commended for the admirable spirit in which it is written, but for this reason any error in the book would be the more dangerous. Its weakness consists in its many assumptions which are not supported by facts. The Marshal Ney with Dr. Brooks is the Pentecost. He assumes that the baptism on the day of Pentecost was both cleansing and empowering. For this assumption he has no authority whatever. Christ had said on two occasions that His disciples were clean. If they were clean they were not full of sin. The doctor admits that they were in some sense clean. If they were clean they did not need to be cleansed. Christ said, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

Again He said, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high." He could have said until ye are cleansed and endowed with power from on high. This silence speaks in thunder tones the fact that it was a baptism of power and not one of cleansing.

Dr. Brooks assumes also that St. Paul was sanctified according to his second blessing theory. Here again he has no proof to sustain his assumption. We all believe that St. Paul was sanctified in a Scriptural sense, but in the history of his conversion and in all his references to his past experience there is not one word about a second blessing. He also tries to show that St. Paul professed the second blessing. He has certainly called the wrong witness to the stand, for while St. Paul used some strong language in referring to his Christian experience, he said nothing of a second blessing. He said, "I am crucified to the world and the world to me," as many good men can say. But he was modest in his professions. After he had been caught up to the third heaven and heard things that it is not possible to utter, he kept it to himself for fourteen years and then told it with becoming humility and stated that the Lord had to afflict him to keep him humble. He was far from saying, "I am holy, or I am sanctified," and not one of the New Testament writers ever made such profession. One of the Psalmists said, "I am holy," using the term in a "ceremonial sense," as Mr. Spurgeon has said.

With this exception no such profession was ever made by any human being in all the word of God, not even the holy angels ever made such profession. They could cry, "Holy art Thou, Lord God of Hosts," but not holy are we; and if our brethren who enjoy the blessing of perfect love, and those who think they do, would confine themselves to Scriptural examples, we would have no trouble on this subject in our church. It is this professing which leads to division and strife.

Dr. Brooks makes another mistake in claiming that Mr. Wesley professed sanctification. We have no doubt that Mr. Wesley enjoyed the blessing of perfect love, as he called it; but in all his writings there is no evidence that he ever said, "I am holy or I am sanctified." I was surprised to see that he refers to Dr. Lovick Pierce as a professor of sanctification. It is well known that he was a leading advocate of the doctrine, but it is said in the life of Bishop Pierce that Dr. Lovick Pierce never professed it.

The doctor introduces our whole College of Bishops as believing his theory, when the fact is that but one of our bishops, Bishop Key, accepts the inbred sin theory, and it is said that Bishop Key has never professed sanctification. The doctor claims all who believe in sanctification or have received some special baptism of the Holy Spirit are supporters of his theory. Many of those distinguished divines to whom he refers do not believe a word of the doctor's second cleansing theory. There are many vulnerable points to which I would like to call attention and shall do so if it is thought wise to publish this.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE ORPHANAGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The readers of the Advocate will doubtless be interested to learn that Rev. C. C. Wier, agent for the Conference Orphanage, after the delays caused by the quarantines and other hindrances, has begun again an active campaign in behalf of the orphanage with such success as to justify the prediction that it has passed the experimental stage, and will soon be a reality.

Brother Wier has just spent a few days in Crowley, and raised nearly $900, meeting with sympathy and encouragement from every quarter. He expects to go right forward with this work by an active canvass at other points.

SIGNIFICANT FIGURES.

In one of our city dailies of the 13th inst. appears the report of the chief of police for the year 1905. The number of offenses for the year is 1,369, and of this total 569 are for crimes directly traceable to the open saloon, namely:

Disorderly conduct, 265; drunk and disorderly, 113; drunk on streets and down, 191. Add to these figures the next highest item, "vagrancy, 127," and we have more than one-half out of a list of 46 classes of offenders ascribed to these four.

If to this we take into consideration the great many cases that never appear in the courts, but are suppressed by friends or because of standing, we have a true picture of the effect of the open saloon upon a community. Vicksburg has a population of about 20,000, boasts of upwards of 40 saloons, and advertises herself as the greatest distributing point in the state for all kinds of spirituous liquors. There is, however, in the town of Canton, written in large letters on a certain front, the statement that they are the largest distributors.

I have not written these figures to convince anyone of the great evil of the open saloon, but that comparison might be made with our cities of similar size as to whether there is as much "disorderly conduct, drunk and disorderly, and drunk and downs on the streets." In other words, whether prohibition does not show a better condition at these points. Now that the question of enforcing the prohibition laws of the state are under such frequent discussion, would it not be well that Jackson, Meridian, Yazoo City, Aberdeen and other points should make a showing? For I am thoroughly convinced that, with the oft-repeated statement that the open saloon is preferable to the "blind tiger," the facts will prove to the contrary.

AFTER CONFERENCE.

Our Christmas passed very much as it usually does, except the Christmas tree. There was a great deal of shooting and drinking and drunkenness. It has always been strange to me that so many men are, in the main, sober, and conduct themselves fairly well until Christmas and then act like fools and get drunk.

This scribe and family were at home on Christmas day and had a few welcome visitors who left shoes, chinaware, a number of small articles, fruit and cakes enough to last a week, and $13 in cash. I failed to get to Conference. I fully intended going and went to Lake Charles, arriving six hours late, and the next train was due at midnight, right in the midst of that Tuesday night storm, on the 2d inst. To meet the train was out of the question, so the next day I returned home and preached to my own people the following Sunday.

I resume my pastoral duties for the fourth year under favorable auspices. A few are attending services now who had not done so the three preceding years. The number of members reported at Conference are more than half living elsewhere. They were converted and taken into the church here and moved away, on fire for God, and write back, "Retain our names until further orders."

We cannot build up here much, but trust we are aiding the good cause generally. Quite a number anticipate the yellow fever again this year, but I never cross a bridge until I reach it. Allow me to congratulate you and The Advocate readers on the improved appearance of our paper. Face is said to be the indication of character, and our Advocate has a good face. God bless you.

H. ARMSTRONG.

IUKA NOTES.

Iuka is still located on the Southern Railroad, and boasts of the finest mineral water and best people of any town in the State. By the way, perhaps you do not know, Mr. Editor, that we got the first prize for the highest analysis of the purest mineral water at the St. Louis Exposition,—and there were 160 exhibits from the finest springs of America.

If some private corporation could get these springs, carbonize the water and place it on the market it would soon realize a fortune from the sale. But the greed for gain is not so great here as in many places, and, therefore, the town will not sell these springs, for the reason that all people may drink of it without money and without price. I have had extensive observation, and I do not hesitate to affirm that this is the best place for sick people to visit, who solely desire to be benefited by drinking pure mineral water at the least cost, of any place of which I have any knowledge.

Then, too, it is the best place morally and religiously of which I know. Court is just over, and the Grand Jury actually found indictments against a number of men for bringing loads of lumber to town on Sunday, and these men came to town not so much to haul lumber, but to attend court. These men lived a long ways from town, and had to leave home the day before in order to reach here in time for court Monday morning. The Judge heard their excuses, but he placed fines on them, just the same. I do not believe there is another grand jury in the State that would indict under like circumstances.

We have only nine preachers living here at present, and six of them are local. But the most of them have been pastors, and they know how to sympathize with the pastor and help him.

Of course, we are all delighted with Brother Lipscomb, and he has made a splendid start.

Our people were glad to have Dr. Cameron and his wife locate here among them. They have bought a nice little home, and are pleasantly situated. We want all the good people we can get to locate among us.

We were glad to have Brother Harris, our P. E., in our midst a few days ago. He is improving rapidly in health, and will soon be able to look after all of his district.

Brother Felts, that wide-awake pastor of Corinth, has been of great assistance to Brother Harris since Conference. He held our first quarterly meeting for this year and preached a fine sermon. The people were delighted with both his visit and discourse.

Brother Culpepper is holding a great meeting in Decatur, Ill. He is a great man, and wherever he goes he brings things to pass.

I begin my revival work next week in Arkansas. I have been at home for a month resting, reading, praying, trying to get ready to lead many souls to Christ. God grant this may be a great year for the Church. Success to the Advocate. Yours fraternally.

W. M. McINTOSH.

THANKS.

I am unable to answer individually the great number of letters and telegrams of condolence received in our great bereavement.

I, therefore, take this method to express the heartfelt thanks of myself and children to all from whom we have received communications expressive of love and sympathy.

Words are inadequate to express our feelings of appreciation for these tokens from my brethren in the ministry, preachers' wives and many other friends.

May grace and peace from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ abound unto them all.

"The Lord is our light and salvation."

BIBLE CONFERENCE.

The Third Annual Florida Winter Bible Conference will open in the great Conference Auditorium in Gainesville, Fla., on February 11th, and continue until the 25th—to be followed by the Chautauqua Assembly, which opens March 1st. The increasing attendance upon the Conference from all parts of the Union, together with the added number of famous preachers to be present this year, assures by far the greatest attendance and most interesting session ever held. At no Conference in America will greater and more celebrated men be found on the programme. One can well afford to travel miles to such a Conference.

Low tourist rates have been granted Gainesville, and tickets can be had from all parts of the country, good to return until the last of April.

A NEEDED REFORM.

The young wife sat very silent at her pretty tea-table. She had returned from a round of visits the day before and her husband wondered that she did not tell him about them.

"Are you tired yet from your journey, Martha?" he questioned.

"No," she said, "I was thinking. Seriously," she added, smiling brightly, "George, we're going to have a reform at our house. We're not going to eat so much as we used."

"Great Scott! I don't think that would be much of a reform."

"O! of course we're going to have enough to eat, silly. But I mean we're not going to have such elaborate meals. I'll tell you what made me think of it. You know your Aunt Emily, whom I visited, has an income four times as large as ours, and though she keeps two servants she serves the simplest meals. Honestly, it made me ashamed to think how I fussed and worried getting up our meals. Everything seemed so plain and elegant there that my burdensome way of housekeeping really appeared vulgar by contrast. You know what a fine dining-room she has, and her linen and silver and china are beautiful; but more than once we sat down to tea with nothing but bread, butter, jelly, wafers, fruit and plenty of rich milk on the table. If I had offered such a meal to any one a month ago I should have been so embarrassed, but I'm much wiser now. When you stop to think, what more should any one want at the light meal of the day?"

"I shall be delighted with your threatened reform. You always give me more than I can eat. I've had secret fears that our luxurious diet might make both of us cross and dyspeptic. Besides, if you do less cooking, you'll have more time to spend with me."

"Yes," said Martha, "that's what decided me. I did not entirely make up my mind because of Aunt Emily's good example. I had a horrible example held up to view. We went one day to visit one of your cousins who had been married but a short time. She got a luncheon for us—a fearful and wonderful luncheon, that was much like some of mine. But I couldn't help noticing that she was so tired that it seemed a task for her to talk to us. There were little worry wrinkles in her forehead, too. When we were going home Aunt Emily said: 'You musn't think that Minnie was not glad to see you. She was dull because she had tired herself out getting ready for us. I'm going to speak to her about it when the proper opportunity comes. And as you are a new housekeeper I might as well read you the little sermon, too. It is not true hospitality to spend all your time preparing things to fill your guests' stomachs and ignore all other things that would give them pleasure. Rather it is the good hostess' duty to prepare a simple meal and be able to greet her guests with unruffled demeanor and bright, alert mind. Then both visitors and hostess enjoy themselves, instead of enduring what is too often an unpleasant social duty. And if the worn and worried hostess is not practicing true hospitality toward her guest; how much more a wife fails in her duty when she is always fagged out in the hours she spends with her husband. Most young wives are too ambitious. They start out with large ideas in the manner of keeping house. They have too much furniture, too large houses, too many ornaments, too elaborate meals. Then they soon wear themselves out caring for these burdensome things, and often the beautiful romance of life is spoiled in its beginning. There would be fewer unhappy marriages if there could be some mysteriously binding law limiting young couples to four-room houses and forbidding more than two cooked dishes on the table at any meal. Then the young wife would have time to live with her husband and to continue to be as charming after marriage as she was before. Perhaps some day we will all be wise enough to see the dignity of simplicity. Now you can guess, George, how much there was for me in Aunt Emily's little sermon. I took it to heart and resolved to begin my reform the minute I got home. And you see it has begun."

Continual sunshine and gentle zephyrs in the outward world would not produce a healthy atmosphere for animal or vegetable life. It is just so in a spiritual sense. Continued abounding in heavenly enjoyment would tend to make us relax our efforts to abide in our only safe state—that of watchfulness and prayer under a humiliating sense of our own insufficiency for any good word or work.—Rachel Hicks.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

One of the immortal pictures in the world's gallery, undimmed by time, is the description given by Robert Burns in "The Cotter's Saturday Night" of the family gathered at evening prayers. Such a picture hangs untarnished in the memory of men and women growing old, who recall with peculiar tenderness the family worship of their childhood. It was formely the almost universal custom in Christian households to assemble for prayers both morning and evening. The Episcopal Prayer Book gives very beautiful forms of family prayer, and in our own admirable Liturgy there are at least two prayers which have a felicitous and timely fitness for such a use. When family prayer was the rule and not the exception, as it too often is today, the custom was to read a portion of God's word, sometimes the children taking turns and reading verse about, sometimes the father reading the entire chapter; after which the father led in prayer. There was nothing tedious or oppressive in this daily gathering for worship, and in homes where everyone took part, even the servants coming in, there was a hallowed sweetness and sacredness that made very blessed the outgoings of the morning and evening. A beningant peace filled the home.

Dr. Paton, in one of his books of missionary experience, relates that on a certain island converted from heathenism to Christianity the voice of family prayer was heard every morning in every house. It is much to be feared that practically in this busy land of ours we have been reverting from Christianity to heathenism. The voice of prayer is heard in few homes at the family altar. Everything in our modern life makes haste and sets iself against devotion. There is the rush for the morning train, there is frantic hurrying before the children are fairly on the way to school, there are tradesmen coming for orders, and there is a general concession on the part of all concerned to the spirit of this world, which is not the sprit of the gentle brooding and patient waiting for the Lord. This is the condition in the morning.

In the evening, if prayers are not held immediately after the latest meal they are interrupted by the entrance of visitors, or else the scattering of the family hither and yon makes rallying impossible. It requires will, resolution and conscience, as well as consecration, to induce a family to keep unbroken the routine of household work at this day and hour. Some Christians are curiously tongue-tied. They dread the attempt to pray in the presence of others. Some have so neglected private devotion and have suffered the Bible to become so unfamimiar that they are awkward in handling the book, and their whole service is perfunctory. The fire on the family altar has been choked by the cinders and ashes of the earthly strife for money or perhaps for a mere foothold in the crowded market-place. We cannot but admit the fact that the Bible as an influence in our lives is less dominant than it should be because too many of us are satisfied to let it lie closed upon our tables instead of studying it and having it assimilated in our lives.

Wherever family worship is maintained, not as an empty form, but as a living reality, there is an intimate friendship with Christ which makes very precious the circle of family affection. Husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, draw very close together when daily they kneel in a group and approach the Mercy Seat where Jesus answers prayer. If one is away from home, it may be in a distant land, or tossing on the sea, he knows he is remembered by name at the family altar. However far some erring child may wander there is always an invisible cord to draw him back if he has been accustomed from childhood on to kneel with his parents and repeat Our Father Who Art in Heaven. If this generation is less familiar than it should be with the Bible, if our college girls and boys know comparatively little about Bible incidents and characters, and if the beautiful style of the Bible is failing to impress literature as it did in days gone by the reason is easily found. Reiterated reading of the Bible in the hearing of children fastened its noble passages and poetic phrases on mind and memory when both were most receptive and trustworthy.

A family which has lost the habit of daily prayer in the household is apt to lose the habit of constant church going. Neglect in one point leads directly to heedlessness in another. Little heads in the pew will be found where the children at home meet constantly with father and mother for reading and prayer.

Apart from any other consideration, we owe a debt of thankfulness to our Father for His never-ceasing providential care. It is our privilege to come, penitent and believing, to the throne of grace, and it is the sin of ungrateful children never to return acknowledgment of Him whose goodness crowns our day. Life, too, is very uncertain. We never know how thin the veil may be between us and the future, nor can we tell when we leave the home at morning what may happen before the night. Shall we not therefore daily commend ourselves before we separate to the guardian care of our God?

If we desire urgently a return to God in the community and in the nation, if we would see stricter ethical standards and less corruption in politics, we must all confess our faults and seek our Savior's face. One step will be taken when the family altar is re-established in every home. It may require effort on the part of some to heal the old breaches and restore what has fallen down; but, as in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, when the people had a mind to work, the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt, in the presence of scoffing enemies: so we may rebuild our Zion We shall not find many to scoff, but many of those who are hungering and thirsting for righteousness and yet not knowing how to voice their want, will insensibly be led to Him who never turns anyone way. The sacred fire kindled on the hearthstone will send its flame afar, a torch in the world's darkness.—Christian Intelligencer.

PELICAN PINEY.

Ned was out in the pineapple acres trying to find some ripe fruit for supper. It was a very interesting place to explore, especially for a Northern boy on his first visit to Florida. The "pines," as Uncle Will called them, were all sorts and sizes—little plants just set out, and full-grown ones several feet high, with stiff, sharp-pointed leaves protecting the fruit tucked away in their midst. Most of them had only little crimson bunches yet, but off in one corner Ned found two ripe ones, and was just going to carry them off when he saw a huge feathered thing lying huddled up in one of the alleys between the rows of pineapples.

"Uncle! O, Uncle!" he called, "please come here a minute."

Uncle came and looked. "Why, it's a pelican," he said. And then as he stooped and examined it, "wounded, too—poor thing!" he said pityingly.

"P'r'aps we could cure it if we took it home," suggested Ned.

"I'm afraid not," said Uncle doubtfully. "Still, it wouldn't do any harm to try. We'll let Moses bring it along in the cart: it's too heavy to carry."

When they got home they found Mr. Pelican wasn't hurt so badly after all, and Auntie May's nursing agreed with him so well that in a week he was walking around. Ned thought he was the queerest mixture of pretty and ugly he had ever seen. His feathers were beautiful, especially the rich reddish ones on the neck. But such clumsy, sprawling feet, with toes joined together in a sort of web! And, queerest of all, a tough, skinny pouch underneath his long, flat bill. Ned wondered what it was for until "Piney" (as he called him, from the place where he was found), began to fish for his dinner. He perched out on the end of the long dock and watched until a fish came along. Then down he plunged, grabbed the fish, stored it away in his pouch, and so on until he had enough. Whenever he got hungry all he had to do was to take a fish or two out of his convenient lunch basket.

Ned was afraid that Piney would go away when he got well. Perhaps he thought Uncle Will's dock had as nice fish near it as any other place on the lake. Anyway he stayed and soon got so tame that he would waddle round the grounds after Ned just like a dog.

The one member of the family who disapproved of Piney was the old cook, Lily. "Seems lak he jes' knows when Ah got mah po'ch swep' up," she said. "Den he 'low he'll trail dose feet along an' spile it. Ole Mars Debbil in dat bird; you all better watch out." So whenever she heard a certain shuffle on the porch, Lily would peek around the corner; and if no one was with Piney he was likely to be "shooed" off the porch in a hurry.

One afternoon every one had gone sailing, and, queerly enough, Piney had not appeared. Lily was rocking away singing "De Year ob Jubilee" in the best of spirits, when she heard a step outside. Up she jumped, and round the porch she ran, slashing frantically with the broom and crying: "G'way, now, yo' pernicketty old"—

And that's as far as she got, for the broom hit—not Piney, but the young minister from down the lake. Over the edge of the porch he went—just like Piney—and actually rolled in the sand! Poor Lily! All she could say at first was: "Mas' Preachah, O, Mas' Preachah!"

But the sand was soft and "Mas' Preachah" wasn't hurt. So he sat on the edge of the piazza and listened with great bursts of laughter to Lily's explanations. As he went away, smoothing his crushed hat, whom should he meet but Piney, waddling up the trail with Ned.

"So this is your pelican, is it, Ned?" he asked with a twinkle in his eye. "Better teach him to wear hats if you don't want his head cracked."

After her mistake Lily did a little extra scrubbing, but put the entire blame of the happening on Piney. "Huh-uh," she would say, shaking her head wisely, "What Ah tell yo' 'bout dat biggety bird?"—Central Presbyterian.

The Christian Life.

CHILDREN OF GOD.

"Be ye therefore imitators of God, as dear children, and walk in love."

This verse is welded to the closing paragraphs of the preceding chapter. "Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Be ye, therefore, imitators of God, as dear children." Imitators of God. That's high teaching. That's a high standard. Surely it is the standard and model of absolute perfection. Imitate perfection. Imitation of an imitation is always a weakness and it develops weakness. If you strive to shape your life by imitating the best man that ever lived—if you say, I will imitate John, or Paul, or James—Wesley, or Luther, I care not who—sure as you live you will imitate their faults, as well as their virtues. More than that, you will most strongly imitate their faults and weaknesses. There have been a thousand imitators of Napoleon, and each imitator has had his Moscow and Waterloo, without the glory of Austerlitz, Jena and Friedland. There are young pianists who wrong the barber out of many hair cuts and thereby imagine they remind people of Paderewski. And they do. There are men who fancy they resemble Carlyle because they have dyspepsia. So they do. I have heard of a man who believed himself to be a child of destiny because he drank too much, like Alexander the Great; was a dandy in dress, like Disraeli; was head over heels in debt, like Alexander Dumas; was a glutton at table, like Peter the Great; swore once in awhile, like George Washington at Monmouth, and wrote an illegible hand, like Horace Greeley. There is no need for illustration. I appeal to your own knowledge. Aren't you thinking now of some man or woman of your own acquaintance who imitates some one else? And doesn't the imitator invariably imitate some fault, some weakness, some mere, unmeaning peculiarity rather than the real virtues and strength and goodness of the model?

If you imitate a human model, you are almost certain to imitate a mannerism of which the model is almost or wholly unconscious. President Weston once told me how, in his college days, an irreverent student, being called upon for some exercise in declamation, rose in his place, and with the utmost deliberation walked forward to the platform, most excellently imitating in gait, attitude and gesture throughout his speech, the professor of elocution. Everybody laughed and applauded at the faithful replica, except the puzzled professor, who could not for the life of him see what they were laughing at. It is a weakness to imitate a human model. And some men there are who imitate imitations. This deserves a term of solitary confinement. "Be ye, therefore, imitators of perfection." Let Christ be your pattern of life and thought. The child imitates his father and mother. This is unconscious imitation. It is the molding power of love and intimate association, of daily and almost hourly companionship. Love and trust and reverence makes this imitation possible without conscious effort. Be ye imitators of the heavenly Father. Be ye, therefore, holy—not like John, or James, or Paul, Moses or Samuel—but "be ye, therefore, perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect." Never in this life of human limitation will you attain to that perfection of holiness. But perfection shall be your holy ideal, and with this lofty and faultless ideal you will make, with God's help, the most and the best of your humanity. As imitators of God, you will grow symetrically. At your best, you will be imperfect Christians. But you need not be one-sided, deformed. You won't love your friends and hate your enemies. You won't cultivate blindness to develop the blind man's keenness of hearing.—Robert J. Burdette.

FAMILY LIFE.

It is a deplorable fact, but none the less true, that, compared with other countries, we Americans have little united family life.

Such a thing as a young man or woman having a friend who was not also the friend of every other member of the household would not be countenanced in England or Germany, any more than would one member of the family be allowed to go off with his or her "crowd," irrespective of father, mother, brothers and sisters. We cannot help being struck with the different condition of affairs in this respect when returning to our own beloved land.

We Americans are almost too sufficient unto ourselves. Our interests are diversified and detached many times from those of the rest of the family. A girl is often far less a companion to her own mother and sisters than to some "chum" of just her own age.

This "chum" question is a problem. Not infrequently it exhausts the personality, drains whatever originality a girl possesses, and creates in her a desire to be identically what the other girls of her set are, until the mother may well feel that instead of a thinking, capable daughter, she has only a "type," no different in dress, manners and ideas from hundreds of her age and class.

We need to draw the cords of family life and influence a great deal closer; to have each child filling his or her place, like a cluster of blossoms on the parent stem; to have a unity of interests. Not a father absorbed in business, a mother in household cares, a daughter in social engagements, and a son in college life, so scattered in ideas that when they come together one hardly understands the other's conversation.

Is there anything more delightful than the evening meal in a thoroughly congenial Christian family? When the work of the day is done, and each gathers round the board eager to hear and tell what has occupied them since morning; when every detail, down to Johnny's account of a good baseball catch, is listened to with interest, and gives excuse for a universal ripple of merriment; when the suggestion that mother looks tired turns every eye to her as to the pivot upon which their lives swing; when father's opinion is sought on every subject under the sun, from social problems to "water-wings"—surely the Master's benediction rests upon such a gathering.

But let us not be selfish in our family life. Bring others in to share it. How often do we think of inviting some stranger, someone with whom life is not gone over well, to stay with us for a few days, or even to share a genuine home meal? And yet the wife of a minister in the northwest, the mother of five children, and with only a small frame house for a resting place, sets aside one room for just this purpose. "You can think," she wrote recently to a friend, "what a good time I have coddling these 'down' ones and making them feel that life is not so dark after all."

What a work for God! To bring the lonely and discouraged into our home and send them on their way strengthened and uplifted! And yet such a work is within the power of many a Christian woman who has "bread enough and to spare." God help us to use the homes which He has given us to His glory and praise!—New York Observer.

Great opportunities seldom present themselves, but every moment of every hour of thy conscious life is an opportunity to improve thyself, which for thee is the best and most necessary thing.—Ruskin.

"Have you ever heard the gospel preached?" asked a missionary of a respectable Chinaman, whom he had not seen before in the mission room. "No," the man replied, "but I have seen it lived. I know a man who was the terror of his neighborhood. If you gave him a hard word, he would curse you for days. He was as dangerous as a wild beast, and a bad opium smoker. But when the religion of Jesus took hold of him, he became wholly changed. He is gentle, not soon angry, and has left off opium. I have come to find the same religion."—Deaconess Advocate.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1906.

It requires pure Gospel preaching to shape saints after the New Testament pattern. Another Gospel, which is not another, may produce partisans and bigots.

Religion that saves men and uplifts society wherever it is preached has something in it besides theory. Paul declared the secret when he said: "Our Gospel came to you not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

Shams are soon detected. This is no less true in religion than in real life. There are moral detectives, wide-awake and on the look-out, and just as sure to expose the make-believes and deceivers as city sleuths are to run down and catch fakirs and thieves.

Altruism, which enters largely into the spirit of benevolent associations, must not be mistaken for the whole of religion. Not every man who has due regard for the welfare of his brother is on a safe moral basis. Man must love God as well as do good to his fellow-man.

Somebody has said that "patriotism was never expressed in a political platform, nor has religion ever been compressed into a creed." That may be true, and yet it does not follow that a man with a political platform is a traitor, nor that one with a theological creed is a hypocrite. Who is he that judgeth?

Dr. J. E. Godbey, in a letter to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, says the Southern Methodists in that city in 1878 numbered 1406. The General Minutes for 1905 report 7272. The per cent of increase in population has been nothing like the per cent of growth in the Church. We presume all the churches have grown, for all are active.

It behooves the people of this land who are sovereign to look at home and see how much they are to blame for the purely secular education their children are receiving—a fact to be attributed to the prohibition of Bible reading and all religious exercises in our public schools. Unless this evil is stayed, a generation or two from this time will be sadly lacking in morals.

A few years since a brace of evangelists advertised for bids to conduct meetings, guaranteeing every church employing them a revival. Now comes a brother who advertises himself as "open to calls," and promises to "hold special evangelical meetings to suit the Lord and the people," and to "protract meetings from ten days to an unlimited time to suit the people and God." What he would do in case of a difference between the Lord's will and the wishes of the people he does not say.

IGNORANCE OR ARROGANCE.

It does some men good to brag. So long as they get satisfaction out of it, and it does not hurt others or stand in the way of progress, perhaps they might be allowed to brag without hindrance. But some bragging is intolerable. For example, when a Christian minister, representing his denomination, takes credit to himself and his people for all the moral victories won in the world, and utterly ignores all others, and really insinuates that none others are entitled to any credit, he goes further than modesty, not to say truth, allows. Take the following statements found in a recent issue of the Baptist Chronicle of Louisiana.

"Baptists have won in every conflict where conscience and the word of God were involved. Baptism is a matter of conscience and of Scripture. We have routed the last foe from the field.

"We have won on the deity of Christ and the authority of the Bible. In the great forward world-wide mission movement we have won after forty years of terrific strife. We will win Louisiana so soon as the fight becomes a matter of conscience. God is for it, His word commands it. Now let our hearts become fired with the zeal of an holy crusade.

"The Cabinet of England's King resigned only yesterday because of the stubborn demands of the British Baptist conscience."

Now, we give our Baptist brethren due credit for maintaining freedom of conscience and religious liberty, but we are by no means persuaded that they are the only people calling themselves Christians who stand for their fundamental principles of our Protestant faith. And the insinuation that none but Baptists have any conscience in the matter of Baptism is an unwarranted assumption. Many believers differ from Baptists on the mode and subjects of baptism, and not a few as to its design, but to charge this difference to a lack of conscience is about equivalent to saying that all Christians except Baptists are insincere. And the statement that Baptists "have routed the last foe from the field" is as far from a true statement of the case as a writer could well get. There are millions still in the field against immersion, and they are not even disfigured, much less routed.

That the writer of the above paragraphs should claim so much in regard to baptism is no new thing—it is not surprising; but that he should claim to have won the fight, single-handed and alone, on the deity of Christ, etc., is altogether surprising. As we read and understand, the Roman Catholic Church is quite as old as any Baptist Church on earth, and there was never a period, notwithstanding the corruption and innovations, when Rome did not, as an organization, hold to the deity of Christ and the authority of the Bible. The Anglican Church has done the same. Luther's reformation was built on the doctrine of our Lord's divinity and justification by faith. The Presbyterians have ever been, and are to-day, as stanch defenders of the deity of Christ and the authority of the Bible as the Baptists dare to be. And where are the Methodists? Is the sound of their pulpits uncertain on these great doctrines of the faith? Can anybody show that they have ever faltered?

What the brother means by winning "in the great forward, world-wide mission movement, after forty years of terrific strife," we do not know, unless he intends to boast of having driven hardshellism out of the Baptist churches. If that is what he means, he should be grateful enough to acknowledge the help of other Christians in modifying the hardshell influence. Certainly in the "terrific fight," whether on hardshellism, or any other force in opposition to world-wide mission work, the Baptists have had the sympathy and moral support of all evangelical Christians. We wonder if the writer ever heard of the Moravians, and their devotion to mission work? One would think he had not.

The claim that the resignation of the Cabinet of England's King is due "to the stubborn demands of the British Baptist conscience" is the climax of arrogance. That the Baptists of England are "passive resisters" and sufferers on account of their resistance to the infamous tax for the support of parochial schools is not denied. They are to be honored for the spirit of martyrdom displayed. But the Baptists compose only a fraction of "dissenters" who oppose the tax and have suffered. Dr. Clifford, a noble Baptist, leads his people. But Dr. Campbell Morgan, Dr. R. J. Campbell and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse are leaders among other dissenters, and, together with their followers, had about as much to do with the resignation of the King's Cabinet as the Baptist conscience had.

But, after all, when a man assumes that he, and those of his "faith and ardor," are the Church, and alone have the truth and authority to make it known, and claim to be the world's reformers, he had about as well claim everything else. Nothing short of that will ease his conscience and give him quiet. It makes little difference whether he is moved by ignorance or arrogance.

PRESBYTERIAN UNION.

While commissioners from the Cumberland Presbyterian and Northern Presbyterian General Assemblies were in one city arranging the details of union, a strong delegation from all sections of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church were in another city arranging a campaign of resistance. A majority of the representatives in both General Assemblies last May voted for the union of the two churches. This they did because a maority of presbyteries in both churches so instructed. In the Northern Presbyterian Church the sentiment for union is practically unanimous, but in the Cumberland, while the presbyteries voting for union were in the majority, there is no doubt that the majority of ministers and laity are opposed to union. And they are determined to fight it to the bitter end.

The "loyalists," as those who oppose union call themselves, contend that, even though a majority might favor union, there is nothing in the constitution of the Church authorizing that majority to transfer the membership and property to another body. But, on the contrary, they contend that those holding to the doctrines and polity of Cumberland Presbyterianism, if they so elect, still constitute the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and can maintain their rights before the courts. And this, in case the unionists persist, they propose to do. And they further purpose to raise $40,000 to maintain their rights.

From this it appears that if the unionists endeavor to carry out their plans, they will have a long and bitter fight in the civil courts.

Religion and common sense still rule among the Methodists, and will continue to do so as long as any respect remains for Mr. Wesley and the New Testament.

HOMES FOR SUPERANNUATES.

The North Alabama Conference has the lead in securing homes for superannuates. Exactly the number secured we do not know. The number is near twenty. North Mississippi has also been moving in that direction, but as yet has not provided quite enough money to purchase one home. We trust the amount needed will soon be in the hands of the treasurer.

The Louisiana Conference, at its session three weeks since, took the matter up, and, under a resolution offered by Rev. W. E. Boggs, instructed the Joint Board of Finance to take such steps as it deemed necessary to secure homes for superannuated preachers in various parts of the State, these homes to be given free of rent to aged or infirm pastors, when placed on the retired list, and are to remain in their possession as long as they live and occupy them, and then be given to others."

This resolution should arouse the sympathy and enlist the active co-operation of every effective preacher in the Conference. The day is coming when everyone, unless cut off by death or location, will be on that "retired list," and not everyone will have saved enough money to buy a house of his own. A superannuated preacher, in a comfortable, little home, practically his own, with the pension annually provided by the Church, need not fear starvation in his old age.

The Church should make their faithful servants as comfortable and as happy as possible.

SUPERANNUATE HOME.

Some progress is being made towards the purchase of a home for superannuates in the Durant District. The Treasurer, Brother F. A. Howell, has received $50 since Conference, of which amount Rev. R. E. Duke sent $34.50. Some charges are much stronger than the charge served by Brother Duke, and Brother Howell says, if they would all do as well, he would soon "have nothing to do but to thank God and the brethren, and turn the money over to the proper authorities to secure the home." It would be greatly to the honor of Durant District to be the first in Mississippi to secure a home for homeless old preachers. A dear old man, verging on to 80 years of age, needs a home right now. Why not make the old man happy?

A FEW NOTES CONCERNING THE ADVOCATE.

A brother, whose opinion we value, says in a private note: "I am so delighted with our paper, the way it is edited and managed. I hope to be able to send many new subscribers."

Another brother, a presiding elder and graduate of a great University, says: "I am particularly pleased with the present make-up of the Advocate. You ought to have 300 new subscribers from this district alone." And they are coming.

One occupying a high place and competent to speak says: "You are certainly producing an excellent paper. Its mechanical make-up, which was always its only defect, is now a thing of beauty."

A presiding elder who recently visited the Advocate said: "I want to tell you how much I am enjoying the improvement in the Advocate. I congratulate you and all of your readers. It is fine. I shall do my best to stimulate interest in the Advocate."

A Secretary says: "Congratulations! The Advocate is very much improved by its new dress."

A leading Louisiana lawyer, in renewing his subscription, says: "Your improvement of the Advocate shows that conservatism is not inconsistent with progress and betterment. I am old enough to have observed that the loudest shouters of reform and progress are generally 'vox, et praeterea nihil.'"

The following indorsement of the Advocate was given by the Rayne Memorial Quarterly Conference, and, by vote, was sent to the Editor. The indorsement is highly appreciated.

"Dear Dr. Boswell: At the Fourth Quarterly Conference of Rayne Memorial Charge we were requested to convey to you the appreciation of our people at the many improvements being made in the Advocate which, we feel assured, cannot but result in its increased usefulness and power for good as the organ of our Church in this city; also that we commend it to the membership as worthy of their patronage, and that as official members we do all we can to aid in its circulation. Respectfully,

RICHARD WILKINSON,
J. R. WESTERFIELD,
Committee.

PERSONAL.

Rev. L. C. Wilson has entered upon the work of his new charge, Amite City, hopefully. He says "our work starts off well, and we expect a good year."

Rev. B. P. Fullilove enters his third year in New Albany circuit, and starts off with flattering prospects. He is also doing some good work for the Advocate.

Rev. A. H. Williams of Grenada Circuit is "grateful for perfect health and a good beginning" in his new and important charge. We trust great success may crown his labors.

Rev. F. M. Sweeney has secured the services of Rev. R. R. Jones, of Alabama, for two meetings—one at Hammond, the other at Ponchatoula. The meeting at Hammond is now in progress.

Dr. John T. Sawyer, presiding Elder of the Alexandria District, finding it convenient to live in New Orleans, has located at 1022 Leontine St., where correspondents are requested to address him.

Bishop Morrison's immediate engagements will carry him to Brookhaven in the interest of the new Church at that place; thence he goes to Florida and South Georgia. He will be absent from the city two weeks or more.

The following changes of address are noted at request of these brethren: Revs. S. J. Davies, from Washington to Sicily Island, La; Rev. L. L. Roberts, from Gena to Trout, La.; and Rev. J. D. Newsom from Macon, Miss. to Meridian.

Saturday and Sunday last was the time for first Quarterly Meeting on Ponchatoula Circuit. It was held at Hammond. Rev. R. W. Tucker, the P. E., was on hand, and, though suffering from effects of cold, he preached twice, and presided over the Conference.

Brother N. A. Mott, the Sunday-school man of the Mississippi Conference, has succeeded in securing the names and addresses of 424 Sunday-school superintendents of the Conference. He has catalogued the names by churches and districts, and sent them out in leaflet form. We thank him for a copy.

It is very gratifying to the whole Church in the Corinth District that the Presiding Elder, Rev. W. C. Harris, who has had a long and serious spell of sickness, is again able to be about his loved employ. We trust a year of great success is before him.

Rev. C. B. Strouse has been holding a meeting at Atlantic City, N. J., and great success crowned his efforts. No building in the city is large enough to hold the crowds that attend the services, and hundreds of persons expressed a desire to lead a better life. Brother Strouse is held in great esteem as a revivalist.

Rev. W. H. Saunders is happy over his return to Centreville, and the Church has shown its appreciation by making liberal provision for his welfare. His Church has been newly carpeted, and in the near future improvements will be made on the parsonage. He is looking forward with interest to the coming of Drs. Murrah and Cooper, each of whom will give him a day's work.

Dr. Wilkinson was cordially received by the Church at Monroe. His parsonage was made ready by the ladies, and the doctor and family stepped from the steamer into a comfortable and well furnished house, including the "larder stocked with all the seasonable edibles. The Bulletin, from which we gather the item, adds: "Sunday morning and night he preached to congregations which filled every seat in the Church, and his two earnest and eloquent sermons give promise of a year of fine work by the new pastor and his people."

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Dear Advocate: Please reproduce the following paragraph taken from the report of the Board of Education of the Louisiana Annual Conference, as published in your issue of Jan. 25th, to wit:

"The Board recommends by a majority of one the appointment of C. C. Miller as President of Centenary College, and Thomas Carter and H. B. Carre as Professors of Vanderbilt University; A. A. Bernard and J. W. Ried as students to Vanderbilt University, and H. M. Honeycutt as student in Millsaps, and that C. B. Carter be appointed Conference Secretary of Education."

From the above it appears that the undersigned was not the only one that had a narrow escape, but that all the above brethren were in "sad plight." It is very evident to my mind that the shot was intended for the undersigned, but it seems to hit the whole bunch. In justice to us all, please allow me to state that, notwithstanding our narrow escape, each of us was unanimously elected by the Annual Conference to his respective place. Yours truly.

Temperance.

The following item will be read with pleasure by the friends of temperance everywhere. We print it gladly:

"To Our Friends Throughout the Country:

"It is with pleasure and gratitude that I report the incorporation of an amendment in the statehood bill, which passed the House of Representatives on Jan. 25, providing for the continuance of prohibition in the Indian Territory and the Indian reservations in Oklahoma for a period of twenty-one years and thereafter until the people of the new state shall otherwise provide by amendment of the state constitution. In order to provide against what might be termed a hiatus or a period of time between the termination of federal and the inauguration of state control, adequate penalties for the enforcement of this legislation are incorporated in the constitutional provision itself. In view of the fact that the Senate, by a vote of 52 to 17, adopted prohibition for the whole state in the statehood bill last winter in the Fifty-eighth Congress, we feel confident that we can at least hold the above-mentioned House provision. In some quarters the constitutionality of partial state prohibition in Oklahoma has been questioned, but this matter had been very carefully canvassed, and the opinion of several of the very best constitutional lawyers secured, and, in addition, we have carefully examined the decisions of the courts ourselves, and feel convinced that there is no danger whatever on this question.

"We shall keep you informed from time to time with reference to the status of other temperance measures in the present (the Fifty-ninth) Congress, which we are endeavoring to have enacted into law. The above is a very substantial and helpful victory in view of the fact that two years ago the House Committee had no provision in the statehood bill against the general sale of liquors in the Indian country. Very sincerely yours,

"EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE,
"Legislative Superintendent, Anti-Saloon League of America."

PURVIS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I would like for you to make a note of the following in this week's "Advocate:"

I rejoice to report that on yesterday, the 28th inst., we succeeded in raising our assessments for foreign and domestic missions in full and running over, $70 in excess being subscribed. One of our generous-hearted laymen, Brother James Hand, agrees to support a single missionary in the foreign field. This is the first year Purvis has been a station. May God put it into the hearts of many other well-to-do laymen to follow Brother Hand's noble example!

M. M. BLACK.

NEW ALBANY, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I arrived in New Albany Dec. 15, 1905. Met with a royal welcome. Revs. J. W. Anderson and Thos. Cameron and the church made me feel perfectly at home from the first day. I have secured forty new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and sent in three renewals. Have received fifty-five members since Conference—fifty-four by letter and one on profession of faith. Have made over 100 pastoral visits and finished one church at Glenfield, all except putting in the pews. Have wired the parsonage and put in two grates and one heater. Congregations have been good. My predecessors have wrought well. Much of the success is due to the labors of Rev. J. W. Anderson for the last three years, and his influence abides. My first Quarterly Conference convened here the 29th of January. Rev. W. C. Harris, the P. E., was with us and presided to the satisfaction of all. He is a power for good in his district. Am expecting a good revival.

O. L. SAVAGE.

Jan. 30, 1906.

ARCOLA AND HOLLANDALE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We are starting well and full of hope at Arcola and Hollandale for the year. I have filled every appointment since Conference. This is a good charge; we have a good people at each of the churches. They have been kind and thoughtful of us. Many good things have come to the parsonage. The good women of Hollandale sent a big box filled with many good things to eat. God bless them. The good people here come or send something every few days, which makes us glad. Our good women here have all the missionary organizations of the church, and they have three weekly prayer meetings, and are arranging to take a special course in Bible study. We have a good Sunday School at each of the churches. The work is in a growing condition, and we are looking for a good year.

As your writer sees things, there are many evidences of great improvement in the moral condition of this great country. May God hasten the day when we shall have this great land in the hands of our Lord. The Methodist Church is keeping up with the times. This (the Greenville District) is to soon be the banner district in our Conference, and, under the leadership of our new P. E., we are looking for a great year. He seems to be a man of affairs, and is taking hold of the work with much zeal. We have a body of good men in this district. Every man seems to be doing well, and there is perfect harmony in all places, so far as I know.

I am doing some work for the Advocate, and must have one of our papers in each home, if possible. I am hopeful and happy in the work.

Expert Medical Advice Free to The Sick.

Recognized as the Oldest Established and Most Reliable Specialist.

No matter where you go you could find no physician or specialist more competent to advise or to treat you, if you have a chronic disease, than Dr. Hathaway of Atlanta; and too, he is offering to counsel and advise every sufferer free of charge. If you have any disease of a chronic nature, such as Kidney or Bladder Disease, Stricture, Rheumatism, Varicocele, Skin Disease, Nervous Debility, Catarrh of the different organs, Stomach, Bowel and Liver Complaints, diseases peculiar to women, etc., you should at once write and take advantage of this offer. In addition you will be sent a valuable booklet on your disease. Dr. Hathaway is recognized as the most successful specialist in the South today, and the secret of his success lies in the fact that he has always dealt with his patients in a fair, honest, straightforward manner, promising them nothing that he could not fulfill and by curing their disease. His charges are not extraordinarily high, but are reasonable, certainly no more than you would be willing to pay for successful treatment of your case. All correspondence strictly confidential. Address DR. HATHAWAY & CO., 57 Inman Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

Death is never without its pangs. The heart is always sorrowed when a loved one goes away. All of us are keenly sensitive to separation. We shall be separated for awhile from our friend and loved one, WILLIE DECKBAR. He died Dec. 22, 1905, in the very prime of his young manhood. He gave his heart and life to God when but a boy, and for the last five years he had been a true and faithful member of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, and also a member of the Epworth League, whose motto is "All for Christ." Those of us who worship at his church will miss his pleasant face as he gave a cordial welcome to the strangers and, hearty handshake to his friends. We'll miss him in his pew, devoutly engaged in worship, but most of all will he be missed by the loved ones at home. While our hearts ache when we realize we shall see him no more in our midst on earth, yet we thank God for such a life as his, and in his footsteps, as he followed Christ, may we walk till we come to join him in our Father's house on high. W. W. HOLMES.

Miss ALMA HAUSEY was born in East Baton Rouge Parish, La., Jan. 30, 1891; joined the Methodist Church at Blackwater in 1899 under the ministry of Rev. W. H. Benton. Alma was possessed of one of those rare, beautiful natures, whose highest pleasure lies in ministering to the wants of others. The afflicted, whether man, beast or fowl, found in her a deep sympathizer. At the time of her death she had around her those "pets" that were or had been afflicted. She was a beam of sunshine to her schoolmates, cheerful and submissive with the larger ones, kind and helpful to the smaller ones. With her sisters and brothers she was considerate; was particularly helpful to her father, while her affection for her mother was equaled by few. A short while before she died, in speaking with her mother of beautiful homes, she said: "I'm going to live in a house where everything is pure gold." "Well," said her mother, "You'll have to leave this world to find such a home," to which she replied that it was the kind in which she was going to live. She took sick on Friday morning, died the next morning, Oct. 14, 1905, and the remains were taken to Blackwater Church, where an eloquent sermon was made in the church graveyard. We miss her, but we know that through our loss heaven has gained one of its brightest jewels.

A SCHOOLMATE.

The earthly life of BENJ. CLARENCE STUART began on Percy's Creek, in Wilkinson County, Miss., Oct. 3, 1884, and ended there at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Stuart, Dec. 18, 1905. He had received a fair education and bravely entered upon lines of self-support. While engaged in working upon a building in Wilson, La., on May 19, 1904, he fell from the second story, and by an injury to his spinal cord the lower half of the body was completely paralyzed. He was immediately taken to New Orleans, where his condition was pronounced irremediable. "The silver cord" was, indeed, almost "loosed" and life, as it were, upon the banks of the Jordan, elicited great spiritual interest on his part, and peculiar and prolonged sympathy on the part of his family and their friends. The constant attendance of his devoted sister, Miss Blanche, and five and a half months at McLain's Sanitarium, in St. Louis, revived some hope and restored partial use and feeling. A sad relapse came, and shortly after returning home, after singing the hymn, "We'll never say good-by in Heaven," and others, the outer surgings of the spiritual life below blended with those of the eternal world.

Woodville, Miss., Jan. 22, 1906.

A TRIBUTE OF LOVE.

Whereas our Heavenly Father, in his wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. M. L. DUNNUM; and whereas she has, by her exemplary life and character, endeared herself to all in our community; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as members of the W. H. M. S. of Boyce, La., deeply deplore her death; that we cherish her godly example, she being ever ready and willing to help when she could.

Resolved further, That we tender our sincere sympathy to her children, sister, brothers and other relatives, and ask the blessings of God upon them, and that he may comfort them as he alone can comfort, that they may be able, with humble submission, to say, "Not my will, but thine, be done."

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her children, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that a copy be placed on record of the Society.

MRS. M. N. JAMES.
MRS. HARRY BROWN.
MRS. B. N. SEWELL.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas God, in his wisdom, has seen it good to remove our beloved friend, HELEN PUSEY, from our midst, and being desirous of testifying our respect for her memory and expressing our earnest and affectionate sympathy with all deprived of this beautiful character; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That we, members of the Sunday School of the M. E. Church, South, at Ponchatoula, La., tenderly condole with the family of our deceased friend in their hour of trial and affliction, and devoutly commend them to the keeping of Him who looks with pitying eye upon the bereaved.

Resolved, That in our natural sorrow for the loss of a faithful one, we find consolation in the belief that it is well with her whom we mourn.

Resolved, That while we deeply sympathize with those who were bound to our departed loved one by nearest and dearest ties, we share with them the hope of a reunion in that better world where there are no more partings and bliss ineffable forbid all tears.

Resolved, That the preamble and resolutions now adopted be spread on the minutes, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication and be transmitted to the family of the deceased as a token of our respect and veneration for the Christian character of a good girl gone to her rest. A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a Southern physician. Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 469 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

"The Pure Life."—Col. iii, 5-15.

Dear Leaguers—

As the winter months fly apace, we look out upon our bare gardens and long to see the sweet violet lift its modest head, the glowing many-hued pansy open its pretty eyes, the little forget-me-not nod as much as to say, "I have not failed to come again and deserve to be remembered." In short, we would love to have our flower-beds decked in green and red and pink and blue and every color that lends beauty and freshness. Oh, spring, come with thy fulfilled promises of verdant fields and richly-clothed scenes!

On the holy Sabbath we enter God's sanctuary and are soothed that it is filled with a sacred quiteude. Soft carpets muffle footsteps, pure flowers gladden the eye and shed a delicate fragrance; mayhap chancel and pew are costly, yet of subdued richness, and memorial windows add charm and grace to God's house. His presence affords ineffable peace. The temple is clothed so exquisitely that we exclaim with the Psalmist, "I was glad when they said unto me," Let us go into the house of the Lord."

Yet, Leaguers, though it gives pleasure to see gardens and churches and artists' studios and palatial homes clad in the habiliments suited to each, there is a something far more worthy of being richly endowed than any of these. Much time and thought are given to the proper and becoming garb for the body. Of course, it would be folly to deny that beautiful, appropriate clothing, whether simple or expensive, is attractive, but I want to talk with you about the garments unsuitable and suitable for the soul. The Apostle Paul, in his letter to the Colossians, says that a follower of Christ should put off "anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication, and lying." Not one of us would think of wearing tattered, soiled or gaudily-colored clothing—if we were compelled to do so for a time, we would put off as soon as we could and would don new, pure, modest attire. How about the soul? Shall we not give it equal care, at least? Ah, yes! Let us pray God to help us to rid ourselves of one and all of these afore-mentioned vices.

Now, just as we want to plant lovely flowers where we expelled the choking weeds, so we desire to enhauce the soul's value by dressing it anew, for it cannot be left bare. With the Savior's divine help, all ugliness is removed and he gives us such radiant attire for our souls.

"Put on * * * therefore mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearance, forgiveness, charity and peace." What a contrast between the old and the new! From poverty to wealth! From vileness to purity!

There are some whom we know and, perhaps, admire, who are what is termed "Diamonds in the rough." But gold in the rock and diamonds unpolished are not as beautiful and useful as when purified. The dross removed, the intrinsic worth shines forth.

Dear friends, I shall leave these few thoughts with you, trusting that the Father will bless them to the good of some one. Will you let me close with what is entitled "The Fragrance of a Good Life."?

"Henry Ward Beecher once related that when he was in Paris he used to rise early and sit at his open window. He always knew when the stores beneath him were open, for one was a flower store, and from its numberless roses and heaps of mignonette arose such sweet fragrance that it proclaimed what was done. 'So,' said Mr. Beecher, 'it seems to me that Christians should be as a flower store, and that the odor of sanctity should betray them wherever they are. Not that they should go about obtruding themselves and their actions on others, with the cant of usefulness, but that they should live the purity and joy of religion."

JESUS CALLING FISHERMEN.

The church has been for years trying to solve the problem of "How to reach the masses." In our lesson before us we will learn how Jesus reached them, and there is no better way than following the example of Jesus in everything.

The time was fully ripe for committing man's part of the work of organizing the Church to men chosen by the Master.

A year had passed since that memorable day by the seaside, where he had received baptism at the hands of John. John's voice had been hushed by the ruthless hand of the tyrant king, and the disciples John had made were ready to become the disciples of the Lord. The whole country was in a disturbed state; the conditions were in some measure similar to what we are facing in our own country to-day. Class distinction prevailed, the wealthy and influential were in power; thinking men were alarmed at the least movement of the common people. Some attempts had been made toward deliverance by leaders fired by patriotism and urged on by injustice, but they were wrong in that they thought to accomplish the purpose by armed force. They were quickly suppressed and summarily punished. Jesus knew of all this, and he knew where relief was most needed, so, turning his back on Jerusalem and the temple, the home of the learned, and the place where law had given way to a tradition suitable to each and every case as a corrupt Sanhedrin saw fit to apply, He betook himself to the poor and lowly; nor did he send to them, but went himself and became one of them. No home was so lowly but that he entered at once. No sufferer was so loathsome but that the gentle touch of his hand was bestowed at once.

Now, to these people he comes to give them "good tidings of great joy." He came to them to teach them that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. And it was his set purpose that the first four of his apostles should be representative men of this lower class of the many classes of society that prevailed; for the Pharisees and lawyers, representing their class, "Had rejected the counsel of God against themselves," being not baptized of John and not willing to become disciples of Christ. So Jesus, betaking himself to the shores of the sea of Galilee, came upon four fishermen, who had drawn their boats near the shore, so as they could be among those that were listening to his gracious words, and said to Simon, one of the four: "Move your boat out to where the water is deeper and let down your nets for a draught of fish." Simon answered, "Master, we have toiled all night, and have caught nothing; nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." He let the net down, and when he attempted to draw it up again found the net so full of fish that it began to break. So Simon and Andrew called to James and John, who were in another boat, for assistance; and they came and filled both the ships with so many fish that they began to sink. Simon saw with wonder, and knew at once that the Master was then in his divine power, and had worked a miracle for them, so he came to the Lord, very close to him, and fell upon his knees, saying: "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord!"

Jesus' loving words assured Simon of his acceptance, even if he was a sinful man. "Fear not," said Jesus; "henceforth thou shalt catch men." There was the beginning of the selection of those on whom Jesus was to depend to spread his doctrines and his love for mankind.

"They brought their ships to land and forsook all and followed him." How simple and concise does Luke describe an action so full of meaning to those poor fishermen and to the world. They were no more to follow their avocation, but were to follow the Master and learn that they that preach the Gospel must live by the Gospel. The world could see nothing in those plain-minded men that they should be chosen to occupy so exalted a position as apostles of our Lord; but Jesus saw the inner man; he was looking on their hearts, and he could see their several abilities developed in the future after much training and teaching.

From a study of their characters, as shown to us by an after-view, we know to a great extent the manner of men they were. Simon Peter was the chief one, and we are surprised that he was, for we decide that he was anything but cool-headed — to think that not long afterwards he shrank from an accusation made by a little girl, and denied his Lord. Yet it is a matter for thanks that we have the history of Peter, with his denials and failings, for we know that what is spoken of him is true to human nature, and if at the last our Lord still had confidence in him, what a great consolation it is to each and all of us.

Who would not have stood up before them all and vehemently protest against his Lord washing his feet, yet the next moment he was filled with fear, lest he have no part with the Lord.

After all this, and after the Lord had ascended up to heaven, and after the "day of Pentecost was fully come," what power was given this same erratic Peter, insomuch that at his preaching three thousand souls were added to the Church the same day. James and John were well named "The sons of Thunder." Did they not wish to call down fire from heaven to destroy a people who had not shown their Master the hospitality they thought was due him?

A close study will reveal to us in some degree that which our Lord saw in its fullness from the first. There is enough told of these poor fishermen for us to know them well. Even by the character shown in their writings, opening the blessed book at random and reading, we can tell who is the writer by the words used and the subject treated. Let us learn that we are to work where our Lord has placed us, for he has chosen us and the place, and he knows our adaptability better than we ever know ourselves.

The object of the work was the salvation of men and the coming of the kingdom of our Lord; for that same object we, who love our Lord, are working and waiting to-day. O what a glorious consummation! Then there will be a common brotherhood of man. Nations will no more go to war, and universal peace will spread over the whole earth.

Millions upon millions of God's poor, who find it hard to even live, are looking for relief just as the Jews of the time of our lesson were looking for the Messiah.

Let us pray, and faint not, as he taught us to pray: "Thy kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth as in heaven."

CARDUI BABIES

Many homes are mere lonely abodes because no children are there. Barrenness exists in almost every case because female diseases have paralyzed the organs of womanhood.

Wine of Cardui imparts health and strength to the diseased parts and makes motherhood possible in thousands of cases where barrenness is supposed to be incurable. Wine of Cardui regulates the menstrual flow and also prevents miscarriage and cures bearing down pains. Wine of Cardui removes the cause of barrenness by making the female organism strong and healthy.

Go to your druggist and secure a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui. The use of Wine of Cardui will bring happiness to your home.

BRYANT, VA., Feb. 18, 1902.

My daughter-in-law, Lizzie Giles, found great benefit in Wine of Cardui. She had a miscarriage in March 1901, before using your medicine. She was in very bad health, so I persuaded her to try Wine of Cardui. Since then she has had a fine baby boy. Soon he will be three weeks old. She highly recommends Wine of Cardui.

My daughter, Fannie Hudson, also has a fine baby boy by your treatment. She highly appreciates Wine of Cardui.

VICKSBURG, CRAWFORD ST.

Not having to move (for which we are profoundly grateful), we began the work of our fourth year immediately upon return from Conference, filling out the calendar year, 1905, without the absence of a single day from the pulpit. The new year opens up auspiciously. Congregations have been exceptionally good. We have installed a new and larger furnace, which works admirably, performing the purposes for which it was made perfectly. Have contracted with an organ company to put the organ in thorough repair, and the Home Mission Society has let the contract for carpeting the auditorium. At a meeting of the Board of Stewards in the early part of the month a committee was appointed which is now actively engaged planning for purchasing or building a new parsonage. Our Sunday School is adding to its roll every Sunday, now numbering 300. The Epworth League, with its fifty active members, is planning for larger things. Both of these departments are working to the purchasing of pianos. So you see, Mr. Editor, that Crawford Street seems in for business. We are calculating on having Bishop Galloway with us soon to dedicate the church, at which time we will be pleased to have the presence of all former pastors. On the 9th inst. Brother Huntley called the District Stewards together in our Sunday School room. After a careful distribution of the assessments over the district, the matter of paying for the district parsonage was taken up, and plans suggested which, if vigorously worked, should settle that point within the next sixty days. So far as this pastor is concerned, he is satisfied with all his district associates, from the "beloved" down. Out of fifteen appointments in the district, only two have change of pastors. Hurrah for our thoughtful Elder! T. B. HOLLOMAN.

OFFICE of CALDWELL COMMISSION CO.

Chicago, Ill. January 21st, 1890
Mr. A. B. GIRARDEAU, Savannah Ga.
Dear Sir—My son, a man of thirty years, was attacked with La Grippe, and believing it to be of Malarial origin, took your Johnson's Tonic as directed for Chills and Fever. The result was he escaped the fever which follows the severe aching, and was able to be at work the second day. I was taken with the disease. Every bone in me began to ache, and my sufferling was great. I was compelled to go home and to bed. I fully expected to be there a week. My son told me of his experience, and urged me to take Johnson's Chill and Fever Tonic. I didso—took it with regularity all through the night—and was agreeably surprised to see that no Fever came. I continued until I had taken eight doses—felt weak and exhausted, but no fever, and aching disappeared. Next morning I had a good appetite for my breakfast, and felt quite well, and went to my business as well as I ever was. Since then I have tried it with like results on two other cases.
Yours truly, W. W. CALDWELL,
President and Manager.
Send $1.00. We will send 2 bottles and guarantee to cure.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The world of Christian scholarship returns ever with unflagging interest to the study of the Life of our Lord. As the knowledge of the life of Jesus increases, the place he occupies in the attention of men grows larger. Jesus of Nazareth is a greater person to-day than ever before because the facts of His life have become more widely read and deeply studied.

There are many ways to study the Life of Christ. He may be studied from the standpoint of His divinity or again "the man, Christ Jesus" may be the subject. The devotional study of the Life of our Lord can not fail to be stimulating to the spiritual life. But antedating these and many other methods of work should come the historical study of the historic Jesus. To know the facts of His life, uncolored by the sidelights of later theological thought, is the sacred duty of every man who follows in the footsteps of the Man of Nazareth. The superstructure of all our belief in Christ must be built on accurate historical knowledge as a foundation.

The members of our church, both clerical and lay, are fortunate in being able to secure such study open to all who desire to know more of the life of Christ. The Correspondence School, under the direction of the faculty of Vanderbilt University, is placing special emphasis just now on this popular course. The text book used is Burton & Mathews' "Constructive Studies in the Life of Christ" ($1 net). The method of work is constructive, and appeals to every serious student. A useful accompaniment to the text is Stevens & Burton's "Harmony of the Gospels" ($1 net).

One student who finished this course with us writes at the close of his study: "I want to express to you my hearty appreciation of these studies. They have done more than anything I have ever used to fix the life of Christ in my mind, to interpret his teachings and signs. I have followed him as never before about the Lake of Gallilee, over the Judean hills and into the temple courts. These studies have a fullness and reality that make the student feel that he is on the ground as a sympathetic witness of what is transpiring. I have been greatly benefited in my understanding and rewarded in my heart for having prosecuted, even in my last moments, these chapters."

The course has also the hearty approval of Drs. Atkins and Hamill, of the Sunday School Department.

The course is especially helpful now, as the Sunday School lessons for the year are on the Life of Christ. No pastor should fail to take this opportunity of acquainting himself with this most important subject. There is already a large number of preachers and Sunday School teachers taking the course.

Anyone desiring further information about the course should write to J. L. Cunninggim, Director, Nashville, Tenn.

A STATEMENT AND REQUEST.

Bishop Morrison sent Rev. E. H. Mowre to Portland, Oregon, two years ago to organize a church. Brother Mowre had only the names of two members, and did not know their address. He is now the pastor in that city of a well-organized church of one hundred and sixty-three members, and is ready to break ground on a $5,000 lot for a $25,000 church building.

We want to begin work next fall in Seattle, Wash., a city equally as important as Portland.

I want the names and addresses of our members and friends there. While in Seattle the first of the year I found thirty-eight of our people in four days. I expect to return about the 13th of March to renew the search for members, and the pastors and laymen of the church can greatly assist me if they will kindly send me the name and address—the name, if the address is not known—of any member who has moved there from another part of the connection.

Glances at the World.

One of the leading questions in the late election for Parliament in England was what is known as the educational issue. Three years ago Parliament enacted a law which virtually converted all the primary schools in England into parochial schools by putting them under the direction of the clergy. In this direction the Roman Catholics, as well as the Church of England clergy, shared. Non-conformists were excluded, but were compelled to pay the education tax. The Non-conformists, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists and others declined to pay the tax. Thousands of them suffered their goods to be sold for payment, and hundreds of them went to prison, among them some of the foremost men in their respective denominations. The Liberal Party sympathized with the "passive resisters," and it was understood that if they should gain sufficient strength an effort would be made to repeal the obnoxious education act. There was a perfect landslide in favor of the Liberals, and they secured a majority of eighty over all other parties combined. The Roman Catholics foresaw what would be the result in case of a Liberal victory, and the Archbishop of Westminster, on behalf of the Bishops of the province, undertook to forestall such a calamity, but to no purpose. The people were aroused. The leading Roman Catholic paper said: "The worst peril that could befall Roman Catholics would be an overwhelming Liberal victory at the polls." The Northwestern Christian Advocate, commenting on the result of the election, says it "should be a lesson to the Roman Catholic hierarchy in America, which is seeking to secure support, from public taxes, of Roman Catholic parochial schools." But our Roman Catholic friends will never be satisfied, we suppose, until they test the matter and find themselves overwhelmed. The people of this country will never pay taxes to support church schools.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, which, off and on for nearly two years, has been investigating the case of Apostle Smoot, the Mormon Senator from Utah, is again at work. As nothing personal against the apostle is urged, the effort has been to prove that he is under the influence of the Church to such an extent, and so bound by his obligations as an apostle, being one of the twelve rulers, that he cannot be thoroughly loyal to the United States Government, and, therefore, incompetent to serve as a Senator. If human testimony is worth anything, and those who have testified have told the truth, sufficient evidence to prove the indictment has been adduced. The witnesses before the Committee last week gave testimony about as damaging as any that has been given. They testified that every Mormon going through "the endowment house," whatever that may be, swears to avenge the death of certain prophets of the Church. Mr. Smoot has gone through the endowment house, and, of course, has taken the oath of vengeance. But what of all this investigation? What will come of it? Nobody can tell. Investigating committees are slow under all circumstances. This one is no exception. The probability is that no report will be made until near the close of the session—too late to take action. And, after all, the report may be favorable to Mr. Smoot. In the meantime he is in his seat, in the full exercise of senatorial duty. The country need not be surprised if a full-fledged Mormon apostle is recognized as fully competent to make laws for the people of the United States, notwithstanding Mormonism is a menace to our institutions, and all loyal Mormons haters of our Government.

The Cival War closed forty years ago. Congress has just appropriated $139,000,000 for pensions for the coming year. There are, in round numbers, one million names on the pension list, including the "Spanish War veterans," who number considerably more men than General Shafter had with him at any time in Cuba. Men are drawing pensions who never saw a day's service in either war, except in camp—many of them very little there. But under the "disability clause," they swear that health was permanently injured in the service of the country. And we are told further that "millionaires are drawing pensions," and that "there is no way to prevent it." Certainly millionaires are entitled to consideration, as well as others, if they earn it, but with what grace they can take the pitiful sum of $12 or $20 per month we fail to see. But so it is—men never get too rich to decline what is offered. This pension list will grow just as long as there is the least chance of securing a dollar. There are a few pensioners of the War of 1812. Ninety years from to-day there will be pensioners of the War of 1865.

It is natural that the women of "New York's 400" and other women should take interest in the wedding outfit of Miss Alice Roosevelt, and not at all unnatural that men who publish newspapers should gratify their curiosity. All that is needed to satisfy the curious is given in the Inter-Ocean of last week. According to that paper, the trousseau is made up of 164 pieces, including the dresses, the principal one costing $1,000. The dresses, linen, etc., cost $10,300. The shoes, gloves, hosiery and parasols, the number of which is not given, cost $1,000. The total outfit cost $11,400. This seems extravagant, but it is moderate, compared to the price paid for wedding outfits by many women of New York and other cities. Nothing remains now but marriage and an enumeration of the wedding presents, the value of which has been estimated all the way from $500,000 to $1,000,000. Enough tableware of all kinds has been given to last the couple all their lives, should they live to extreme old age. Miss Roosevelt will be married to Congressman Longworth, of Ohio, on the 17th of this month.

The editor of the Inter-Ocean, a paper published in Chicago, and which, like the men spoken of by Solomon, "seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom," writes occasionally about the "American hen." He gives the hen full credit for all the good she does—not omitting her extra work during the recent warm spell in mid-winter, which he says "contributed millions of dollars to our national wealth." But it is evident that the editor of the Inter-Ocean does not know everything about the hen. For example, he says: "Heretofore the hen coop has been shut down about the latter part of November. It is almost the invariable custom of the hen then to retire from the busy scenes of her activity to the seclusion of the roost and give herself up almost wholly, if not completely, to meditation." Now, every farmer, or other person whose business it is to provide and pay for chicken feed knows that the hen between the laying periods is off the roost, and at the feeding lot about as early as any of the birds, and is on hand quite as often. The hen may retire from business for a while, but it costs the keeper just as much to feed her when she is doing nothing as it does during her busiest and best-paying season. The truth is she stays on the roost and meditates as little as possible.

The complete separation of Church and State having been effected in France, it became necessary, under the law, for the State to take an inventory of all church property. This the authorities proceeded to do. In many places they were met with forcible resistance on the part of the priests and people, and consitlerable rioting has been reported. The police were compelled to protect themselves. There were many wounds and bruises, but nobody killed. It was a little strange that priests and bishops should offer active resistance, since the Pope had cautioned and advised submission. But resistance will prove futile. The State succeeded in closing the religious orders and schools or forcing submission to registration, and it will succeed in its present undertaking. Not a few Romanists in this country believe that the French leaders are animated by hatred of the Church. This may be in some instances—not in all. The present President favors separation, but he is a Roman Catholic, and cannot hate the Church. They believe that separation is best for both Church and State, and are willing to try the experiment.

God's commands are enabling. He will never give us a work to do without showing exactly how and when to do it and giving us the precise strength and wisdom we need.—Southern Churchman.

Thousands of sons and daughters from this Christian land will rise up in judgment and say: "I never heard my Father pray." It will not be accepted as an excuse for a life of sin, but it will be a serious accusation for the father to face before God. And what excuse can the father give for his negligence.—Exchange.

A man full of himself who essays to meet the Goliath's of Gath is sure to seek safety in flight everytime the giants show themselves. Only one who trusts in the living God will venture an actual engagement. Such a man will win even though he may arm himself with nothing but a sling and a few smooth stones.

LETTER FROM GILDEROY.

There is less talk among the preachers and leading laymen about the approaching General Conference than I have known before in the past ten or twelve quadrenniums. I do not know whether this is a good sign or a bad one. It would seem to indicate that we have things in good working order, and do not need many changes; or we may be so taken up with temporal affairs that we have neither time nor care about the Church and her work. Anyway, there is not much talk about what the General Conference ought, or ought not, to do.

Of late I have been with a number of preachers from three or four different Annual Conferences, and was surprised to find a growing sentiment in favor of removing the time limit of four years, so as to enable our bishops to continue exceptional men at exceptional places for an indefinite term. It is held that it requires more than four years to build a strong character and to gain a commanding influence in most communities, particularly in our larger cities. By the time a preacher in our Church begins to get a good foothold and comes into position for large usefulness he has to move. It was generally agreed that such men were not numerous in our Church, and that we did not have many places calling for these men. The word calling is not used in its ecclesiastical sense.

Attention was directed to other preachers in other churches who had come into positions of large and commanding influence in communities where they had lived and served for a long term of years. Mention was also made of some preachers in our Church who were moved just as they were getting into position to do the most good. It was insisted that if the time limit were removed it would give our bishops the power to continue these exceptional men in these exceptional charges six, eight, ten or twenty years, as the needs might require. We have this regulation now in part, but purely for physical and local reasons. The moral and spiritual reasons were considered to be of far greater importance. It was generally agreed that this change was sure to come a few generations hence. These things set me to thinking. Methodism is the best method of doing the greatest good to the largest number of people.

Most of the preachers and laymen whom I heard speak on the subject thought that everything in regard to local preachers' character, license and all should be turned back to the quarterly conferences. There was, perhaps, one in ten who dissented from this view. The local ministry, once a great power in our Church for good, is now a rapidly diminishing quantity, and likely to become a thing of the past. It is thought that by committing this matter to the quarterly conference again there will be an increase in the number and efficiency of local preachers. If this be true, this ought to be done. In some sections there is great need for faithful, earnest, consecrated local preachers. There is room for them and plenty of work for them to do. In the early days local preachers did a vast amount of pioneer work.

The preachers and laymen everywhere seemed to think we ought to have three or four new bishops. Many names were mentioned and talked over, but it was generally agreed that our skirt of the woods was not thickly stocked with good sticks of bishop timber. The required number of men did not stand out prominently before the Church. There are comparatively few who stand head and shoulders above their fellows. Until my attention was called to this matter and I began to think over the subject, I did not know how few preachers there are who stand far to the front in our Methodism. If I had a vote I would find difficulty in making out my ticket. Some names were mentioned, but this is not the place to call names, and it is not according to the Methodist usage to electioneer for candidates, nor to discuss men by name in our papers.

If we are to seek Divine guidance in this important matter it were best not to fix the minds of men in advance. The Divine Spirit has a world of trouble in overcoming the preconceived opinions and prejudices of men—even in the case of good men. The people agreed on Saul for king, but God wanted David. Peter had to be cured of his prejudice before he was ready to preach the Gospel to Cornelius.

All the preachers and devout laymen were agreed that the approaching General Conference should be made a subject of unceasing prayer. We need the constant energy and power of the Holy Ghost in all the work of the Church, and in no department more than in our Quadrennial Conference.

A blunder that cannot be mended for four years is a very serious matter to a great Church like ours. Yours, GILDEROY.

THE MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL.

Some institutions parade under pretentious names, to the dignity and importance of which they very vainly strive to attain. A striking exception is here presented, for, under this modest appellation appears one of the most important educational enterprises ever projected in Methodism. We have long had our academies, our colleges, and have for some time had our university—or, at least, one we thought was ours—but there has been a distant and urgent need for a provision for the improvement of that large class of our preachers, who, for various reasons, are unable to take advantage of their excellent facilities.

The training school meets this want, for it takes the preacher ground between the upper and nether millstones of pulpit and pastoral study, and provides in a brief course definitely adapted to his needs a chance for him to enlarge and improve his capacities for Christian service. To this it adds the immeasurable benefit to be derived from contact with the leaders of thought and achievement in our own and other denominations, altogether a great opportunity for enrichment.

To be sure, the school has other phases, offering courses designed for prospective missionaries, both home and foreign, and for Christian workers generally, but, in the humble judgment of the writer, herein lies its greatest benefit, namely, in its incalculably helpful influence upon those busy preachers who find there information, inspiration and guidance. Would that more of our pastors, particularly the brethren whose surroundings are little calculated to elevate and stimulate them, would spend a month in the school this spring, returning to their charges with freshened zeal, enlarged capacities and elevated ideals. Board in the admirably conducted home is inexpensive, tuition is nominal and the returns are large.

LETTER FROM REV. J. W. HONNOLL.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As a rule, I have never enjoyed changing the form of our Church papers. I miss their familiar faces. But I am much pleased with the change of our Conference organ. It is bright and newsy. You are certainly giving us a good paper. I enjoy the notes from the brethren. I was much amused by one written by "A Circuit Rider" on the use of tobacco. It reminded me of Bishop Haygood's answer to the question, "Do you use tobacco?" "Yes," he said, "but I have more sense than to try to defend it."

But, you know, great men differ. Circuit Rider is evidently under qualms of conscience, and begs to be let up. There is hope for him yet, for he is not past feeling. I suppose we ought to give him some rest; he is perhaps a poor marksman—the red spit flies on the grate, the odor fills the house, the wind blows it bad, on to the bosom of his shirt and into his eyes. He certainly suffers enough. "The way of the transgressor is hard."

Brother Meek, our presiding elder, came to hold our quarterly meeting, but it rained, and it snowed, and we postponed. It was a feast to have him with us for a day and night. His head and heart are all in the work; the work will prosper in his hands.

I am rereading Munsey's Sermons, which I read twenty-five years ago. You need not fear that this young man will try to memorize and preach one of them. It would be like a 3-year-old boy trying to chop with his father's ax. I have done a great many foolish things in my life, but this is one I never did.

I inclose Bob Taylor's "Eulogy on Ingersoll," which I cut out of some paper years ago. It might do some of our young preachers good to read it, if you have room for it. If not, there is no harm done, except to tax your time and patience.

THE EULOGY.

"I sat in a great theatre at the National Capital. It was thronged with youth and beauty, old age and wisdom. I saw a man, the image of his God, stand upon the stage, and I heard him speak. His gestures were perfection of grace, his voice was music, and his language was more beautiful than any I had ever heard from mortal lips. He painted picture after picture of the pleasures and joys and sympathies of home. He enthroned love and preached the Gospel of humanity like an angel. Then I saw him dip his brush in the ink of moral blackness and blot out the beautiful pictures he had painted. I saw him stab love dead at his feet. I saw him blot out the stars and sun, and leave humanity and the universe in eternal darkness and eternal death. I saw him, like the serpent of old, warm himself into the paradise of human hearts, and, by his seductive eloquence and subtle devices and sophistry, inject his fatal venom, under whose blight its powers faded, its music was hushed, its sunshine was darkened, and its soul was left a desert waste, with only the newly-made graves of faith and hope.

"I saw him, like a lawless, erratic meteor, without an orbit, sweep across the intellectual sky, brilliant only in its self-consuming fire, generated by friction with the indestructible and eternal truths of God.

"That man was the archangel of modern infidelity, and I said: 'How true is Holy Writ, which declared: "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God!"'"

Hill House, Miss.

ISN'T THERE SOMETHING IN THIS?

Dear Dr. Boswell—I had the pleasure yesterday of attending a meeting of the Teachers' Association of Copiah County. Among the discussions sprung by the question box was this: "What shall we do with or for the cigarette-smoking boy?"

The question evoked considerable discussion. On all sides there could be detected the most earnest interest in the welfare of the boy and a desire to help him. That this is one of the hardest questions to deal with in the teachers' work it was soon easy to see. Their interest and their exceeding anxiety are enhanced by their every day contact with their schoolboys. Their interest in this question set me to thinking: Are we, as a Church, and especially as preachers, doing all we can to help these teachers solve this problem?

Their solution of the problem was directed along the lines of strict prohibition of this practice, and especially of a solution by a good example to the boys. It was entirely agreed that no teacher could afford to use tobacco in any form!

Brethren, without criticising anybody in the world, I ask: Can we afford to be less earnest than these teachers? They are looking at the matter from the standpoint of the mind. You and I are supposed to be looking from the standpoint of their immortal souls. Isn't the question a yet more serious one from our point of view? Can we afford to take a lower stand?

Cordially, H. B. WATKINS.

EDUCATION DAY.

Every member of the North Mississippi Conference, doubtless, remembers that the Board of Education selected the first Sunday in March as Education Day, and we respectfully suggest that the day be fittingly observed, as far as practicable. There is no use to send out an elaborate programme for the service to be held that day, but the committee will issue at an early date such a programme as may be of use to some in the proper observance of the day. The very best programmes poorly executed are of little value. There is vastly more in the man who executes than in the programme. The main issue before us, so far as immediate results are concerned, is the enlargement of the endowment for Millsaps College, but the remote purpose is to arouse a more vital interest in education itself. That a greater impression needs to be placed on Christian education, and education by the Church, no one will for a moment deny. The needs of our own college for boys, the claim it has on our patronage and the inducements it holds out, are questions of vital importance to all our churches. Don't let the day be lost to us in dealing with glittering generalities and outworn platitudes, but let the service have special reference to the issue before us.

Where there are several appointments in a charge, a whole round might be devoted to this subject with good profit; or let there be one or two central services for the whole circuit.

Praying that the day may be used of God for the encouragement of all our plans for the spread of His kingdom, we are respectfully,

E. S. LEWIS,
W. H. SMITH, Committee.

"GOD HELPS—GOD ALWAYS HELPS."

Was it a direct answer to prayer; if not, why not? I had been preaching at Redbone, one of my Churches, twelve months to very small congregations, except on special occasions, when we usually had good crowds. My congregations usually ran from twelve to twenty-five—seldom more than twenty-five. The fourth Sunday in December I had four people only to preach to. I pulled through the year 1905 the best I could, laboring many times under very discouraging circumstances. I visited my people, broke bread with them, prayed with them and for them—begged them to come to church. I even wrote letters to many of them urging them to take more interest in the affairs of the Church as well as their own eternal interest, but all to no purpose. I was much discouraged. I had been used to better congregations, better support every way. I returned to my work, Vicksburg Circuit, after Conference with a heavy heart. The Mission Board cut down the appropriation one-half. The outlook was very discouraging.

I had no home. I was sick—had grip, or rather grip had me. An old, man, sick, without a home, is in a sorry fix. I felt somewhat, I imagine, like Elijah did as he sat under a juniper tree, and "requested for himself that he might die." I visited the home of one of my best earthly friends, Rev. W. W. Hurst—spent a day and two nights with him. Sunday morning came; I was to preach at Redbone that day. While engaged in our morning worship it occured to me we trust too much to our own efforts, not enough to the power of God to awaken an interest in the hearts and homes of our people. So I prayed for the Holy Spirit to visit the homes of the people of the land, impress them with the great importance of going to church and listening to preaching.

I tried to exercise faith—did have faith in God's power to awaken and save the people when all human efforts failed. At eleven o'clock we were at church, with our usual crowd, the "faithful few." The choir sang, "A blessing in prayer." My heart was touched—others were moved. I made a short talk on prayer before announcing our opening song. It was evident the spirit of prayer was present. I had the choir sing the same song again, then called the congregation to prayer. Brother Hurst led. He prayed just like he had a firm hold on God. The congregation by this time had increased to forty or fifty. People kept coming in buggies, wagons, on horseback and on foot until we had by far the largest crowd that had been at Redbone on an ordinary occasion for many years. People came that had not been to church for many years. One old lady, who lived only a few miles away, told me she had not been there in forty years, or since 1865. My, my; how good I feflt! How the good Lord did help me to preach. It was good to be there. I felt better afterwards. I was greatly encouraged.

Now, say, Brother Boswell, was not that a direct answer to prayer? If not, why not?

LINCOLN'S ADVICE TO LAWYERS.

As time passes the people desire to know of Lincoln, the war President of the United States. His rugged honesty and gentleness of heart appeal to all alike. His advice to lawyers is characteristic of the man:

"Discourage litigation, was his advice to lawyers. Persuade your neighbors to compromise whenever you can. Point out to them how the nominal winner is often the real loser—in fees, expenses and waste of time. As a peace-maker, the lawyer has a superior opportunity of becoming a good man. There will always be enough business. Never stir up a litigation. A worse man can scarcely be found than one who does this. Who can be more nearly a fiend than he who habitually overhauls the register of deeds in search of defects in titles, whereon to stir up strife and put money in his pocket? A moral tone ought to be infused into the profession which should drive such men out of it.

"It has been truly said that those words should be posted in every law office in the land, and it will be seen, when Lincoln's record is fully examined, that it was not a mere theorist who wrote them, but an active practitioner of wide experience who lived up to his own teaching."

The above, and much more interesting matter concerning Mr. Lincoln, will be found in the February Century by Frederick Trevor Hill. The Century has something good every month for its large number of readers. Buy a copy.

THE NEXT GREAT REVIVAL.

The Prophets tell us we are on the eve of the greatest religious awakening the world has ever known. In many places the Church has been blessed with times of refreshing, and multitudes have professed faith in the risen Lord. The Torrey-Alexander meetings in Australia and Great Britain have been phenomenal in many ways. As is always the case, the life of the church has been greatly quickened. Singing has been a mighty factor in saving sinners. One hundred thousand conversions are reported as the result of these faithful efforts. In Wales a remarkable work of grace could be seen in progress for many months. Evan Roberts has led the movement of prayer and song and testimony until a tidal wave has swept over the country and perhaps 40,000 persons have been saved. In New Jersey and Kansas, under the direction of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and other competent leaders there have been revivals of wonderful power, such as the people have not witnessed for many years. It seems as though the old time power had gotten back into the pulpit, and the gospel fire-flakes are falling as when Wesley and Whitefield, in the Eighteenth century, swayed the surging masses, and kindled a fire which lasted one hundred years.

But what is to be the nature, the true inwardness of this mighty movement? In some quarters we are told that it must touch and change sociological conditions; that we must know "how the other half lives," and must look to the better housing and feeding and clothing of the poor and unfortunate. Hence these men preach the Gospel of soap and sunshine and sanitation. They deplore the unequal distribution of wealth, the toleration of trusts and all other corporations, and they hold that the salvation of the people depends on municipal ownership of railroads and all other enterprises which are patronized by the public. Another class are looking for an ethical revival. They regard Jesus Christ as a marvelous teacher, and a beautiful example, "the one perfect man;" they call for a re-statement of the Ten Commandments, and their re-enforcement in our daily life. The Golden Rule should be reduced to practice, in the strife of the streets as in the Holy Silence of the sanctuary, we should not forget the brotherhood of men. Dying men bequeath scholarships to great Universities, and living men expend large sums of money to build and equip public libraries. But most of the attempts to better the social and ethical conditions of the world are as futile as the effort to erect a huge building without a suitable foundation. Underlying all our ills and ailments, personal, social and national, is the awful fact of sin; and it is supreme folly to waste our precious time doctoring symptoms, while the real seat of our trouble remains untouched. "Evangelism," says President Mackenzie of Hartford, "is the only true regenerator of the human heart, the only real cleanser of the life of a Nation." So the true prophets of our times look for a revival which will deal first with the individual, reaching down into the hidden depths of the heart, regenerating the fallen nature, purifying the innermost fountains of human life, so the man thus renewed, by the Holy Ghost, may be a potent factor in all social and ethical reforms.

All the great revivals which have been of lasting benefit to the world, have been the outcome of earnest, continuous, persistent prayer. There could have been no wonderful work of grace at Pentacost but for the fact that the Disciples all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication. When Dr. Torrey reached Australia he found that many prayer-circles had been formed, and united petitions had gone up from thousands of faithful hearts. Thus devout worshipers were painfully conscious of the ruin and devastations of sin, and the burden had lain on their hearts till Heaven was moved with compassion and the Lord gave beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning and the garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness. "I preach the whole Bible" says this man of God. "I accept everything, I except nothing. I preach the power of the blood of Jesus Christ to save. I preach the personality of the Holy Spirit. I preach the power of prayer." Such gospel themes proclaimed all over Christendom, emphasizing the deadly nature and the awful consequences of sin, stressing the necessity of repentence toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, while the church remains in the attitude of expectant prayer, will bring about the happy conditions which the Prophets foretell.

THEO. COPELAND.

What the particular thoughts and temptations are that disquiet you, I know not; but, whatsoever they are, look above them, and labor to fix your eye on that infinite goodness, which never faileth them that, by faith, do absolutely rely upon it; and patiently wait upon Him, who hath pronounced them all, without exception, blessed that do so.—Robert Leighton.

NAMING THE BABY.

Did you ever try to think of a name for a tiny little baby? It was hard work, because no name seemed half as nice as baby, and you were so afraid it would not suit when the baby grew to be big.

Many people of foreign countries have a regular way to select the baby's name, and perhaps it saves some worry.

A Hindu baby is named when twelve days old, and usually by the mother. Sometimes the father wishes for another name than that selected by the mother. In that case two lamps are placed over the two names, and the name over which the lamp burns the brightest is the one given to the child.

In the Egyptian family the parents choose a name for their baby by lighting three wax candles; to each of these they give a name, one of the three always belonging to some deified personage. The candle that burns the longest bestows the name upon the baby.

The children of the Ainus, a people living in northern Japan, do not receive their names until they are five years old. It is the father who then chooses the name by which the child is afterwards to be called.

The Chinese give their boy babies a name in addition to their surnames, and they must call themselves by these names until they are twenty years old. At that age the father gives his son a new name.

The Chinese care so little for their girl babies that they do not give them a baby name, but just call them Number One, Number Two, Number Three, Number Four and so on, according to their birth.

In Russia, when a baby is baptized, the priest shaves the top of the babies' heads, in the form of a cross. The godfather gathers the soft, downy hair together and mixes it with drippings from a candle into a tiny ball. This is dropped in the baptismal font, and if it sinks the parents believe the baby will die within a year; if it floats, everyone is happy.—Union Gospel News.

A BARROOM SERMON.

Twenty years ago Los Cerrillos, New Mexico, was a place of perhaps five hundred inhabitants, most of whom were ignorant of even the most fundamental facts of religion and the civilization of the Far East. Thither to his first charge went a young minister—young, but big and brawny, says the Kansas City Times. He proved to be the right sort of a man to win the confidence and respect of the rough community, and his church prospered.

A year later he was removed to Watrous, one hundred miles away, and visited Los Cerrillos only once a month to preach. One rough night, when a melting snow was coming down in heavy masses, he waited at the station for a train to Watrous. The train was very late. There was no operator at the station, and no place to go for warmth but the saloons. Only the wind and the shelterless coyotes knew where the train was. The minister walked up and down the street, shivering. Once as he passed a saloon the proprietor—"Bill"—saw him.

"Come in and get warm, parson!" he called.

"I can't, Bill; you know why," replied the minister.

"Yes, I know; but they sha'n't bother you. You come right in and I'll fix them."

He grasped the minister by the arm and led him into a big room, where thirty or forty cowboys and miners were drinking. Bill rapped loudly on the bar.

"Fellers," he said, "the parson's laid out by his train what ain't came, an' he's no place to go but this here gin place an' poker parlor. He'll sit with us and swap yarns—the right sort, you understand—but thar'll be no drink sold over this bar and no cards played till his train comes along. He's our guest. The parson, gentlemen!"

There was not a protest from a man. The young minister was acquainted with most of them, and soon made friends with the others. They talked of lodes, pay-dirt, methods of drilling, best ways to break broncos, liniments for healing gunshot wounds, the qualities of various makes of firearms, the comparative veracity of the Mexican and the Indian. Finally one of the "cow-punchers" asked the guest "to make a little talk on the subject of his profession."

Gladly he mounted one of the card-tables, and in their own picturesque language, as he had learned it from them, told them of the Martyr of Calvary and the compassionate Father. As he spoke they threw away their cigars and removed their hats. Not a sound escaped them. They were on their honor, and would have handled roughly any man who showed the parson a discourtesy.

The minister afterward confessed that he never spent a more profitable hour himself, or a more enjoyable one, or one in which profit and enjoyment seemed to be more completely mutual. When the whistle of his train was heard the congregation was lustily singing a hymn.—Youth's Companion.

A HERO.

"Oh, how cold!" escaped my lips as I stumbled through the door of a miserable attic tenement.

The mother was out, but her twelve-year-old boy was mounted guard over the other children, as they played about the poorly furnished room. I shivered as the wind whistled through the broken window-panes, causing me to pull my overcoat over my ears. The boy was in his shirt-sleeves, but I refrained from asking questions as to the whereabouts of his coat, in case its absence might have been the means of providing a crust of bread for the fatherless family.

"Are you not cold, my boy?" I asked. "No," said he, "not very." Yet I noticed how his pretty pearly teeth chattered. I waited awhile and spoke to him; then I took a look into the cradle, where, sleeping quietly and comfortably, the baby lay, covered with the boy's coat. Talk about the bravery of men who face cannon; in the heat of passion they will do anything; but here was a hero, on a bitter day, in his shirt-sleeves because he wanted to shield his little brother from the biting effect of a cold February wind.

Men say the age of heroism is past. It is false! So long as the nation raises boys like this one, she has within herself the germs of a boyhood that will keep her forever in the very forefront of the world's history.—The Watchman.

HOW GEORGE POELL SAVED A CHILD'S LIFE.

A special to the daily press from Grand Island, Neb., says:

George Poell, the fireman on the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad, who recently received a letter from President Roosevelt, notifying him that he had been awarded a gold medal for saving the life of a child, thereby nearly losing his own, has told in his own words the story of his deed of heroism. Many of the details of his heroic act are now told for the first time.

Mr. Poell lives with his wife and her mother in a modest li[illegible] purchased wholly from the proceeds of the sale of his photograph and of the child he rescued. The photographs were sold by the rescued child's father.

The people of the county also showed their admiration for Mr. Poell by electing him county clerk, an office which pays $1,500 a year. Mr. Poell was unknown in the (Hall) county, and his sole campaign issue was his rescue of the child.

The child, whose life was saved by Mr. Poell in so daring a manner was Paul Ussary, the 2½-year-old son of John Ussary, the station agent at Poell, Neb. On June 26 last the child was seen on the track ahead of a train, which was running at a rate of thirty miles an hour. The train could not be stopped in time, and Mr. Poell climbed out of his cab, crawled to the locomotive pilot, snatched the child from certain death, and threw it to one side of the track. In doing so he slipped and fell. He was caught either under the pilot or the wheel of the engine truck, and was dragged 300 feet, bumping over the ends of the ties. His right foot was torn off at the ankle, both arms were broken, and his flesh frightfully torn and bruised.

Talking recently of his thrilling experience, Mr. Poell called attention to the fact that in every account, so far as published, it had been stated that he thought of his little brother, at home, at the time.

"I don't know where the newspapers got that," said Mr. Powell. "Though I have a little brother at the old home in Hanover, I just didn't happen to think of him.

"In fact, there wasn't much time to think. We were rounding a curve at a pretty good rate and on a down-grade with a heavy train. Suddenly the engineer put on the emergency brake. I looked out ahead. There was a child on the track.

"The little fellow seemed to have heard us, and in his childish way appeared to turn partly around and then toddle off straight ahead of the engine, as if to run away from us and beat us.

"The engineer could not leave his post. I saw at once that we could not stop the train in time. I can still see those little blonde curls bobbing up and down. Something told me I must run out, get on the pilot, and sweep him off the track, and—well, that was the only thing there was to do. In some way I slipped, got caught just below the cylinder, was dragged quite a distance, and then dropped."

Mrs. Poell is as proud of her husband as she well may be. She shows the shoe which Mr. Poell had on the missing foot at the time, and explained, the light of admiration beaming in her eyes:

"Mrs. Ussary has the handkerchief and cap George wore at the time, but she refused to give them up, saying she would not part with them for the world." Mr. and Mrs. Ussary were in Grand Island to visit the Poell family as soon as Mr. Poell had sufficiently recovered, and, as may be imagined, the strongest ties of friendship have been formed between the families. Mr. Ussary, a man of humble means, has done all that he could to aid the family of his benefactor.

The medal is given to Mr. Poell by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is the first to be awarded under the recent act of Congress authorizing the giving of medals for the saving of life on railroad trains or tracks.—The Presbyterian.

The Christian Life.

THE ESTABLISHED HEART.

On different occasions the psalmist exclaims, "My heart is fixed, O God; my heart is fixed." This is a state to be devoutly coveted by every child of God. In this world of uncertainty, and in this age of doubt, it is refreshing to have some things forever settled. A few important phases concerning the spiritual life we will mention:

The Christian's heart should be fixed as to its true condition. Multitudes of God's people never have any joy of assurance of salvation. This is unnecessary. God has made provision for the clearest witness in this matter. It cannot be gained by decision and will power, nor by the word of man, nor by the action of the Church, nor by obedience to any form or ordinance; but it comes from above. "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." This is simple, and this is real. The same is true of God's people regarding entire consecration. But few have a clear-cut experience in this matter, and can say with confidence, "We know we are fully yeilded to God." This is the normal Christian state. Without this knowledge the world, the flesh, and the devil make the soul an easy prey. Every child of God should make this a matter of careful thought and earnest prayer until it is settled once for all, and everything is laid upon the altar. This brings peace within, and power in testimony and prayer.

Again, we should be fixed in our desires, aspirations, and ambitions. They should all be Godward. We should always be able to say, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after." "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? And there is none upon earth that I desire beside Thee." To desire nothing but the glory of God and the fullest blessing He has for us, this is the highest Christian life.

We should also be fixed in our heart regarding our work. We should get in the place God has designed for us, and then feel that that work, no matter how humble, is all for God. This purifies and ennobles and sublimates every calling, and brings contentment to the believer, usefulness to his fellow men, and glory to God. This will also make us work according to God's plan. Much of so-called Christian work is after a human pattern. Church amusements, bazaars, and wordly methods generally illustrate the kind of building of which Paul speaks when he says, "If any man's work shall be burned he shall suffer loss, yet he himself shall be saved so as by fire."

And let us notice, the psalmist is careful to say, "My heart is fixed," not "My head." A great many are established in the head, but not in the heart. Many are correct and orthodox and faultless intellectually, but with no heart knowledge. This does not count with God, and it is at a great discount with men. Our fellow men know whether our hearts keep pace with our heads. A preacher is not generally used beyond his own experience.

When the child of God can take this stand and honestly say, "My heart is fixed, O God," he is not afraid of evil tidings; he is not troubled by the past in retrospect, nor the future in anticipation. If loved ones die, God lives; if fortunes fail, the treasures in heaven abide; if friends prove faithless, the Friend who sticketh closer than a brother abideth faithful; if enemies persecute, God comforts; if the earthly house decays, the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," stands sure. No change in circumstances can change the one whose heart is fixed on God.—Christian Intelligencer.

ANOTHER START.

We have fairly entered on the season of inclement weather. Tempest and cold varied by an occasional thaw are usually the peculiar features of January, although this year has been exceptionally gracious. The only signs of spring visible now are in the shop windows, where already the character of the goods displayed has undergone a transformation; the merchants are taking stock. In their windows and on their counters they are already presenting summer fabrics, and the sombre and heavy materials suitable for winter are somewhat in the background. Everywhere else, stormy as it may be, we are tending towards spring. For our children in school and our young people in college the period is one of strenuous exertion and intense application. The mid-year examinations are just ahead of them, and on those tests may depend the standing in scholarship and something of the future career of the student. In the church everything pulses with activity. We are drawn closer than at other seasons and in prayer meetings, Sunday-Schools, Christian Endeavor and Missionary Circles we ought to seek the blessing that comes when people pray in union and work together with one accord.

A pertinent question for us as individuals is what start are we making anew in the spiritual life? Are we devoting a portion of our day to the study of the Bible? Are we keeping in touch with the friends of Christ, and with Christ Himself? Are we availing ourselves of the impetus given to Christian life and work by the meetings that belong to the Week of Prayer?

Unless from time to time we make a new start in directions that are profitable we shall fall into ruts. There is too much temptation in our lives to yield without protest to the bondage of routine. We are the better for a fresh increase of enthusiasm, for an occasional new departure.

There is a beautiful chapter in Revelation in which promises are made to him that overcometh. They are repeated in several forms, in the message sent to the seven churches. Which of us has not much to overcome in the line of apathy, indifference and lethargy? We need to read the message of the Laodiceans and take it into our own hearts as a word of God sent to us. We need to read each of these heavenly messages, and then in our new start ask that we may overcome and vanquish whatever sin is our handicap.

Let us not grow too easily disheartened. We forget at times that many of our temptations drift to us from the outside, and that we are not responsible for their existence, but only for the manner in which we strive against them. There are invisible powers of evil that war against the soul, just as there are invisible powers of good that defend it. The baneful angels of evil swoop down upon us in moments of depression, and when things go wrong they make it harder for us, but in the strength of God we can overcome. There are crises in every life when the word of old is made good in human experience, "The Lord shall fight for you, and you shall hold your peace."

One and all, shall we not, boldly and bravely, God helping us, make a new start?—Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster.

THE SERMON STEVE PREACHED.

One Monday, Steve, who had been at church the day before, thought he would have a church of his own. He got his four sisters to be the congregation. He stood on a stool and spoke very loud. This is part of the sermon that he preached:

"This is to be a 'mind-mother' sermon. There are two ways in which you ought to mind everything she says:

"Mind her the very first time she speaks. When mother says, 'Mary, please bring me some coal or water, or 'run to the store,' don't answer, 'In just a minute, mother.' Little folks' minutes are a great deal longer than the one the clock ticks off. When you say 'yes' with your lips, say 'yes' with your hands and feet. Don't say 'yes' and act 'no.' Saying, 'Yes, in a minute,' is not obeying, but doing 'yes' is.

"Mind cheerfully. Don't scowl when you have to drop a book, or whine because you can't go and play. You wouldn't own a dog that minded you with his ears laid back, growling and snapping. A girl ought to mind a great deal better than a dog."

That was Steve's sermon. Don't you think it was a good one?—Olive Plants.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1906.

One of our exchanges has picked up a chunk word, "your wife's husband," and is using it for all its worth. It is applied to moral delinquents. "Is your wife's husband guilty," or words to that effect, etc.

If it is true that "the only excuse for the existence of any sect is in its expression of important truth," it ought to be consoling to the man who has an important truth to express that he has the indorsement and protection of the sound and safe men of his sect in all honest efforts to express and defend that truth.

The preachers who have made report of their work since Conference declare with one consent that the prospects are encouraging. Those who see no prospect, and have no hope, say nothing. But it is possible for these discouraged ones to conquer their difficulties, and sound a jubilant note in the end. In common with their more fortunate brethren, they are planning for a revival, and working to that end. It is the burden of their prayers. May their desires be realized.

God forbid that we should ever forget or outlive the impressions made by family prayer in childhood. The Scripture lesson, the morning and evening song, and the devout prayer, all conspired to impress both mind and heart. There was reverence and dignity in the service. Father was never hurried, nor was he ever tedious. He was not even tiresome. The stretch of years from now till then is long, but the melody of his voice is still ringing, and is as fresh in memory as the dawn of to-day.

We are not prepared to indorse without qualification the suggestion of Rev. J. L. Cunninggim in The Correspondent, to substitute a course of lectures for the afternoon preaching at our Annual Conference sessions. We would know who is to do the lecturing before giving the lecturer the place of the preacher. We would not for a moment substitute an indifferent preacher with a Gospel message for the most brilliant lecturer if he is to come for the purpose of spouting higher criticism in the presence of young and untrained preachers. No lecturer, who raises doubts in the mind as to any part of God's Word, is as useful as a preacher, even a young preacher "put up" at random, who believes the Bible and preaches it. Such a lecturer may "awaken a larger intellectual life," but how he is to inspire to a larger "spiritual life," we fail to see. Intellectual enlargement is not invariably accompanied by an enlargement of spiritual life.

THE JUG TRADE IN LIQUOR.

The decision of Judge Niles in the injunction suit brought by certain whisky firms to restrain Mississippi officers from interfering with their C. O. D. business, as carried on through express companies, was rendered on February 7. It sustains the injunction so far as it applies to orders made in good faith, or believed to be so made. The decision on this particular point is as follows:

"So long as whisky is recognized as an article of commerce and is in the hands of the express company to be delivered by them on orders made in good faith, and believed by the shipper to be such orders, the liquors are not subject to seizure by the State officers under the commerce clause of the Constitution."

This decision is as was expected, even by the prohibitionists, who were interested.

On another point, which the prohibitionists hoped to win, Judge Niles' decision was disappointing. Those who were fighting the C. O. D. business endeavored to prove that the American Express Company did not confine itself to the delivery of orders made in good faith, but that shippers sometimes consigned liquor to express agents, to be delivered to anyone who desired to purchase, and, if we mistake not, sometimes consigned their goods to fictitious names. The Judge pronounced the proof on this point insufficient, and hence could not rule against it. The natural inference is that this line of business is not protected by the inter-state commerce law.

The headlines, in big letters, in the daily papers tell us that Judge Niles' decision "means a black eye to prohibition." It certainly is, so far as legitimate trade in the C. O. D. line is concerned. But the case is not hopeless. A bill now before Congress, having strong champions in both houses, seeks to give relief to prohibition States. If it is enacted into law, the jug trade, as carried on between the States, by express companies will cease.

In the meantime let the lovers of law and order be on the lookout. If the express companies have been delivering liquor to their local agents on fictitious orders, they will continue to do so, and the proof, soon or late, can be secured. Under Judge Niles' decision, the jug trade will doubtless be greatly stimulated, and the shippers and agents be less careful.

METHODISM IN JAPAN.

We published several weeks ago the report of the Joint Commission on the Union of Methodism in Japan. The Commission reached no conclusion, and adjourned subject to call. The matter has been under consideration several years. The missionaries, according to our understanding, reached a conclusion among themselves, and their action, through Bishop A. W. Wilson, was reported to our General Conference in 1902. We knew then that their action was not final, but supposed there would be no difficulty or hitch of any kind in carrying out the plan to which the missionaries had agreed. Hence, we were somewhat surprised that the Commissioners from the different churches at home had failed to consummate the union.

The reason for failing to agree is not stated in the report, but we learn from other sources that the Commissioners could not get together on episcopacy. The non-episcopal representatives demanded the elimination of episcopacy altogether, which, "of course," says the Midland Methodist, "was not to be thought of."

In the conferences held by the various bodies in Japan the episcopal representatives surrendered to the non-episcopal, and agreed upon something, we hardly know what—only that the patchwork would not have resembled original American Methodism. We are glad that our representatives over here did not fall down before the demands of the handful of Methodists who do not like our system of general superintendency.

The representatives of five millions of Episcopal Methodists cannot afford to surrender to about one-sixth of their number, who are opposed to bishops.

THE WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

We have received the first issue of the Arkansas Methodist under its new name, Western Christian Advocate. We rejoice in the great success achieved by this paper, and, with its enlarged field, becoming, as it does, the official organ of the Indian Mission Conference, as well as the three Arkansas Conferences, we confidently expect enlarged usefulness. As the originator and first editor and publisher of the Arkansas Methodist, we regret the change of name. But old things must give way in the march of progress. Western Christian Advocate is not the title we should have selected, for the reason that another great Methodist paper has borne that name for many years. But we would not have it changed to Southwestern Christian Advocate, as suggested by Dr. J. E. Godbey. That name belongs to the organ of the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South. It is edited by a colored man, Rev. Robert E. Jones, and published in New Orleans by Eaton & Mains.

Success to our Arkansas and Oklahoma brethren!

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

For some time past we have been delayed in getting out the Advocate by correspondents who send in papers as late as Tuesday, urging their importance and immediate insertion. We are compelled to fall back on our old rule, not to admit matter that reaches us as late as Tuesday. By that time the printer has in hand all that he can use.

A WORD TO THE WISE AND GOOD.

Brethren and sisters who send us communications written with a lead pencil, and get miffed and discontinue their subscription to the Advocate because we fail to print, should remember that our rule requires matter to be written with ink. This is the rule of all printing offices. One who writes a communication with pencil and then addresses the envelope with ink shows that he is afraid to trust the pencil writing. Partly for the same reason we decline pencil-written communications. We have several on hand—one a tribute from a Sunday school.

Kid-gloved fops, drunk on a big dose of æsthetics, would turn worship into matins and vespers, and Gospel preaching into lecturing on morals. The Church must be kept up-to-date, you know.

PERSONAL.

Rev. Robert Randle meets with encouragement, and is looking for a successful year on the Downsville Circuit.

Rev. S. A. Brown is doing good work in his new field, Bylialia Circuit. He has made improvements on the parsonage, received seven members by letter and three on profession of faith, and secured several subscribers to the Advocate.

Rev. R. H. Wynn of Ruston has brought us under obligation for a fine list of subscribers, with the cash. A list of twenty-six new subscriptions and seven renewals is worthy of notice. And Brother Wynn tells us that he will send more. We are very grateful.

We had the great pleasure on Sunday last of worshiping with the Rayne Memorial congregation. There was a large attendance, and the pastor, Rev. Theo. Copeland, preached an instructive and forcible sermon. He had the closest attention of his hearers and the discourse produced a fine effect. Brother Copeland has made a fine start.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, of St. Francisville, in renewing the subscription of a good brother who has been taking the Advocate many years, quotes him as saying: "The paper reads better when I know the subscription is paid." Maybe, there is something in that. Brother Kleinschmidt also says "the work at St. Francisville has an encouraging look."

Rev. R. T. Nolen, in a business note, adds this: "I am happy in my field of labor. It is so pleasant and encouraging to a preacher to be kindly received, and to secure the co-operation of his people." Brother Nolen serves Trenton Circuit, Mississippi Conference, and, in addition to the usual work of a preacher, he has sent us fifty-seven subscribers, including four or five renewals. He is a little ahead.

Rev. B. P. Lolliloye, of New Albany Circuit, has been doing faithful work for the Advocate, having sent us more than twenty subscribers. He has our hearty thanks. He and Brother O. L. Savage have well supplied the New Albany country. And counting in Tupelo, a few miles east of New Albany, served by Rev. T. W. Lewis, who has sent in fifty-one subscriptions, including renewals, the Advocate has a larger patronage than in any section of North Mississippi. We make our politest bow to these good brethren.

Dr. John P. McFerrin, pastor of Tulip Street Church, Nashville, sends us the following brotherly notice: "The Rev. Theo. Copeland, whom I see has been stationed at Rayne Memorial, in New Orleans, will prove a valuable addition to your city and Conference. For the past three years he served our St. Luke Church, of Columbus, Ga., and did, while there, a most wonderful work. It is said that he knew by name every inhabitant of that goodly city. This, I am persuaded, is not much of an exaggeration, for I have never known a better pastor. His pulpit ministrations also were signally successful. He preached to full houses to the end of his pastorate. I look for large results from his pastorate in New Orleans. Help and encourage him."

CHURCH EXTENSION.

North Mississippi Conference.

If any church within our bounds expects to apply to the Board of Church Extension, which meets the last of April, for a donation or loan, its pastor will please write to me at once. The Executive Committee of our Conference Board must pass on the application before it goes to the General Board at Louisville.

BISHOP KEENER AND REV. R. H. GREEN.

At a meeting of the Board of District Stewards, at Alexandria, Jan. 25, 1906, the undersigned were constituted a committee to prepare suitable expressions of the feelings of the Methodists of Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, touching the deaths of Bishop Keener and our co-laborer, R. H. Green.

In performing the duty assigned us, we do not feel called upon to dwell on the long life and usefulness of Bishop Keener. His praise is in all the churches, and his work abides as the most eloquent testimonial of his greatness. The impress of his forming and developing skill is on everything Methodist in Louisiana.

His method of thought and his independence of judgment were strong points in his life-work—not merely in the planting and training of Methodism in a great Catholic center, but in his literary work and theological conclusions as well.

In searching for truth or reaching conclusions as to best methods as they appeared to him, he followed no man. He had a love for untrodden paths, though he entertained great respect for the good men and wise of other days. His originality and iron will sometimes subjected him to severe criticism. He held himself amenable to his own judgment and reason.

Bishop Keener's eighty-seven years were not idly spent, nor were his conclusions carelessly reached. He was not eloquent, but fluent, strong and wise in his utterances. His reasoning sometimes seemed to others speculation. Not so to him. Truth was his object, and all fragments were carefully brought forward to aid in its discovery. "A great man in Israel has fallen."

Brother Green's life was brief: "It is cut down, even as grass." A bud of promise blighted before its petals unfold! He lived long enough, and labored faithfully enough among us to raise our hopes to a very high point. In his brief career he showed the elements which bring strength, studiousness, prayerfulness and courage. He realized his calling from God, and personal comfort, easy position and healthful conditions were never in the way of his duties.

When yellow fever reached his people he sought them, and not some place of immunity. Like a true soldier, "he stood on the firing line till pursued by the missiles which others feared," living, like Lord Nelson, long enough to see the victory won. He was one of the last victims—perhaps the last to fall in Louisiana—of the fever of last summer.

There is still heroism of an apostolic character among the followers of "the Man of Galilee." A young man, full of promise, having a young family to care for, who can lay his life on the altar of duty, is a greater hero than Laurentius proved to be, though he died at the stake. Safety lay in one direction—duty in another. The attractions of duty proved stronger than safety, and in pursuit of duty a Christian hero fell by the wayside crowned with the plaudits of men and canopied with the glory of God.

For these, the veteran, and the youth of the cross, we mourn, but through the gloom of our mourning there come glittering rays of hope.

"Beloved, it is well."

BIBLES WANTED AND NEEDED.

A letter from Rev. George Jackson, engaged in selling religious literature in Louisiana, tells of a neighborhood that is utterly destitute of religious work or service of any kind, save a small Sunday school organized and conducted by a young lady who has lately gone into the parish to teach. The nearest church is ten miles distant. There are no Bibles in the community. The children are entirely ignorant of God and his Word. They need Bibles, and Brother Jackson is arranging to supply the destitution, and to go among the people and preach for them. But the dear old man, being deaf, is unable to converse with the people, and this places him at a great disadvantage. He stands in need of an ear-trumpet, and should have help to secure one. Will not his many friends assist him, and thus give him pleasure, as well as enable him to do good among a needy people?

If any will help, either to buy Bibles, or purchase the trumpet, the money can be sent direct to him at Lecompte, La., or to the Advocate. If to the Advocate, it will be promptly acknowledged.

TRIBUTE TO BISHOP KEENER.

Whereas only a few days after the last meeting of the Protestant Minister's Alliance, Bishop John C. Keener, Senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was taken from our midst to join the Master whom he had served so long; and whereas Bishop Keener has, during more than half a century's residence in New Orleans, stood forth conspicuously as a representative, not only of Methodism, but of Protestantism, challenging the admiration of men of all creeds by his profound spirituality and towering personality; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Protestant Ministers' Alliance, do hereby voice our feeling of personal loss at the death of Bishop Keener, and express our deepest sympathy for the bereaved family.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of Bishop Keener, through their pastor, Rev. W. W. Holmes, and that they be spread upon the minutes of this Association.

A SORE BEREAVEMENT.

My Dear Doctor.—The infant daughter—3 months old—of Rev. L. L. Roberts died at Trout yesterday at 7 p.m., and will be buried at Zachary on Sunday. A bad cold developed into pneumonia. This is the second child Brother and Sister Roberts have lost, the other having about a year and a half ago passed up to heaven from Lecompte. The parents are in deep grief over the going from them of their precious baby girl, but the sustaining grace of God is theirs in this sore affliction. The many brethren and friends of Brother and Sister Roberts will sympathize with them in their hour of trial, and will remember them in prayer at the throne of grace. May the sweet, comforting love of God be given them in ample measure at this time and the Father's arms be felt around and underneath them.

Rev. JOHN DAUNT WARNER, the subject of this sketch, deserves to be held in honored memory for many years to come because of his noble Christian character, as exhibited in both public and private life. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, March 24, 1838, and thus received his education in the old country. He came to this country in 1858, just in time to have his full share in the Civil War. After the war he settled in Pike County, and until 1885 spent most of his time teaching school, and, if we are to judge from the expressions of gray-headed men, who were once his pupils, we do not hesitate to say no teacher in Pike County ever left a stronger impression for good than did John D. Warner. From 1885 to 1889 he served his fellow-men as County Assessor. He did his work as a candidate and as an officer, not as a politician, but as a Christian citizen. The latter years of his life were spent as clerk, bookkeeper, or manager of some commercial business. He married Mrs. Elizaheth Lewis Ware in September, 1870. To them were born three daughters, all of whom they educated and saw married to good men. The daughters and wife still live to miss the godly counsel and pleasant companionship of a Christian father and husband. By his marriage he became a brother-in-law of Revs. H. P. and W. B. Lewis, of the Mississippi Annual Conference. Brother Warner joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1870; was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference at Holmesville, held by W. B. Lewis, P. E., Aug. 26, 1889. He was ordained a local deacon by Bishop H. C. Morrison in McComb on Dec. 15, 1901. He served his Lord and his church in every official position open to the laymen, being ever ready to work in the manner and place where he was most needed, and where he could do the greatest good. His life was more perfectly consecrated to his Master's work than many we meet with to-day, for he did not let personal preference, social pleasure or love of ease control him in the selection of his field of labor. Having known Brother Warner almost all my life, and being his pastor during the last two years of his life, I can truly say he was a good man in the home, in the church and as a citizen. His life in the three spheres were in perfect harmony. The purity and strength of his faith was ever shown by his works. He could stand the test: "By their fruits ye shall know them." I count it a privilege to have known such a man and a blessing to me to have been his pastor during the last two years of his life; and when the news reached me, on Nov. 30, 1905, that Brother Warner was dead, my Thanksgiving Day was saddened, because of the personal loss I felt in his death. But the Divine significance of the day was more forcibly impressed upon one, because such a life had gone into the presence of our Maker in the early morn of that day. L. E. ALFORD.

Mrs. CARRIE BAYLIS, daughter of Levi and Elizaheth Fenn, was born July 27, 1836, and departed this life Aug. 28, 1905. These facts set forth the boundaries of the earthly pilgrimage of a woman of more than ordinary worth and ability. From childhood she had exhibited traits of character that showed persistency of purpose and loftiness of aim. She was a student and brought the powers of mind to bear upon the study of the "greatest Book." When quite a girl she received a copy of the Holy Scriptures as a prize for committing to memory 1,000 verses from the Sacred Book. This was presented by her teacher, the Rev. A. R. Graves, D. D., at that time President of a large school near the present location of the town of Seminary, Miss., and for which that town is named. The subject of this sketch was married in 1865 to George Baylis, a man whose character was above reproach and who preceded her by six years to "that country from whence no traveler has ever returned." Sister Baylis was a woman of pronounced religious convictions. In 1856 she united with the Baptist Church, but in 1888 joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and though for some years her health had not been good, nevertheless each Sunday found her in her place trying to impress upon the minds and hearts of her Sunday school scholars those truths which had sustained her through all the years. At the residence of her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Lampton, whither she had gone on a visit, Aug. 28, 1905, she passed triumphantly "across the river" to the "hetter country," which is beyond. The writer, assisted by her pastor, Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, conducted the last sad rites and laid her tired body in the grave under the shadow of the church (Baylis' Chapel), where she had gone so often to pray and teach and listen to the preaching of the Word. The vast multitude of people, both white and black, who gathered to do honor to her memory, attested the high regard in which she was held. Many of both races were heard to say "My best friend has gone." She leaves two sons, George and Lamar Baylis, Keno, Miss., and two daughters, Mrs. J. B. Rawls, Jr., Mount Olive, Miss., and Mrs. W. E. Lampton, Columbia, Miss. Some sweet day, bye-and-bye, we hope to meet her.

THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

Mrs. LILLIAN WILLIAMS WALKER was born in the Plains, East Baton Rouge Parish, in 1862, the daughter of the late Dr. I. A. and M. J. Williams. She was converted and joined the Church under the ministry of Dr. C. G. Andrews. She was married to Mr. John C. Walker, of Virginia, Dec. 20, 1896. She died in the New Orleans Sanitarium Jan. 3, 1906. From her conversion at 13 years of age she was a devout and active Christian. For several years almost an invalid, she bore her affliction with Christian fortitude and faith, and in the midst of pain and suffering was one of the most useful members of the First Methodist Church. It is claimed that rare and exceptional natures are sometimes born into the world with the finer and nobler attributes of the soul largely developed. We are persuaded that our friend was richly endowed from her very birth. Added unto her natural and inherited endowments of splendid characteristics, was the faithful, unswerving performance of certain vows made in youth at the altar of her God and her Church. For years she had been prayerfully preparing herself for the call, "Come up higher." The summons came and she obeyed, resigned and perfectly prepared. In her lovely new home in Baton Rouge, in the presence of a large assembly of her friends, her pastor conducted her funeral service. Her husband survives her, and her relatives, Mrs. N. O. Gordon, Mrs. G. B. Brown, Mrs. M. K. Miller and J. R. Miller. The burden of grief rests heavily upon their hearts, but they sorrow not as they who have no hope. By her death her pastor lost a true friend, the Church an invaluable member and the city a useful, charitable and lovely woman. When we witness the passing of such characters through the world in trailing robes of spotless white, gathering no stain of sin by word or deed, we fully realize that Christian womanhood is indeed triumphant.

Brother JOHN H. TISDALE was born June 4, 1849; joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1891; departed this life Oct. 5, 1905. Brother Tisdale was a man of great energy. He labored hard to accumulate a competency for himself and family, which he accomplished. But in so doing he brought on the disease that carried him to his grave, earlier perhaps than would have been the case had he been more prudent in early life. His disease caused him at times not to have his right mind, and he was sent to the asylum twice for insanity. But we are glad to state that for several months before his decease he was clothed and in his right mind, and had the pleasure of attending a protracted meeting at old Oak Bowery Church last summer, where he first gave his life for the cause of Christ. My acquaintance with Brother Tisdale was limited, but I can say that he was ever ready to talk religion, and though he hated to leave loved ones, we have the assurance that he was ready when the summons came. So we say to his companion, two sons and daughters, not to mourn as those who have no hope. Husband and father is only sleeping and taking his rest. May they live out their lives in such a way that there will be a happy reunion in the sweet-by-and-by. F. A. LANE, P. C.

Mrs. CLARA V. McCANN (nee Gayle) was born near Olive Branch Church, in East Feliciana Parish, La., April 1, 1852, and died at the home of her half-brother, G. W. Turberville, near Eola, in Avoyelles Parish, Nov. 19, 1905. Sister McCann was raised by a Christian mother and united with the Methodist Church in her girlhood at the old Olive Branch Church, but later, moving to central Louisiana, she became loosed from her church moorings. In 1887 she was reclaimed under the preaching of Rev. J. H. Jackson, and reunited with the church, from which time her life was one of faithful adherence to her Lord and his Church. In 1898 she married Brother R. J. McCann, who preceded her to the other world by just a few days over a year. Her Christian life, while not demonstrative, seemed to be one of quiet enjoyment in Christ. Only a few days before she was attacked by her fatal illness she passed through a season of revival at White's Chapel, in which she seemed to be greatly refreshed and benefited in her spiritual life. After days of acute suffering from Bright's disease, she passed peacefully into the beyond surrounded by a devoted brother and sister and many friends. P. M. BROWN.

FRANCIS MARION McREE was born May 16, 1845, and died at his residence in Copiah County, Miss., June 30, 1905. He was the son of David and Espy McRee, of Caseyville, Lincoln County, Miss., who are pleasantly remembered by many pastors of the Caseyville Circuit. Brother McRee was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Caseyville, for over twenty-five years; was devoted to his church and was his pastor's friend; was a good citizen, kind neighbor, which won him a large circle of friends. In the providence of God, he was called to pass through a sickness lasting over three years, most of the time confined to his room, but the attention and devotion of his wife and son, Dr. F. V. McRee, was commendable. It was a great pleasure for the pastor and Christian friends to visit him, to pray, sing or worship with him. The funeral services were conducted at Bethel Church, Caseyville, Miss., by his pastor and the Rev. C. W. Grafton, the Presbyterian minister. A large concourse of sorrowing friends paid their tribute of respect. There he was laid to rest to await the morning of the resurrection.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

RAYVILLE, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: While I have an aversion to writing, I feel that it would be ingratitude if we were to fail to show in some way our appreciation of the kindness shown us by the good people of Rayville on our arrival after Conference at said place.

The parsonage at Rayville had not been occupied by the preachers for some time, there being no furnishings. But we found the ladies putting in new furniture, matting the floor, making the house comfortable for preacher and family. On the day of our arrival, not having everything quite ready for the reception of company, we were invited out to Brother and Sister Wrenn's, where we were told that the gentlemen and ladies of the town were invited to go, that we might get acqualnted with them. There we met a number of the good people, and spent some time pleasantly together. But we were gratified to know that this meeting was more than a social affair. Those who came (both great and small) brought something with them. We found that these packages contained just such things as the preacher and his family relish. The next morning they were wheeled around to the parsonage, and we took possession of them.

As these good people have shown kindness to us in material things, may the Lord help us to minister to them in spiritual things.

We find that Brother D. C. Barr wrought well here. He leaves here, after four years' work, with the prayers and good wishes of this people, who only learned to love him.

Yours in Christ,

J. R. ROY, P. C.

SIMSPORT, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As we were returned to this work for another year, we came back from the Conference full of faith and a determination to do our best for the Church. All of our people received us with open arms, which made us feel good, and gave us fresh courage to press the battle for the Lord. We have started the year fine. We have a noble Board of Stewards, that will stand to their pastor.

Our presiding elder came in on the 3d, and held our First Quarterly Conference. We had a good time. The Board of Stewards raised our assessment above what it was last year, putting it to $725. We are making some improvements on the parsonage, and are seating the Woodside Church with new pews. We have a good people to serve. They know just how to make the preacher and family feel at home with them; so we are expecting great things from the Lord, the way our good people are planning and taking hold of the work.

I am praying that this may be a year of great success for the Church in the salvation of many souls, and we are working and praying for a revival on our charge. Pray for us, that we may have it.

Your brother in Christ,

L. N. HOFFPAUIR, P. C.

MONTROSE HIGH SCHOOL.

Dear Brethren: We are now housed in our handsome brick school building. Mr. B. F. Anuis, of Laurel, the contractor, has given us a substantial structure.

The Montrose High School plant is the only school property owned by any Protestant denomination in the eastern half of Mississippi. When we remember that this school was adopted at the Mississippi Annual Conference as a Conference training school, and that neither the State nor any Protestant denomination has a school in the southeastern quarter of the State, we cannot but predict a bright future for the school.

All of our State and denominational schools are on or near some railroad running north and south through the State.

As the Montrose High School has no rival in southeastern Mississippi, nor any rival on the M., J. & K. C. Railroad, and as it has the Mississippi Conference back of it, and as it is locally well surrounded, being at Montrose, on the M., J. & K. C., it seems to me that we may expect great results.

Brethren, we need some financial assistance in order that we may reach our ideals. A little investment now for the Church will bring great returns. A few days ago a brother at Moss Point sent us a check for $10. Are there not other laymen and preachers who will help us liberally now? Yours fraternally,

WALDO W. MOORE,
Financial Agt. Montrose High School.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

A little thinking shows us that the deeds of kindness we do are effective in proportion to the love we put into them. More depends upon the motive than upon the gift. If the thought be selfish, if we expect compensation or are guilty of close calculation, the result will be like the attitude of mind which invited it.—Dresser.

It is worth our while to remember that personal influence is not merely a matter of example, but a scientific fact. People are either better or worse, stronger or weaker, for our presence. We effect more by what we are than by our attempts at persuasion or remonstrance. Others may be able to use moral strength.—R. J. Campbell.

Remember that charity thinketh no evil, much less repeats it. There are two good rules which ought to be written on every heart: Never believe anything bad about anybody unless you positively know it is true; never tell even that unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary and that God is listening while you tell it.—Henry Van Dyke.

A DAY OF MIRACLES IN CAPERNAUM.

On a Sabbath day, between the time of our last lesson and the lesson of to-day, our Lord was in Nazareth, where "He had been brought up." It was his custom to attend the services of the Synagogue. This day was decision day for the people of Nazareth, and, judging from all that followed this day's service, Jesus must have attended with a heavy heart, for he knew that they would reject him, and even try to do him bodily harm. In sorrow, he wended his way to the synagogue, so familiar to him from his earliest youth. At the proper time during the service the rulers of the Synagogue did not hesitate to hand him the Book of Law to read. He stood up and turned to the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah and read:

"The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

He closed the book and gave it to the rulers and began to explain how this prophecy was that day fulfilled in him. The people looked on him in wonder, and said to one another: "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother's name Mary, and his brothers James and Joseph and Simon and Judas? Whence then hath this man these things? And they were offended."

They were offended still more when he told them of how in olden times there were towns and people especially favored by the Lord, and they did not repent, comparing those old-time events with the town of Nazareth of that time, with the advantage of having known him always. His hearers were filled with anger; they seized him and took him out to where there was a bluff-like hill, and intended to throw him over, that he might be dashed to pieces on the rocks below. He allowed them to take him to the very point where a slight push would accomplish their purpose, but he turned on them, and there was a change. His divinity appeared in all his actions. They fell back from him, and he passed through the very midst of his enemies and departed. That was how his friends and neighbors, who had known him from childhood, ended this Sabbath day in Nazareth.

Now we study of another Sabbath day in Capernaum only some twelve or fifteen miles from Nazareth. Capernaum was where Simon and Andrew lived, and perhaps John and James also lived there.

He was in the synagoge on this Sabbath, as he ever was on that day, for he must be about his Father's business. He taught them — the friends and neighbors of Simon and Andrew, the fishermen — and they were astonished at his teaching. They were accustomed in the teachings of the scribes to hear them say, "It is written," or "It was said by the prophets of oldeu times," but here was a man who said, "I say unto you," with an authority that could not be questioned.

In the synagogue, among others who came, was a man with an unclean spirit, an emisary of Satan, sent at a critical time, to counteract, as much as possible, the work of our Lord; for Satan knew that God had sent his Son into the world to save the world. Satan's efforts in the temptation in the wilderness tells us that; and now he is urging his evil spirits to increased energy—hence his presence in the house of God, and in the very presence of the Son of God.

Have we not known in our day and time, when a gracious revival was in progress, that the evil element is most active and outrageous? So here is one of the devil's helpers, active at the beginning of a day of miracles performed in aid of suffering humanity, and to strengthen the faith of those who have already believed that Jesus is the Savior of the world.

There must have been more than one evil spirit at work among this assembled people, for one spoke, using the vocal organs of the man possessed, saying: "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God."

Of course, they wanted to be let alone. So do evil men of the present day. But it is not the mission of the Gospel to let evil alone. Jesus did not need, nor did he want the testimouy from that source as to who he was. Jesus rebuked him, saying, "Hold thy peace, and come out of him!" The evil spirit could but obey, and in a rage cried with a loud voice and came out of him. The people must have heard the words of this spirit, for they were astonished that even unclean spirits obeyed the command of Jesus. This event put an end to the services for that day, and the people came out of the synagogue and went to their homes.

Jesus went home with Simon and Andrew. Leaving one sufferer after aiding him, he came to another that needed help. When they went into Simon's House, they told Jesus that Simon's mother-in-law was lying sick with a great fever. He went at once to the sickroom. O how must his presence have brightened that room of suffering! How often have we seen the face of a suffering loved one grow bright and happy when some Christian friend would come and pray and sing some loved and hallowed song! Well did we know that Jesus was there, too.

Jesus came and took the patient by the haud, and lifted her up, and she was well—that was all; no word was needed. The sick one was well and arose and went about her usual work of caring for the comfort of those around her.

The miracle at the synagogue in the early part of the day had been told and talked of in all the surrounding country, and when sunset marked the close of the Sabbath, around the door of Peter's house were gathered many that were sick and many that were afflicted, as was the man in the first miracle of the day. O what rejoicing, not only of those who were healed, but of their friends and loved ones!

The busy day of miracles ended, the people, with all those that were healed, departed to their homes, and as night advanced all in the house retired to rest. Our Savior must have been weary, but he did not sleep long, because a great while before it was day he arose and softly left the house, and, going to a lonely place, sank on his knees in prayer. There, in his loneliness under the sky of the early morning, will we leave him, for he must pour out his soul to Him who said, "This is my beloved Son."

Now, in our love for this blessed Redeemer, we wish we could have ministered to him in his loneliness. O blessed Christ, let us go to the Father in our loneliness as thou hast shown us, and let us show our love for thee by the work that we try to do for thee! What a blessed thought that he who had not where to lay his head has gone to prepare a place for them that love him, "that where he is there they may be also," and that we might have that which he gave up when he left heaven's throne to be born in Judea's manger and die on Calvary's cross.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—I Cor. ii. 9.

PACHUTA CHARGE.

Dear Advocate.—We are moving along very well with the Lord's work in this part of his vineyard. My reception over the work on being returned for another year was very cordial, and I entered at once upon another year's work. We are very well organized; the people have gone to work, and I have never had brighter prospects for a prosperous year. Our First Quarterly Conference was held a few days ago. Our presiding elder, Brother Sullivan, was with us and encouraged us with three good sermons. All the churches advanced some financially, except one. We have received several members since Conference, and have some more applications. The Lord is with us, and we are praying for more consecrated homes and hearts. I am sure, from experience and observation, that pure home religion is the greatest need of the Church to-day.

I have enjoyed reading the Advocate very much. The letters from the older brethren cheer my heart. I say, God bless them. May they give us more of their experiences and tell us, who are younger, more of their victories.

I say amen to Brother Lowrey's letter on the "Evils of Church Entertainments," etc. May the Lord awaken our people to true Christian giving. I hope the brethren and sisters will settle the tobacco question in such a way that many who now use it, especially preachers, will make the sacrifice, and give up the weed.

We have recently completed our parsonage, which makes us a comfortable home.

With prayers for the Advocate and all the brethren, I am yours fraternally,

L. F. ALFORD.

Pachuta, Miss.

JONESBORO, LA.

Dear Advocate—On Tuesday night, Jan. 16, the good people of Jonesboro gave us a real nice pounding, consisting of good things to eat—and substantial, too. There were four things that made the occasion grand and delightful—the pounding, the devotional, the musical, the social.

Our doors are always open to an occasion of this kind. We have been with the people here going on two years, and we have learned to love them. We have some most excellent people here—God bless them.

I have had but one appointment here since Conference, and that was on a very rainy, disagreeable day, but we had some fifty persons present at the 11 o'clock service; but it rained us out at night. The Sunday school here is moving up right along. I have filled my appointments at Hodge and Wyatt, and had fine congregations at each place. The Sunday schools are getting along really well.

I will go to Dodson next Sunday. I feel that God will do great things for us this year, if we will only do our part; and, by the grace of God, I am going to make it the best year of my life.

Brethren throughout the Church, and especially in the Louisiana Conference, pray for me, that I may be useful.

Our First Quarterly Conference will meet with the Hodge congregation on Feb. 17-18. Yours to serve.

S. D. HOWARD.

FEARN'S SPRINGS, MISS.

I am getting a good start on my work. We are taking up a collection to repair Hashuqua Church, having $30 in hand, and Macedonia is doing the same. Mashulaville Church is taking up a collection to buy an organ for that church. We have one Sunday school in operation and others will follow as soon as the weather will permit. I have filled all of my appointments this year. Some of our churches are not ceiled and are without stoves in them. I think that we will have a prosperous year.

The new railroad survey comes within a quarter of a mile of Fearn's Springs. This is very encouraging to the people of Winston County. I hope that they may build without delay. Success to the advocate. Pray for us. Your brother in Christ.

W. A. CLARK.

A HAPPY PREACHER.

Dear Dr. Boswell:—Our reception into the Brookhaven pastorate has been pleasant and cordial. On our arrival we found that the thoughtful ladies had made the parsonage ready for comfortable housekeeping, and were on hand to extend a cordial greeting. Perhaps you have forgotten how such acts make smooth the rough places in an itinerant's life.

The congregation reluctantly parted with Dr. Black and family, but submitted to the decree of the Conference as all loyal Methodists should.

No man is happier than Dr. Cooper, and few men are doing a greater work. I doubt if Whitworth College was ever more prosperous and ever did more efficient work. When life's roll of heroes and heroines is made up let it include the gifted, cultured, consecrated men and women who teach our boys and girls for one half the salary paid the negro who shovels coal in the locomotive furnace. But "a good man is satisfied from himself." The students are bright, cheerful and studious. Under the religious leadership of Sister Bessie Lipscomb they must be spiritual.

Brother Adams, our "beloved," has been in the grasp of the grip, but has met all appointments and filled them, too. He says he would rather be presiding elder than be bishop, altho he is a member of the General Conference. Bishop Morrison will preach for us on February 11th. I will tell you later about the result of his visit here. Doctor, you are cordially invited to come on that day, or any other day that will suit you.

Temperance.

One of the finest deliverances favorable to temperance and against drunkenness, moderate drinking and use of alcohol in any form which has ever emanated from a Christian authority has just been sent forth to Canadian Roman Catholics by Archbishop Bruchesis. It re-enforces the argument from religion with the facts of science; he calls on the clergy to give over the habit of setting forth liquor on pastoral visits and gatherings for retreats and missions; he requests families to have ideals of hospitality which do not make the use of liquors necessary; he implores youth to absent themselves from saloons and from the foolish habit of treating; he calls on priests and teachers in educational institutions to refer to intemperance in classrooms; and he orders all parishes to establish temperance leagues; and the same order applies to colleges and Laval University.—Exchange.

STIMULANTS.

The wrong use of stimulants is greater than any one of us can confess; only the eye of God, that sees everywhere—the heart and the soul, the interior and the hidden of the household, as well as the vices, disgraces and mischiefs of intemperance—only God can summarize them. The danger of it upon personal morality can never too much be made known or insisted upon. The whole public order is imperiled by the large use of stimulants. Public crimes, private vices, are enormously increased, and that almost all admit. Our taxation is doubled and trebled, in the mature judgment of the conservative man.

It may well be said that the evil of intemperance surpasses all evils put together—and that if it could be banished from society, society would rise many and many degrees, throw off incumbrances, move with easier step, and be productive of a thousand benefits which are now either materially reduced or entirely destroyed. Intoxicants let loose the devil in man. If alcohol could be once thrown overboard, health, industry, morality and law would be greatly promoted, while taxation and crime would be either destroyed altogether, or nearly so. No man can be extravagant on this subject; no other element so much deserves the consideration of good men, whether in or out of the church—if they feel for their fellow mortals. Excessive drinking is unquestionably the most deeply rooted evil in existence to-day. Hence it is the more imperative that our efforts to check it should be unremitting.—H. W. Beecher.

IN THE INTEREST OF SAFETY.

Rules recently issued by the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company forbid its employes to visit saloons, race tracks, dance halls or resorts where liquor is sold or gambling permitted. Referring to the new rules, a high officer of the road says: "All the things which are prohibited either tend or might tend permanently or temporarily to impair a man's physical and mental powers." The rules are not the result of religious sentiment, but of common sense and business judgment. Railroad service calls for men with cool heads and steady nerves, with active bodies and alert minds. The man who drinks or carouses or dissipates weakens his vital forces and makes himself less reliable and valuable to the railroad. Therefore, the company prefers to have men who do not do these things. It is determined that in justice to itself and the public it will have no other kind, if it can get the right kind of men.

As the requirements of modern railroading grow more exacting in the matter of intelligence and capacity, the habits of employes are more carefully considered. There is no invasion of personal rights or liberties. The railroads demand clear-headed, sober men. Those who object to the requirements are not obliged to serve. The law requires the railroads to employ safety appliances and to take all precautions for the protection of its employes and the public. It naturally wants to do this, for in doing so it protects its own property. The fitness of its employes is of the highest importance. It should seek the best. Those who do not desire to measure up to the required standard can drink and carouse as much as they like. But the men who accept the rules will feel better in mind and body and have more in pocket.

"The railroads preach most effective lessons in behalf of temperance. So do many other institutions where sobriety is imperative. The drunkard never rises, but goes ever downward. The habitual drinker who holds a position of trust may continue all right, but he endangers himself and others. He may be willing to endanger himself for the sake of indulgence, but the interested employer is not willing that he should. Therefore the inhibition. The Chicago and Alton may lose some of its old employes, but it will gain better ones."—Nashville American.

We will convince you that you can "increase your yields per acre" and you won't have to keep it a secret, either. Read what Messrs. Wherry & Son, of the Magnolia Fruit Farm, Durant, Miss., write: "From two acres of strawberries, on which 1,000 pounds of per acre were used, we cleared a profit of $75.00 per acre more than the other 14½ acres of strawberries which had only 500 pounds of this fertilizer." Thus double the quantity of these fertilizers on each acre of any crop, and more than doubly "increase your yields per acre." Be sure you buy only Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers.

BUSINESS EVANGELISTS.

Humiliating as it may be, yet observation and experience compels the conviction that some evangelists (not so very many, thank the Lord!) are in the work as a business. They have the lingo with "the tinkling cymbal and sounding brass" of a correct theology and have studied "methods" in some institute or try to ape some successful evangelist, and then start out with some "testimonials" and by advertising and manipulating forces as in business and politics, a revival meeting is arranged for with some anxious, burdened pastor.

The business evangelist arrives, and of course brings his method, to be forced upon each church and pastor alike, while there is wanting that power and insight to comprehend the local condition and adopt such means and methods as would bring best results. He takes the lines in one hand and the whip in the other, and assumes to drive and lash the church and community on to a great and successful revival.

For the first week in the so-called revival sermons he blisters and bleeds the membership, interspersing with stories humorous, sentimental, boorish and extravagant. With the personal pronoun "I," "I" made conspicuously conspicuous.

Such noveltise will naturally attract the crowds.

By some tactful and easy proposition some one or more persons are induced to make a start in the Chrlstion life and then the business evangelist endeavors to start a great wave of ethusiasm and expectancy, by prophesying that a great revival is coming to this church and community, and supports it by telling what "I" accomplished in "my great meeting" in—in—Blank.

The divine element is preached about and spoken of at various times and ways, but the human element is so unwisely and egotistically asserted, with stories, humorous, coarse and extravagant, promiscuously thrown in, that the intelligent and devout people are humiliated and chagrined, and surely the Holy Spirit is grieved. The meetings close. What of the results? Yes, what of the results indeed? No doubt some good is accomplished. But ah how much harm, present and future, has been done? No one knows so well as a heart-sick pastor who has gone through such a revival with such an evangelist. A church and community in some measure divided. A pastor discounted in some degree. Not a few persons who have been drawn nearer the kingdom by the Church and pastor have been repelled and hardened. Large financial burdens have been incurred and meager results at best. The official board is sorely disappointed and grieved, if not disgusted, and becomes skeptical—may be set against all evangelists.

I am happy to know that the picture drawn does not apply to all men and women in the evangelist work, but am very positive it portrays some.

Looking at the work and the problems of evangelism in the Church, who is sufficient to offer a practical solution? The office of evangelist is recognized in the New Testament The conditions in many churches, and not the pastor, are such as to wisely and loudly call for outside help in revival work. A few suggestions are hereby submitted: First, that when evangelists are employed, they be expected to consider and consult with the pastor and officiary of the church repeatedly as to local conditions, methods and means; and when evangelists become unwise, authoritative and abusive, that they be dismissed. The Holy Spirit can and does communicate with and through a prayerful and devout pastor and officiary as well as with the evangelist. Secondly, in view of the general conditions in the large majority of churches and communities, the wiser and more successful course will be for pastor and church to agree and make thorough preparations for a revival, and for outside help have pastor exchange work during the revival. And while results will not likely be so temporarily exciting, they will most likely be more satisfactory and permanent.—Rev. John H. Price, in Central Christian Advocate.

MISSIONS: THE OUTLOOK AND OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren.—We have cause to be deeply thankful that our Conference last year made the best showing in its history in respect to the mission cause, the total amount raised on both assessments being $18,480.60. If to this be added the $700.00 contributed by a layman of the Seashore District for the support of a special missionary, it will be seen that the total is not far short of $20,000. The full collections which were reported in spite of quarantines, the prevalence of yellow fever, and the shortage in the cotton crop evidently betoken a deeper and more intelligent interest in this noblest of all enterprises. The successes of the year 1905, notwithstanding the grievous hindrances that were encountered in the fall, ought to encourage us to move forward, confident of more glorious results than have ever been achieved before.

Our beloved State was never more prosperous than at present, and her rich and varied resources are being rapidly developed. The Church should by all means keep step with the march of material progress, and do her best to rightly direct and utilize the abundant means in the hands of her members, many of whom during recent years have acumulated large wealth.

While we have reason to be gratified over the exhibit of last year, who will hazard the assertion that we have reached the limit, that we are doing about all we can do and ought to do for the world's evangelization? The example of the South Georgia Conference, which last year raised a total for missions of $50,000.00, and which is supporting upwards of thirty-five special missionaries, ought to stimulate us, one and all, to pray for and labor for larger things. Ten years ago said Conference raised $9,000 for foreign missions; five years ago, $17,000; two years ago, $25,000; and last year, $34,000, and this on an assessment of $16,000. We have a score or more of well-to-do laymen among us who could each support a special missionary in the foreign field, and scarcely feel it. The mighty enterprise of Christian missions is just what the church needs to save her from the blight of selfishness and sloth, to develop her in faith and love and liberality, and to call forth her best energies.

Never was there a time in the history of the world when opportunities for mission work were more numerous and inviting than at present, and the Church of to-day occupies a point of vantage such as she has never had before. Steam and electricity have brought the very ends of the earth together, while the wealth and commerce of the world are in the hands of the Christian nations.

The January number of "Go Forward" contains the following significant paragraph from a letter written to our missionary secretaries from Kobe, Japan, by Dr. S. H. Wainwright: "I am eager to see you and talk over the situation. I cannot write my full mind. Great opportunities confront the Kwansei Gakuin and our Church. Their call is loud and strong. To be unmoved in the presence of human need is not less culpable than indifference to the voice of God. One of the great lessons in the gigantic struggle just closed in the Far East (or shall I say just begun?) is that Christ should become a greater reality to the populations which have their abode in this part of the world."

It is my humble conviction that in order to accomplish the best results and achieve the largest measure of success in our missionary campaign, earnest attention should be given to the following matters:

1. Each pastor should himself be aflame with missionary zeal, and be thoroughly informed upon this great subject. A missionary fire in the pulpit is sure to spread to the pews, and kindle a holy enthusiasm for the speedy evangelization of the world. Let us see to it that the obligation to spread the gospel is laid upon the hearts and consciences of our people. Let us turn on the light, and keep it turned on.

"Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another soul wouldst reach:
It needs the overflowing heart
To give the full lips speech."

2. Missionary literature should be widely and persistently circulated. Well has it been said that "facts are the fuel that feed missionary fires." Let us do our best to put our newsy and attractive missionary monthly "Go Forward" into as many homes as possible. The pastor who takes pains to secure subscribers for this valuable missionary periodical is sure to witness gratifying results in quickened interest in missions and in increased liberality. Ignorance is the prolific mother of indifference, prejudice and stinginess.

3. Earnest effort should be made to secure the hearty co-operation of the children and young people of the church. Since it is from the ranks of the young people that future missionaries are to come, and liberal supporters of missions are to be developed, nothing is of more vital importance than the missionary training of our Sunday school scholars and Epworth Leaguers. Let us endeavor to make the Sunday school Missionary Society not merely a form, but a thing of life and power. A splendid programme for Missionary Day in the Sunday school is published each month in Go Forward, and can be used to great advantage in whole or in part. Every Sunday school, if possible, should be equipped with a missionary library and a missionary map of the world.

4. An early start should be made on the collections. It has become a truism that "early collections mean full collections." Let us not wait for something to turn up, but promptly set out to accomplish the work to be done. Some of our domestic missionaries are greatly hampered in their work because our Conference Treasurer is unable to send them much-needed remittances early in the year.

5. Prayer for missions should be given a large place in our plans and efforts. If there is neglect at this point, notwithstanding the perfection of our organization and the extensive machinery we seek to put in motion, the results are sure to be disappointing. As Mr. John R. Mott rightly says: "The greatest force which we as Christians can wield is the force of prayer. It is, moreover, the greatest talent God has placed in our hands, and he is going to hold every one of us to strict account as to the way in which we use this talent. The Gossner Mission was literally prayed into existence, and one hundred and forty-four missionaries were prayed out into the field by that wonderful man of prayer, Pastor Gossner." A mighty volume of prayer should ascend to God daily for the workers in the field, and that the Church at home may be brought to realize that her supreme duty is to take the world for Christ, and that now is the time to advance, for "the day is breaking everywhere."

Yours fraternally,
M. M. BLACK,
Conference Missionary Secretary.

Purvis, Miss.

Glances at the World.

Mayor Tom Johnson of Cleveland, Ohio, the man who has worked so hard and persistently in the interest of the people, effecting reforms of great importance, and apparently invincible at the polls, has lately been subjected to criticism by the ministers of the city for failure to enforce the laws against Sunday desecration. About one hundred ministers went on record on Monday last "as being strenuously opposed to what they termed a diabolical usurpation of the people's power by the Mayor." We understand by this that the people, in their sovereign capacity, had enacted laws for the suppression and punishment of crimes, and that Mayor Johnson had deliberately set them aside by refusing to use his authority to have them enforced. The preachers were somewhat excited, as the Mayor had previously promised them to abate certain nuisances. Resolutions were adopted calling on the Mayor to execute the laws, and they will begin a campaign on the issue at once. The moral forces in Ohio compose a power just at this time that mayors, governors and other officers cannot afford to antagonize.

The War Department has made a new and important ruling in regard to young women who apply for positions to teach school in the Philippines. The ruling is to the effect that none except young women who have male protectors will be employed. They must either be married or have very near relatives in the island. A young lady made application for a position, and was informed of the new ruling. It was explained "that it is not advisable to let unmarried young women go into the remote provinces where there are few white persons living. If they are married there is usually work for two, and the husband is able to give necessary protection to his wife at all times. Unmarried young women can be utilized only in Manila or other of the larger cities. There are upward of 1200 teachers in the Philippines now, and Secretary Taft relies upon the campaign of education to do more than anything else to advance the Filipinos." This ruling, we think, will be generaly approved.

Never perhaps in the history of the world was there ever such dilly-dallying over a great project as there has been over the construction of the Panama Canal. The matter was determined upon and a route selected quite two years ago. Ten millions of dollars and over have been spent, and millions more are subject to the order of the authorities, and it is not even yet settled what sort of a canal will be dug. About six months since it was positively asserted that a lock canal had been determined on, and it was so published. Since then a number of consulting engineers met and discussed and reported—the majority favoring a lock, and a minority a sea level canal. The lower House of Congress is one way on the subject, and the Senate the other. The great railroads, it is said, are against the whole thing, and doing their best in opposition. They will not be able to defeat the project, but they may cause delay. If the work can be done at all, it will be done, but at the present rate of progress it will be many years before it is completed. The country would not get impatient if the Commissioners were to set their laborers to digging. This they might do, and take abundance of time to settle the question whether to dig through the big hill that stands in the way or make the locks and lift the ships over it. But they are not digging—only getting ready to dig.

At the suggestion of the authorities in Rome, there may be in the near future a peaceable settlement of the troubles growing out of the separation of Church and State in France. The excitement and riots of last week have about subsided. Another trouble was to provide for the clergy by forming religious associations in every parish, one purpose of which is the financial administration of affairs, the general administration of which will be centered in the hands of the Bishop of the diocese, who guarantees each priest a minimum salary of about $600 a year—an amount equivalent to what was paid by the Government before separation. Some parishes are not able to pay so much, but the larger and richer parishes will help the poorer. The annual income of some parishes is from six to twelve thousand dollars a year. These can well afford to help the poorer. From all this, it would appear that the Church will, or can be, as well cared for as when entirely dependent on the State. The Roman Catholic Church suffers nothing in the United States by being free. It will not, under wise leadership, suffer any in France.

In the recent election in England, which we have before alluded to, unheard-of things took place. The following cable dispatch to the New York Tribune will give our readers an idea: "A cotton spinner has captured Sir James Fergusson's seat in Manchester; a mill-hand has beaten Sir Ernest Flower in Bradford; printers have headed the poll at Norwich, Burnley, Manchester and Deptford; a navvy, who was once employed in excavating for the Manchester Ship Canal, is member for Stoke-on-Trent; a railway guard has a majority of over 7,000 at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where Mr. Morley once suffered defeat. An obscure collier has distanced a mine owner; a cotton operative has vanquished Lord Goschen's son at Bolton; a stonemason's son and a warehouse clerk have each won by 7,500 votes at Leicester over Sir John Rolleston; a laster in a boot factory has carried a Wolverhampton seat against Sir Alfred Hickman; miners have been victorious at Morpeth and in Glamorganshire; a furniture maker who had begun life in a mineral water factory triumphs at Leeds, and men who have been carpenters, shipwrights, steel smelters, sailors, engineers, mechanics, pitmen and even newsboys are sent to Parliament in place of university men, baronets with large estates, shipowners, manufacturers, bankers and the sons of earls." Whether the displacement of the heretofore ruling classes in the Parliament will work for the good of the country remains to be seen. Certainly no ill can come if the men elected are of good common sense and are truly patriotic. If the aristocracy does not now realize the full significance of the turn in the make-up of Parliament, the waking up will come in time.

The Legislature of Ohio has just passed a law making passenger fare on the railroads of that State 2 cents a mile for any distance over five miles. The matter has been agitated for some time. Now that the law has been passed, it is likely to be given a fair trial. One of the great systems operating in the State, through its general counsel, has spoken, saying that the managers had no notion of contesting the matter in the courts, or doing anything in the way of taking off trains, reducing speed, etc., that would tend to impair the service. "However," said the counsel, "if we find that we cannot maintain service as good as at present and make a fair revenue from our passenger traffic, we will prepare data and statistics which we will present to the Legislature at its next session and will ask for the repeal or modification of the two-cent law." It has been often said that a reduction of fare would so increase travel as to more than make up for the reduction. This was proven to be the case when fare was reduced from 5 cents to 3 cents. The reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents will likewise be helpful. And if it proves successful in Ohio, other States will follow in due time. The roads will lose no money, if the many thousands of people who heretofore have been riding on free passes are required to pay, as has been determined on by the railway authorities.

SUPERANNUATE HOMES.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I note with satisfaction your remarks in the Advocate relative to the "superannuates' home" movement in our Conference. I was appointed by the Joint Board of Finance—which act was confirmed by the Conference—as Agent for this interest. My instructions were to make liberal use of the columns of the Advocate, with your consent. I am now planning, securing data and arranging for a thorough campaign of the entire State. I am to do no traveling, except as necessity requires, but through the active co-operation of every pastor in the Conference, the cause will be presented to every congregation, and an appeal made to every generous-hearted layman in the Church.

Our object is to secure lots, build and furnish a home in each district, if possible; and to this end the Joint Board enthusiastically and confidently takes hold of the work, believing that before the year is ended we will have completed and well under way a number of these homes.

Donations of lots or money may be made any time, and communications relative thereto should be addressed to the President of the Joint Board, Rev. K. W. Dodson, Mansfield, La., or the Treasurer, S. B. McCutcheon, Shreveport, La., or to the Agent. Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN, Agent.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE AND METHODISM IN MISSISSIPPI.

The first Sunday in March has, by Conference action, been designated as Education Day in North Mississippi. This will make a favorable opportunity for directing the thought of our people to Millsaps College, and I shall be glad to supply anyone with specific information relative to any phase of our work.

It is highly gratifying to note a growing interest in our educational work in both of the Mississippi Conferences. This is putting emphasis in the right place, and it is in harmony with the spirit and tendency of our times. There has not heretofore been a period in the history of the world when so much attention was given to education as now. We may be sure that the Church that does not take hold vigorously of this work has no future; and it must be a persistent hold. Mere spurts of enthusiasm, now and then, will not count for much. We must be so thoroughly committed to this work that we will talk about it, and work for it, under the conviction that it involves the very life of our Church. It may be that some will think that this is putting it rather strongly, but unless our people agree that it is not putting it too strongly I have very little hope of accomplishing anything worthy of our great Church. In some way, and I know of no way so effective as through our pastors and Church papers, the conviction must be burned into our people that great things must be done in our educational work, and done soon, or we are going to suffer disastrous consequences.

It may be a matter of surprise to some that I write thus. It is not my habit. I prefer to speak in hopeful strains. But I feel very deeply on this subject. We had just as well understand, once for all, that we must make a great advance in the way of organization, system, concentration and equipment in our educational work, or abandon it altogether.

Millsaps College is so related to Methodism in Mississippi that it must be, in an important sense, an exponent of our Church life. It was established with the utmost deliberation. In it the thought and purpose of Methodism in Mississippi crystallizes. In planting it at the Capital of the State, we have shown our faith in it, and our willingness to be judged by it.

Thus far the College has done well. The Trustees have administered its affairs so wisely that it has been an honor to the Church. It has an unquestioned place in the list of colleges of high grade. The original policy of putting the departments of instruction in the hands of trained and thoroughly competent teachers has been rigidly adhered to. As demands have increased, facilities have been enlarged, and yet not one dollar of indebtedness has been incurred. We can afford, as a Church, to stand by this record. But let us not deceive ourselves. We have simply made a beginning. The public expects great things of us.

In the Capital of the State we are like "a city set on a hill, and cannot be hid." We must go forward or suffer reproach. It is supposed that our great Church knows what it means to call an institution a college in the opening years of the twentieth century. Our annual income is now only about $15,000, and yet unless we do the work that institutions are doing with an income of more than $50,000 we will disappoint public expectations.

May we not hope, therefore, that at least $100,000 will be added to our endowment during the present year?

Realizing the situation, as I do; seeing our opportunity, and impressed with the great responsibility resting on our beloved Church, I earnestly urge our people — preachers and laymen — to write, talk, work and pray to this end.

GRENADA NOTES.

Dear Dr. Boswell: "By ways unsuspected" is a frequent experience, and "what I do thou knowest not now," said the Savior, but I am grateful for the honor to be circuit pastor at Grenada. A long line of worthy predecessors here have "wrought righteousness," obtained promises, subdued kingdoms and turned to flight the armies of the aliens. And for three generations it might have been said of these churches: "I know thy works: behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."

Multitudes have been brought to Christ at these altars, very many of whom have entered the city of mansions. Sundry others give now large help to the town, and to places elsewhere, and still the charge abides in strength, grading easily with the better pastorates of North Mississippi, and increasing yet more in capacity to extend the victories of the kingdom.

Five churches and 600 Methodists ought to be a prophecy of something to be accomplished.

A charming welcome has been accorded to me, and already we have a delightful beginning for this 1906.

Brother Thames was returned to the district and began with us early at Duck Hill, on the Illinois Central Railroad. He is of the "true and tried" "regulars." The Gospel trumpet at his hands gives no note amiss, nor ever a sound of uncertainty. As a valued worker, he has a great time among the churches, and by methods strictly original he invests himself in tactful efforts at a useful service.

Grenada classes among the old and historic towns of Mississippi. Few communities have finer homes and more elegant churches. The volume of business is considerable, and the public school, for excellence, is much above common. The latest in sidewalks are abundant, and the streets are wide and well lighted.

Grenada College is imposing, and as fine as can be made with the money at hand; it is new looking, and presents a well-kept appearance; is worth, no doubt, every cent of the $60,000 valuation. This school, after no few years of "wilderness" travel, begins now, in fact, to "possess the land," and even with much competition in splendid State schools and well-fixed church institutions, actually performs miracles in success, and threatens to assume proportions as a really first-class college.

In school movements the times are ominous. Lynchburg, Va., with $120,000 in property, has captured a place among the "13 A schools" of the United States, and made of the "Randolph-Macon" a gem of beauty and of honor, and created at the same time the conditions of a greatest local prosperity. One hundred thousand dollars additional at Grenada would produce similar results, and place that location at once among the enviable sections of the American continent; and solve the problem of higher education now confronting the Conferences of that immediate division of the Church.

Of this no comment, however, it cannot be said: "Other foundation can no man lay." Premonitions exist indicative of a desire and purpose to settle at no distant time the question of a great educational plant, now considered so tremendously important. The builders of this needed school will rank first class with national benefactors, and with such lovers of humanity as Commodore Vanderbilt and numerous others, whose names appear before the American public and educational world in glowing characters, which can never be effaced.

Few points could equal Grenada as appropriate for such a school, and towns, multitude for number, can easily be found which are less able to "roll away the stone" which prevents the coming forth of this highest benediction to the country and captivating prosperity to the community.

The very excellent Methodist Church here flourishes under the pastoral efficiency of Rev. Ben P. Jacq, and the Conference occasion left a blessing which will linger as the months pass, and abide through the years to come.

"THE NEED OF A REVIVAL."

Dear Dr. Boswell: I was glad to read the timely article from the pen of Rev. T. W. Lewis in your issue of Feb. 1, under the above title. I enjoy communications from our faithful pastors in reference to our need of a genuine and widespread revival. Brother Lewis strikes the key-note in his first two propositions. Since I do revival or evangelistic work, I think it right that I reply, by way of explanation, to the third proposition in his article, viz: "The need of a revival is based also upon the reactionary effects of modern evangelism."

Of course, I do not know which class Brother Lewis would put me in—the evil or the good. I have been doing revival work in connection with our pastors for the past ten years, and have seen thousands converted and brought into the church.

Brother Lewis says: "An evangelist comes to hold a meeting. He must succeed. He makes appeals and repeats propositions until the people are aroused." To this I plead guilty—except I do not make as many propositions as I have heard others make. But it is a fact that "I go to hold a meeting"—not in my own strength, but relying upon the promises of God. I realize that "I must succeed," or souls will be lost, God's Word dishonored, and I will leave a spiritually dead church on the hands of a heart-aching pastor, like I often find it.

Now, candidly, if I am not right in my position, my brethren themselves being judges, I am willing to discontinue my revival efforts. I think that Brother Lewis, to have completed an exceptionally good article, should have said: "Brethren, let us adopt the evangelistic spirit, and when we attempt our revivals let us throw ourselves at the feet of Jesus, and 'go to hold a meeting.' We must succeed." "The Lord is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

It is a fact that pastors carry this resolution into all of their other church work. When they go to build colleges, church-houses and parson-ages, or collect mission funds, they come right out and say to the people, "we must succeed," and success always follows such honest efforts. Is that kind of church work not of God, and, therefore, holy? I think it is. God will bless determined effort on the part of his people. This is "that faith that takes no denial;" the kind I have always heard the old folks pray for.

Revivals, the greatest of all church work, must not be left to take care of themselves in a sort of hap-hazard way. Christ says, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." If our pastors will vote this resolution unanimously and carry it into effect, perhaps the necessity for evangelists will come to a close. God wants the perishing multitudes aroused to a sense of their duty and led to Christ, who alone can save.

As to "multitudes of unconverted people in the church," I am sorry of it. But evangelists are not altogether responsible for it. That there are unconverted people in the church is true, but that is no modern-day occurrence altogether. It has always been true, even in the days of our Lord on earth. "He saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment."

I heard an intelligent old steward several years ago, in a revival, while giving in his experience, say: "Brethren, I have been in the Methodist Church forty years, but was never converted till this meeting." I don't know who took him into the Church. What pastor or evangelist can know absolutely when a soul is regenerated? We have to receive their testimony in the light of the Word. Our Discipline directs that a sinner be received on the condition of "profession to have a desire to flee the wrath to come." This has worked well all along. I stand by the old doctrine, "Ye must be born again." But I declare I have gone to places to hold meetings where evangelists had never been and found spiritually dead churches, inconsistent officials and unconverted people in the church—at least, that was the testimony of pastors, and I believe it. I have asked, "Brother, what is the matter here?" The answer was: "Well, the people, including the most of my young people, are in the church, but not converted." Then I have asked, "What is the cause?" Answer: "I can't account for it, only on the basis that our people don't live religious in their homes. They have become so worldly-minded that I think if they ever were converted they are ashamed to own it. None of my people have family prayers, nor pray in public. Consequently they are spiritually dead. Many of them do not support the pastor or pay to missions." I have asked, "Did these people ever have an evangelist here?" No, they never saw one."

I have helped our pastors in most all sorts of charges from towns of 20,000 population, down to the country church in the backwoods, and, candidly, to the extent of my knowledge and observation, I have invariably found the condition of things as described by Brother Lewis worse in those communities where they have never had an evangelist. I do not undertake to defend all of the so-called evangelists. There are some whom I do not indorse, but I indorse every preacher in good standing in the church who has the salvation of souls and the welfare of the church at heart, though he follows helping pastors in their revivals.

I contend that the next General Conference (and Brother Lewis is a delegate) should arrange to utilize, if possible, more advantageously the power in modern evangelism, just as the scientists have harnessed the power of electricity. The spirit of evangelism is the great need of our modern-day pastors. They would take the world for Christ. The thing to do is to get the unconverted people that are in the church converted. To do this the revival must begin in the ministry and among the best church people. For one, I am willing to step down and out if it will make things any better.

After doing my best by much hard labor in all godly sincerity to help build up the church and save sinners, I am tired of being criticised by good men. May God send us a widespread revival.

METHODIST HOSPITALS.

Some years ago I called at a Catholic Hospital to see a Methodist minister, who was ill, and found him lying in the charity ward of that hospital. This made a lasting impression on me, and while I congratulate the Catholics for their enterprise in this great Christian work, I do not think we, as Methodists, should stand idle and permit them to do our part in caring for the needy and sick.

Therefore I have prepared the following memorial to our General Conference, which I hope will result in the accomplishment of much good.

Six or eight hospitals should be properly located in the large and growing cities through our Southern Methodism. They should be modern and fully up to date in every respect.

We should not make the fatal mistake of placing one in each of our church conferences, or in smaller cities, because the pay patients in a great measure defray the expenses of hospitals, and they will always go to the larger cities in order to secure the best medical skill. Then, too, the railroad facilities of the larger cities are within reach of more people.

I think this work, in a large measure, should be turned over to our Woman's Home Mission Societies. I believe the ladies would take great interest in the work, for, like our orphanages, it appeals to the hearts of everyone. Then again I think we can find enough consecrated men and women in our church to do the nursing with but little, if any compensation, for their services, provided they are reasonably certain that they will be well cared for in their old age.

Connectional papers will please copy and any encouragement by letter through the New Orleans and Nashville Christian Advocates or direct to me will be appreciated.

JOHN H. SHERARD,
Sherard, Miss.

To the bishops and members of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Birmingham, Ala.

Dear Fathers and Brethren:—

We, your petitioners, respectfully represent and show,

First—That there is a great and growing demand upon the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to establish and maintain hospitals for the treatment of the sick and injured within the bounds of Southern Methodism.

Second—That the locating, establishing and maintaining such hospitals will require the ripest wisdom and most careful forethought of our best informed men, to see that such hospitals are located at such points as will meet the needs of the greatest number, and, at the same time, enable those in charge of said hospitals to secure the highest type of skill in the medical profession for the treatment of such patients as are sent to Southern Methodist hospitals.

Third—We, therefore, memorialize this General Conference to appoint a Board of Trustees to be known as the Hospital Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who shall be vested with full and complete control and management of such hospitals and prescribe the territorial limits or districts which are to build and maintain the same.

Fourth—Said Board of Trustees shall have full power to pass all laws for the building, maintaining and controlling of such hospitals.

Fifth—Said Board of Trustees shall be composed of an equal number of clerical and lay members from different parts of Southern Methodism.

Sixth—Should this General Conference differ from us as to the manner of launching and setting on foot said enterprise we memorialize the Conference to take such steps as will secure and establish and maintain such hospitals within the bounds of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Respectfully submitted.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Conference will meet in the city of Jackson, at the Methodist Church, March 8, at 9 a.m. If anyone wishes to apply to the General Board of Church Extension for a loan or donation, the application must be in the hands of the Committee at that time for approval.

Someone has said that "the Woman's Home Mission Society is the right arm of success to the pastor," and surely no sensible pastor would consent to be without a Woman's Home Mission Society if it is at all possible to have one. The helpfulness of the society to the pastor depends largely upon the local work committee, of which the First Vice President is Chairman. An active committee, gifted with common sense and not with the habit of procrastination, can render invaluable aid to the pastor by visiting strangers and newly received church members, by keeping him informed as to the sick, by brightening the church with flowers, etc. An inactive, do-it-to-morrow committee is a delusion and a snare, but one that will co-operate with the pastor in all local church work will prove of inestimable benefit.

THE NEXT BOARD MEETING.

The twentieth annual session of the board will be held in Asheville, North Carolina, in April. Louisiana's representative on the board is Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Lafayette. Mrs. W. E. Boggs, of Shreveport, alternate. Speedy and faithful concert of action is urged on the part of auxiliary officers and district secretaries in regard to reports. Especially are the auxiliary superintendents of Press Work requested to make a report of their work that the annual report of this department may be as accurate as possible.

IN TEXAS.

There are five Southern Methodist deaconesses at work in Texas and in the following places: Galveston, pastor's assistant, Miss Elizabeth Taylor; El Paso, pastor's assistant, Miss Louise Whitman; Waco, Rebecca Sparks; Deaconess Home, Miss May Lockard; Houston, city missionary, Miss May Wilson; Dallas, Mission Home and Training School, Miss Elizabeth Davis.

AT SCARRITT.

There are thirty young women at the Scarritt Bible and Training School who are home mission students. Miss Gibson, principal of the school, says of them: "Taken all together, they are a very fine and very promising body of young women."

On Sunday, December 24, at the Scarritt School, Miss Louise Whitman, of the Holston Conference, was consecrated as a deaconess by Bishop Hendrix. This makes the fifteenth deaconess set apart since the creation of the office in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

SOME MATTERS OF CHURCH HISTORY.

In the Advocate for Jan. 25 appears an interesting editorial headed "A Call for an Appointing Power," in which reference is made to an article in a Presbyterian paper, "Let us Have Bishop-Moderators," and another article from a Baptist paper, "Shall We Have Baptist Bishops?"

Just what the Presbyterians may do, I know not; they have been trying for years to bring preachers and churches together, and so reduce the number of unemployed preachers and of vacant pulpits; but it is more than doubtful if the Baptists will try another experiment with bishops.

In the "High-Churchman Disarmed," page 78 et seq., Dr. W. P. Harrison says: "The experiment of the Baptist churches in Virginia, in the last century, demonstrates that episcopacy is an impracfical system of government for a large portion of the Lord's people. For several years prior to 1776 the Baptists of Virginia discussed the expediency of adopting an episcopal form of government. The discussion was thorough, and the conclusion arrived at in 1776 by the General Association of Virginia Baptists."

"By a unanimous vote they declared that episcopacy had been established in the Church by Christ the Head, and that the office of bishop was now in use in Christ's Church." Having determined this question, they proceeded to establish the office, and to fill it by appointment. [See Howell's Early Baptists in Virginia, page 107.] The Rev. Samuel Harris was elected the first bishop, and all that part of Virginia lying south of the James River was declared to be his diocese. In the autumn of the same year the Association was called together, and they proceeded to elect two more bishops—John Waller and Elijah Craig. The diocese of these co-adjutor bishops was all of the State lying north of the James River. * * * They were not enacting a comedy, but they were in earnest, and went into the harvest fields of Virginia as regularly-constituted bishops of the Baptist Episcopal Church." This lasted only a year.

In the Advocate for Feb. 1 is a leader, "In Geometrical Progression." The editor punctures some bubbles set afloat by the editor of the Baptist and Reflector, of Nashville, Tenn. This article I have read with no little pleasure, and would indorse it in toto but for one or two slips of the editorial pen—either Dr. Folk's or Dr. Boswell's, I know not which. If Dr. Folk counts from the origin of Baptists in the United States—i.e., at Providence, R. I., in 1639—

"Dating the existence of Methodism in an organized form from 1739, 100 years after Roger Williams organized the first Baptist Church in America," etc.

Roger Williams never organized a Baptist Church in Providence, R. I., in 1639 or anywhere else or at any other time. He was never a Baptist. He was never immersed, and never immersed anyone else. He was a clergyman, regularly ordained, in the Church of England; became dissatisfied with infant baptism, and, with Ezekiel Holloman and others, established a "Believers' Baptist Church." They were really anabaptists. Their baptizing was not by immersion.

Some years later, when Lucar "brought immersion" to America, and (1644), through the influence of John Clarke, immersed the Providence members, Roger Williams withdrew from the Church, because he was not satisfied with the authority of Lucar and Clarke, or the manner of their baptizing, and died a member of no church whatever. Dr. Armitage, in his "History of the Baptists," hints at these facts; and Dr. Whitsitt, in his book, "A Question in Baptist History," demonstrates them to be facts. [See Appendix, page 147, et seq.

T. L. MELLEN.

[Note—The editor may be mistaken as to Roger Williams, but the matter as stated in our editorial is commonly accepted by Baptists. McClintock and Strong, in their Cyclopedia, distinctly state that Roger Williams "having adopted the belief in baptism of adults by immersion only, he was baptised by Ezekiel Holloman, a layman, in March, 1639; and then he baptised Holloman and about ten others." They also say that he "organized the church" in accordance with his ideas of pure democracy. It was this church that is regarded as the first Baptist Church in America. We may be in error as to facts, but our pen did not slip in making the statement.—Editor.]

THE PRAYING BOY.

Years ago I had in my charge a widow, with a large number of children. I often visited the family. The children all had a decidedly religious turn of mind. I frequently conversed with the eldest son, who was lacking some five or six years of his majority. I urged upon him some plan of religious thought that would keep his mind in communion with God and companionship with his Heavenly Father. His mother was poor, and he had to work much on the little farm. Not a great while after I left the charge the mother died, and the children were scattered. This boy was hired to a farmer to do plowing. The farmer, in passing about, observed that the boy, as he thought, was constantly talking to himself, and he determined to learn, if he could, what the boy was talking so constantly to himself about. So he concealed himself near where the boy was passing, as he followed the plow. By this he learned that the boy was praying. Instead of talking to himself, he was talking to his Heavenly Father. Instead of idle song and foolish hallowing, as I have often heard from the plow-boy, he was occupied in mind as the most estimable character could be. His employer did not turn him off for it. DUCKWORTH.

HELEN'S LESSON.

Mrs. Dorsey's school room was exceedingly quiet. Mrs. Dorsey herself seemed to feel this unusual silence, and so looked up from her writing. There appeared to be nothing unusual going on, however. Twenty girls, in as many different attitudes, some studying, some looking idly through the windows, and others half asleep. It was just that most difficult time of the session, three o'clock in the afternoon. School would close in half an hour, and who would be industrious during the last half hour?

At least so thought Daisy Martin, as she made queer looking marks with her pencil. Then she gazed about her and took mental observations of her neighbors. On her right sat Edna Hurlbut, industriously cleaning one of her many rings with a piece of ink-spotted chamois.

"Edna has everything very nice," thought Daisy, "with a father who gives her plenty of money, and beautiful clothes. Yet, after all, I never saw her really pleased over any of her things. There is always an 'if' in Edna's pleasure. Then, too, she never can get her lessons. Something like myself in that respect."

These little neighborly comments passed, Daisy turned her eyes to the left and looked critically at "Mrs. Dorsey's Enigma," as her neighbor called her. A slight girl, with luminous brown eyes, and a certain nobility in her face that made all the other girls respect her. No one ever thought of offering any adverse criticism upon Helen Parker. Her shabby brown dress might have been the finest silk, for all the others cared. And even Edna Hurlbut, the most selfish and self-centered of all the pupils, found there was something about Helen of which she stood in awe.

When she first entered the school in September, the girls were full of eager curiosity, but Mrs. Dorsey answered their questions in such a way that further talk was impossible. "Helen Parker is my friend, and a very clever girl. I hope you will all do your best to make her perfectly at home here."

She did not tell them that because of her kindness of heart, she was giving the ambitious young girl an education. Helen had slipped into her Sunday school class during the summer and it was then Mrs. Dorsey first knew and loved her. But the girls in the school did not, I am sorry to say, make the new-comer as much at home as they might have done.

"She never joins us," they would say in excuse; but the trouble was that they never joined her. So, while at recess the others talked together, Helen sat shy and silent, reading or studying.

"We can never know her, so what is the use of trying?" said Edna Hurlbut, indolently.

But it so happened that Edna herself was the first to know her, and Helen the one to rouse Edna from her selfishness.

The silence in the school room was broken at last. Mrs. Dorsey rose from her seat.

"Young ladies, I am going to give you a test in mental arithmetic to-morrow. I saw some of your parents to-day and they promised to attend. The test will be conducted on the usual plan."

Mrs. Dorsey did not hear the inward groans which greeted her speech, but she saw and smiled at the outward looks of dismay. For who in the world could like those tests? Edna's definition of one was, "Linken torture long drawn out."

"It was this way," she explained once. "We all stand like so many soldiers for inspection. Mrs. Dorsey then begins to call out numbers as fast as she can, telling us to add, divide, subtract or multiply. The first one with the right answer takes her seat, and the others sigh and wonder who will be the last standing to give evidence of her stupidity. And nine times out of ten, I am the last standing," she concluded ruefully.

Promptly at half-past 1 on the following day, the test began. Mrs. Hurlbut was there looking proudly at Edna; and catching that look, Helen Parker knew the beautifully dressed woman must be Edna's mother.

Every one expected that Helen would give the first right answer. But no! To-day she never raised her hand at all; she seemed to be very slow.

The class dwindled down. Already sixteen girls were in their seats. Then eighteen, and the two standing were Edna and Helen. Mrs. Dorsey seemed slightly annoyed at Helen's slowness. She had so often spoken to the ladies of the girl's bright mind. Her next question came. A most simple one. Edna passed to her seat. She had not, after all, had the humiliation of being the very last.

"What was the trouble with Helen to-day?" every girl asked.

But no one knew save Edna. Like a flash the truth came to her: Helen did not wish to have her pained before her mother and her mother's friends, so she had purposely refrained from giving the right answers. Edna said nothing to the others about her thought, but that afternoon she did what she nor none of the others had ever done before—walked home with Helen. She was so kind to the lonely girl, that the way to the cottage seemed very short. Then when they reached the gate, Helen said quietly:

"Is it too late for you to come in?"

She knew that Edna's home was beautiful with all the beauty wealth could give. But on the other hand, and Helen's cheeks glowed as she thought of it, her own home was made beautiful by a power far greater than wealth—the power of love.

"Of course it is not too late," Edna answered. And then for the first time she stepped inside Helen Parker's home, and as she did so, she dropped from her shoulders the ugly mantle of selfishness and took in only her shining self. She never noticed the shabby furniture nor the few chairs. But she did notice Tom and Mrs. Parker, and was so sweet to both that when she went she seemed to take a bit of sunlight with her.

That short visit to the happy home made a change in the usually thoughtless girl. She noticed the love between Helen and her mother, and felt that heretofore she had been wanting in that respect toward her own mother. She saw there, in the little home the dignity and beauty of true love, and then she found the clue to Helen's sweetness of temper.

She was very thoughtful all that evening, and once, when her mother spoke to her, she kissed her for answer and said softly:

"I mean to be a better daughter, mother dear, after this."

A CURE FOR STINGINESS.

A small church was sadly in want of general repairs and a meeting was being held to raise funds for that purpose.

The minister having said that to do the work $500 would be required, a very wealthy (and proverbially stingy) member of the congregation rose and said he would give one dollar. Just as he sat down a lump of plaster fell from the ceiling and hit him upon the head, whereupon he arose hastily and called out that he had made a mistake—He would give fifty dollars. That was too much for an enthusiast present, who, forgetful of everything, called out fervently, "O Lord, hit him again!"

The Christian Life.

HOW CHRIST MAKES SOMETHING OF US.

An English preacher recently used the following illustration: "Once there was a brier growing in a ditch, and there came along a gardener with his spade. As he dug around it and lifted it out, the brier said to itself, 'What is he doing that for? Does not he know that I am only an old worthless brier?' Then the gardener took it into the garden and planted it amid his flowers while the brier said, 'What a mistake he has made, planting an old brier like myself among such rose-trees as these!' But the gardener came once more with his keen-edged knife, made a slit in the brier, and, as we say in England, budded it with a rose, and by and by, when summer came, lovely roses were blooming on that old brier. Then the gardener said, 'Your beauty is not due to that which came out, but to that which I put into you.'"

This is just what God is doing all the time with poor human lives. They seem to be of no use, with no hope that they will ever be of use. Then Christ takes them in hand, pours his love upon them, lifts them up out of the dust, puts something of his own life into them, and, by and by, they begin to be like him, little branches of his own beautiful life.—Epworth Herald.

FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT.

Many confound the purpose and fruit of the Spirit's indwelling to the distress of their souls. They confuse fruit with gifts. When they receive the Spirit they expect to be endowed with miraculous powers for service. Often it is a gift of eloquence for which they look, and more frequently, success in certain forms of evangelism is expected. The miracle of Pentecost has riveted attention upon extraordinary and spectacular demonstrations of power, and of man to look for words and signs of the Spirit, rather than the fruit of his presence. Gifts are not always a sign of grace. We read of some who did many mighty works in the name of Christ who were disowned of him at the last. The Corinthians abounded in gifts, but were lacking in fruit.

Saintliness in character is more important than success in service. George Whitfield had more converts than Samuel Rutherford, but the church with one consent is more impressed by Rutherford's saintliness than by Whitefield's service. The fullness of the Spirit will quicken every natural faculty, but his gifts are given "according to every man's ability." All are not called to service, and certainly all are not called to the same kind of service, but the call to goodliness is without respect of persons. The gifts of the Spirit he divides severally as he will, but the fruit of the Spirit is possible to all. We can not all be gifted, but we can all be good, and goodness is the greatest possession in God or man, in heaven or on earth. The Spirit of God dwells in us to make us Godlike.

Instead of striving after sensational results in service, our first care should be the perfecting of character, the cultivation of the whole man in the grace of Christ. Our only concern is to do the will of God, to glorify him by being fruitful in that to which we are called and chosen. Let those who fear because they can not serve in the ministry of the kingdom or stand in the strenuous places of the field chafe no more. Fruit is more precious to God than heroics. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." It is fruit he seeks.—London Recorder.

DEACONESS WORK OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Perhaps no action of the last General Conference caused wider interest than did the creation of the office and work of the deaconess. Like every new movement it had the ardent support of many, and yet those who followed the debates can not forget that there was positive, clearly expressed opposition. After almost four years some are asking if the movement has been a success, and is it an established need of the church?

A review of the movement may hold interest for many. It must be remembered that the whole development of the work was committed to the Woman's Home Mission Society with no provision for the funds necessary to prosecute it. Plans had to be made for its government; printed matter calling attention of the church, especially the young women, to this new field of service, had to be made and scattered abroad, and ways and means devised to bear the cost of training and who might be willing to become deaconesses. It is needless to say that time and labor were involved before we were able to accomplish this.

While the effort to shape a policy was being made, letters from all parts of the church calling for deaconesses came to our office. Within three weeks after General Conference adjourned several applications for nurse deaconesses and pastors' assistants were placed on file. Of course there were no deaconesses ready made, they had to be made. This prompt call clearly proved that the General Conference had not antedated the demand for trained women workers in the service of the church. One year from adjournment of the Conference six deaconesses were set apart, all of whom had been prepared at some duly accredited training school. Since then seven others have been consecrated, and one transferred to us from the M. E. Church, making a total of fifteen to whom we have granted certificates. Of these one has died, another withdrawn on account of failing health while a third has married. The twelve deaconesses now at work are employed as follows:

Pastors' assistants, 3. In Home Mission Schools, 2. In City Mission Work, 6. In Foreign Field (Corea), 1.

It is probable that nine others will be consecrated in April at the next meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Mission, thus making the number twenty-four within the quadrennium. Compared with the great demand, this growth seems painfully slow, and yet when we recall that we have had to create sentiment before conviction could take hold of our young people and that this number is not small. This scholastic year there have been thirty-one young women at Scarritt Bible and Training School preparing for the Home Mission work, most of whom hope to become deaconesses, so that the next quadrennium will no doubt make a most gratifying record.

It is of interest to know that the growth of the deaconess movement has been more rapid with us in the first quadrennium than in any other church in America save the M. E. Church. The Baptist Deaconess Society of New York consecrated three in the first four years of its existence; the Methodist Church of Canada reported only six licenced deaconesses at the close of the first four years, while the Presbyterian Church, North, which created the office in 1905, hope to set apart their first eight in the early spring.

Our future growth depends much upon the help given the movement by our pastors, as they come in first and closest touch with the young women. Many of our young people take up their life work at the pastor's suggestion, and if he is ready to show the great need of these trained workers he can direct their attention and thought to this field of service. The deaconess movement is one which calls for co-operation between the forces of the churches and can only have the broadest success under this condition.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

All applications for aid to the General Board of Church Extension at its approaching meeting in April must have their applications in the hands of their respective Conference boards of church extension by March 1 in order that they may be approved and graded by the Conference Board and forwarded to the General Board by April 1. Blank applications will be furnished by the undersigned upon request.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1906.

One who overestimates himself is sure to be rated considerably under par by his neighbors. There is a scriptural caution against such egoism.

A man who understands, and accepts, and abides the doctrines of his church is safely anchored. He will not be blown about by any wind, no matter how hard it strikes.

All goodness has its root in grace. What men call natural goodness would be impossible without divine influence and assistance. "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven.

Some preachers reach the "dead line" in the ministry before they get fairly started. Having started, like the man in Post Oak circuit who, having "received the gospel on tick,continue ticks on the gospel" all their lives.

A man whose ideal Christian is of such a lofty character as to be well nigh unattainable is wholly incompetent to sympathize with a sincere and struggling soul who sometimes faints and falls. But Jesus can. He "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

One who determines to get gain regardless of methods and of the interests of his fellow-beings is not only anti-Christ in spirit, but is preparing to pierce himself through with sorrows in this world, and to be drowned in perdition in the next—and millions who know the danger are taking the risk.

People who attend church for no other purpose than to hear the music are always impatient during the sermon, no matter how short it is. The great body of church-goers are always ready to hear, and to sit quietly for a long time, provided the sermon is worth hearing. If it is not the most patient and saintly get tired.

Every Methodist preacher ordained to the eldership vows in the presence of his brethren to "banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines." It ill becomes one with this vow upon him to discount the orthodoxy of his Church, and parade himself before the public as an "advanced thinker." It gives him notoriety, but does not enhance his usefulness.

There is not another set of men on earth like Methodist preachers. They go where they are sent, whether the living be scant or plentiful. The living is a secondary consideration. And man for man, they are as independent and self-respecting as any class on earth. They are in bondage to no man, but are servants of the church for Christ's sake.

THE COMING REVIVAL.

That a revival is needed is apparent. The slightest glance at the state of morals as evidenced by the conduct of men, in the church and out, will satisfy any thoughtful man of this. We dare say that professing Christians in general, are not conscious of any loss of faith in God or the efficacy of grace. But their daily living shows that they have departed from the practice of religion—that kind of practice necessary to keep alive the vital connection between God and the soul. They may hold to the creed of the church and support its institutions, and in common with their neighbors exercise a good degree of benificence. The importance of these things cannot be over estimated, but, as important as they are, they avail nothing in the work of personal salvation if mightier things are neglected.

What if a man does believe all the doctrines of his church, if his faith does not go further and take hold of God, and enter into, and maintain Christian experience? What if a man does give his money to pay the preacher, keep up the services of his church, or to send the gospel into heathen lands, if he deliberately and habitually keeps away from the stated services of the sanctuary? Bidding God-speed to others who are doing the work of the church will avail a man nothing while he lives in open violation of the rules of Christian living. These questions indicate serious shortcomings and misdoings on the part of professed Christians. We would bring no railing accusation against our brethren, but when we so often hear that the church is receiving many unconverted persons into membership, that men by the hundreds habitually neglect public worship, and that the Holy Sabbath is being constantly desecrated by church members, we feel sure that if the evils complained of are not widespread they are at least common enough to attract attention and do harm.

And looking a little further into the subject we feel constrained to say that the vast amount of crime—much of it the outgrowth of the liquor traffic—the unchecked and unbridled speculation, commercial and other forms of graft, and the social disorders that disgrace our country, especially our cities, are largely due to the lax moral sentiment prevailing among Christians. The churches in their legislative and advisory bodies are sound and aggressive on all moral issues, but the churches do not, and cannot, control the sentiments of individual members. Otherwise the whole body would be a unit against all forms of evil.

It is frequently charged that the church is responsible for prevailing evils—the liquor traffic for one. We have resented the charge as often as we have met it. The church cannot be responsible for that to which it is opposed, and which it steadily combats. But while this is true, it is a fact that if every church member in his individual capacity would set himself against any form of evil, that evil would soon cease to exist—the liquor evil would be driven from our land. We want a revival that will reach these backslidden and indifferent church members—a revival that will not only awaken them from their perilous state, but one that will create in them an intense and yearning desire for the salvation of their fellowmen.

It is hardly worth while to undertake the work of saving grown men and women, hardened in sin, until the membership of the church gets right and brings forth fruit meet for repentance. We might possibly succeed in making converts among the children—especially those who have been trained in the Sunday school—but even in this, the work will be largely counteracted in the future, if fathers and mothers fail to set before them consistent and godly lives. And this leads us to say that we need a revival of family religion, an increase in the number of family altars, and increased attention to the religious instruction of children.

We do not believe that the day of revivals has past; nor that it is out of date to preach the primary and essential doctrines of grace. The methods of conducting revival services is not essential—in some places the old-fashioned mourners' bench will do. In other places modern methods will suffice, but whether one or the other, conversion is the end to be gained. In order to do this, if the conversion is to be evangelical and sound, it must be brought about through an intelligent apprehension of gospel teaching. The Holy Spirit does not save sinners until they are brought under conviction, and repent and believe. We have known persons to profess conversion, who, so far as anybody could judge, were not convicted, and never repented. Of course, we could not doubt their sincerity, they simply professed all they were expected to profess under the hold-up-hand process of salvation. No wonder the church is being filled with unconverted people.

In the revivals of the year now beginning may the Lord give us gospel preachers with pentecostal power, and add to the church such as may be saved.

A QUEER KIND OF CONVERSION.

The young King of Spain is to be married some time in the near future. The bride-to-be, a Princess, is a Protestant. The King is a Roman Catholic—not a very pious one, if all accounts are true, but still he is one of "the faithful." For reasons of State the queen must be of the same religion as the King. This, of course, the Princess understood when she engaged to marry Alphonso, and she must be of that religion before the marriage takes place. Hence for some time past she has been undergoing the process of conversion. Just what the process is we do not know, but we take it for granted that she has been supplied with Roman Catholic instructors, and that they have been busy catechising her, getting her ready for baptism and confirmation, and whatever else may be necessary to make her a good Roman Catholic. The strange thing about this is that these things are done to convert her, when in fact, the conversion was complete when she made up her mind to unite with the Roman Catholic Church. What followed was only necesary for formal union with the church.

Now it is given out that the Pope has required the Princess to vow that she accepts the faith of her own volition and not for reasons of State. This seems to be an unreasonable requirement. Possibly the Princess would rather unite with the Roman Catholic Church than miss the opportunity of becoming a queen, but if she should speak her mind she would doubtless say that she had no idea of giving up her Protestant religion until there was held out to her the prospect of wearing a crown. Being a Protestant, she could not wear the crown of Spain. She must surrender her faith. She consented and is now being converted.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. L. Hunter, of Slidell, spent a day or two in the city last week, and preached for Rev. T. S. Brown at Tchoupitoulas Mission Sunday morning and evening.

Rev. N. F. Joyner is succeeding well at Alexandria. He has received into the church six memebers since conference, and has sixteen more applicants to receive at an early date. The prospect before him is fine.

Mrs. L. C. John, of Nashville, has announced the engagement of her daughter, Mary Vaughn, to Rev. Henry Beach Carre, professor in Vanderbilt University. The marriage will take place in West End church, Nashville, the 22 of March.

Rev. O. P. Armour, of Greenwood Springs, is pleased with his charge, and prospering. He is just now putting the finishing touches on a new parsonage, having spent on it about $400 since Conference, and he is doing some special work in behalf of the Advocate.

We acknowledge an invitation to the marriage of Mr. George L. Jones to Miss Mary Wier Tucker, daughter of Mrs. H. R. Tucker, of Booneville, Miss. The marriage was appointed for the evening of Feb. 14. We wish the happy couple a long and useful life, and all the blessings of grace and providence.

Rev. D. W. Abbb, just entering the second year's work at Crawfordsville, Miss., has before him a fine prospect. The work is far in advance of last year. Our new presiding elder, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, he says, is making good proof of his ministry. Our people are very much pleased with him. We expect a good year on our work and on the district.

Main Street, Water Valley, prospers under the care of Rev. J. H. Holder. The stewards have advanced the salary two hundred dollars, improvements have been made on church and parsonage, and twenty persons have recently been added to the membership. "Love, unity and harmony prevail," and the preacher is expecting a great year.

Accompanying a business letter from Brother R. T. Nolen, of Trenton, Miss., was this encouraging note from his charge: "Since I have been on Trenton circuit I have made eighty-nine pastoral visits; have visited seventy-one different homes; secured fifty-nine subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and four renewals. We are now planning for our revival meetings. Pray for our success in this great work."

In addition to words of an encouraging character to the editor, Rev. W. C. Lester, of Guntown, sends the following interesting items from his charge: "I have had a very cordial reception on my work. We just finished paying for new pews in the church here that cost us over $400, and the ladies have money in hand to put a new carpet in. We hope to do some other needed repairs. I have received five in the church since conference. Could you not come up and spend one Sunday with us? My old recording steward book shows that your father preached here. I think about 1840. Brother Harris, our presiding elder, is putting in good time since he has gotten up from his long spell of sickness."

Hon. A. H. George, son of the late Senator George, of Mississippi, and one of the best known men in that State, died at his home in Carrollton on the 13th inst. For many years he had been identified with the State's interests, and was in all respects a public spirited man, and for several years was a member of the State Senate. He was also for years an active worker in the Church and frequently elected delegate to the Annual Conference, and in 1808 was a representative in the General Conference. His last illness, we learn from the Carrollton Conservative, was of about a month's duration, during which time he suffered much, bodily and mentally. He leaves a sorrowing widow and a large family of children, to whom may the Lord minister grace and comfort.

IN MEMORIAM.

The Rev. C. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference, sustained an irreparable loss in the death of his estimable wife, in Winona, Miss., Jan. 19th, 1900. She was a model woman in every sense of the word. The writer of this tribute, having known her personally and intimately for many years and having spent so many happy hours in her refined and hospitable home, desires to place a few flowers on her newly made grave in token of his appreciation of her many womanly virtues. Our purpose in so doing will be to notice Sister Bachman in three different and distinct relations in which she figured so prominently and usefully and through so many years.

First, as a wife: In this intimate and honorable relation she was all that could be reasonably expected of any one; she was devoted to her husband and delighted in making home inviting and attractive. It was often said of her, by those who

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Whatsoever Christ saith unto you, do it: this is the sum of all my writing.—John Ruskin.

"You have been the best mother—I believe the best woman in the world. I thank you for your indulgence to me, and beg forgiveness for all I have done ill, and for all I have omitted to do well."—Dr. Johnson.

It is by and for this that womanhood has been so deeply and reverently enshrined in the heart of humanity. And it is through the influence of the mother that this reverence for womanhood is transformed into reverence for the individual woman.

The richest blessing of human association is to be found in the tender ministration of the mother's hand and heart. No child falls too low for the tender touch of her hand or passes into sin too far for the sympathetic yearning of her heart. More than all else in human life the mother love has caught the beauty, the richness, the tender compassion of the Father's love.

"A mother's boy"—no more suggestive compliment can be paid a boy than this. It speaks the tender, considerate, gentle man, pure of lip and true of heart. Mark the man who is thoughtful of the needs and feelings of others, who in the sick room is as tender and helpful as a woman. He, too, was a mother's boy and bears her image ever in his heart and character.

How often do we look upon God as our last and feeblest resource. We go to Him because we have nowhere else to go. And then we learn that the storms of life have driven us, not upon the rocks, but into thed esired haven; that we have been compelled, as to the last remaining, so to the best, the only, the central help, the causing cause of all the helps to which we had turned aside as nearer and better.—George MacDonald.

Would it not be better to leave to-morrow with God? That is what is troubling men; to-morrow's temptations, to-morrow's difficulties, to-morrow's burdens, to-morrow's duties. Martin Luther, in his autobiography, says: "I have one preacher that I love better than any other on earth; it is my little tame robin, who preaches to me daily. I put his crumbs upon my window sill, especially at night. He hops on to the sill when he wants his supply and takes as much as he desires to satisfy his need. From thence he always hops to a little tree close by and lifts up his voice to God and sings his carol of praise and gratitude, tucks his little head under his wing and goes fast to sleep, and leaves to-morrow to look after itself. He is the best preacher that I have on earth."—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTION.

The Student Volunteer Convention will be held for the first time in its history in the South Feb. 28-March 4 in Nashville, Tenn.

This is to be a delegated body, and largely for students. It will be impossible, on account of a limited space, to provide seats for those who have not delegate's cards. These cards can only be secured upon application to Student Volunteer Headquarters, Bancroft Building, No. 3 W. 29th street, New York City.

As it seems to be the general impression that the Convention will be open to the public, it is thought well to make this statement for fear many who desire to attend may go to the unnecessary expense of a trip to Nashville, and then be disappointed on account of failure to get a seat.

GUARD HEALTH

Every woman should see that the periodical function is kept in a healthy condition. The way is to take an occasional dose of Wine of Cardui.

Every woman is subject to conditions which bring on female weakness. Wine of Cardui gives women strength for all the duties of life. It gives them strong nerves and freedom from pains.

Wine of Cardui not only cures but guards the health. The organs quickly respond to the healing vegetable ingredients of which Wine of Cardui is composed. A healthy woman does well to take this medicine on approaching her periodical sickness. Wine of Cardui cures the worst cases of prolonged female troubles and has cured thousands of them quickly and completely in the privacy of home.

CHICORA, MISS., May 1, 1902.

Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught is a sure cure for all female diseases. I recommend your medicines to all my friends everywhere I go. Five months ago I could not walk across the house without great pain but I am well again. I have only taken four bottles of Wine of Cardui but feel better than I have felt in two years.

THE SALOON IN THE SOUTH.

For a decade a remarkable change has been going on in the South. The manifestations have been local, but the results bear the semblance of a great movement. After the war the South had almost as many drinking places as it had stores. To-day more than one-half the counties below the Mason and Dixon's line prohibit the sale of liquor. For instance, almost 60 per cent of Texas, nearly 80 per cent of Georgia, 90 per cent of Mississippi, and all of Tennessee except eight cities have voted out the saloon, while even in Kentucky forty-seven counties are now under prohibition rule.

The same quality of grit, endurance, fidelity and cheerfulness which made splendid records in war are bravely at work solving the problems of peace. In most cases the liquor question has been handled as a plain business proposition. The saloon balked enterprise, and kept communities poor; worse still, it played havoc with the individual. In more than four hundred counties the good citizenship of all parties arose and banished it.

Behold the benefits. This year the South has more money than it has ever known, more money for spending; so much of it, in fact, that three of the great cities of the North have formed special business organizations to secure Southern trade, while the cities of the West have met the competition by the most alluring inducements. But the larger gain is in the general uplift of the population. Despite the occasional outbreaks of crime—in most cases where the saloon still exists—the whole trend of the South is steadily toward wise and safe conservatism, and the evolution of Southern personality is producing broad-minded Americans who live clean lives, do good work, and carry no chips on their shoulders.—New Work Weekly Witness.

TEMPERANCE TAUGHT BY THE RABBIS IN A PARABLE.

The liquor question is a problem confronting the people everywhere, irrespective of race or nationality. Solomon has laid down some precepts, not always followed by example, about the cup which is red and which at the end "stingeth like an adder."

Among the Jews, wine was recognized as a blessing from God, and its moderate use was enjoined as a religious act. That was before the days of distilleries. The use of the pure juice of the grape was not prohibited, and the rabbis ever warned and exhorted against intemperance. In a commentary, dating back to the eleventh century, they left what might be called a temperance parable, teaching effectively and in a quaint way the origin and the end of intemperance. It was found in Midrash Tanchuma and Yalkut, and is as follows:

When Noah, after the flood, was planting his vineyard, Satan came and asked him what he was doing. "I am planting a vineyard," was the reply, "the luscious fruit of which shall rejoice the heart of men." "I will help you," said the evil one, "and will furnish you that which will make your vineyard thrive."

Noah accepting the offer, thereupon Satan brought a sheep, a lion, a swine and an ape. He slew these, and, saturating the spot upon which the vine was to be planted with the mixed blood of the four animals, he said joyfully: "Now has the man what he deserves; and henceforth he shall with the wine incorporate within him the characteristics of the beasts the blood of which I have mingled with the soil. If he drinks a small quantity, he shall be as mild and gentle as a lamb. Let him drink more, and he shall become overbearing and raging like the lion. Let him continue to drink, and he shall be equal to the swine, wallowing in the mire. Should he, however, repeatedly get drunk, then will he be like unto the ape, making himself ridiculous and babbling nonsense." It has been so since that day.—Rev. Julius Magath, in Sunday School Visitor.

DATA WANTED.

Mr. Editor: Mrs. McDonald, of Nashville, has asked me to get data for making a missionary map of South Louisiana, to be used in a missionary exhibit of the Woman's Home Mission Society at Birmingham next May.

I hereby ask the editor and readers of the Advocate to give me all possible facts pertaining to the nationality and religious adherence of the people south of Alexandria, or a line separating north and south Louisiana, preferably giving the facts by parishes.

Those who possess knowledge of the situation can render a valuable service to the Home Mission Society in becoming better acquainted with the foreign and non-evangelized citizenship of our State. Any information through the Advocate or direct to me, will be appreciated.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

JESUS' POWER TO FORGIVE.

Sunday, Feb. 25, 1906.

Our last lesson closed with the impressive fact of our Lord going out alone to a solitary place for secret prayer. He chose a time when he would be less likely to be disturbed.

He was soon missed, for Simon and they that were with him followed him, and when they had found him they told him that "all men seek for thee." His busy life had well begun, and he could not hope for much privacy or time for rest.

His fame was spreading rapidly, not only throughout Galilee, but as far south as Jerusalem and all through Judea, and Matthew says, "all Syria," beyond Jordan. As this country was densely populated at that time; great multitudes would easily gather to hear him wherever he taught and preached. Mark says, so great were the throngs of people that followed him that he spent a great part of his time in desert places. After some weeks spent in Galile, he and his disciples returned to Capernaum and to Simon's house, it is supposed. It was soon known that he had returned, and was in the same house before which all the city had gathered a short time before, and where he had healed so many sick and cast out so many devils. So a great multitude gathered in the house and about the door, and he was inside preaching. It must have been about the middle of the discourse when the meeting was disturbed. Four men came bearing on a cot or litter a man with paralysis, and as they could not enter the door with their burden, they went to the top of the house, and let the man down with ropes through an opening they had made in the roof.

The speaker and the audience must have been greatly surprised at this interruption. Not a word is said to have been spoken until after the sick man was laid on the floor at Jesus' feet. Then spoke the Son of God: "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee."

The scribes and the Pharisees that had been sent from Jerusalem, and were among the audience, were prepared to see wonders, but they were thunder-struck at the idea of a man like unto all those in the room arrogating to himself the power to forgive sins. They said not a word, but reasoned in their hearts that "God alone can forgive sins; then why doth this man speak blasphemies?"

Jesus knew every thought that entered their minds, and put an end to their reasoning by saying: "Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, arise and take up thy bed and walk? But that ye may know the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, he saith to the sick of the sick of palsy, Arise, take up thy bed and go thy way to thine house." This command was obeyed instantly, and the man went his way glorifying God.

The scribes and Pharisees had much to tell on their return to Jerusalem, but their prejudice made them dwell mostly on what they were determined to call blasphemy than on the wonderful works of love that were being done by the Lord as he went about all Galilee. We have wondered why this instance was not used, in a distorted way, against Jesus at the mock trial before the Sanhedrin, as his life on earth was coming to an end.

How determined were this sick man's friends to bring him to where Jesus was; no difficulty seemed too great; no danger thwarted them; but right on over every obstacle they brought their burden and laid it down at Jesus' feet.

Do we work this way for our Lord? Why! Is it because our faith is not of so great strength? Or is it that we do not love Jesus as we should, so that our love should be the impelling power to put forth every effort? There must have been a two-fold love on the part of these four faithful friends—first, a true love for their sick friend, creating an intense desire to see him cured, and a love and veneration for the Lord, created in their hearts by witnessing his works of love among the poor and afflicted. How blest was Capernaum that all these mighty works were done in her borders; what an opportunity for making "their calling and election sure!" Did this people profit by all this? We must sadly answer, no!

Later on, Jesus, speaking of unimproved opportunities, said: "Thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell, for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day."

Do we not live in a day of exceptional advantages? Are we not exalted unto heaven by every improved facility for the study of God's Word? Let us take the warning not heeded by the people of Jesus' time on earth. Let us lay aside every impediment that prevents us bringing our friends to Jesus, as these four faithful men brought the paralytic; for we must be sure that we ourselves have full and free pardon—the Lord will assure this. Then we can "be always ready to give to every man that asketh, the reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear." Jesus has the same power on earth to forgive sins now as when he uttered the blessed words of our lesson. He is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." He readily pardons all sin. Tell it to the cast-down and disheartened, that Jesus forgives sins that the world counts unpardonable.

This blessed truth, that Jesus hath power on earth to forgive sin, is the greatest boon to the world. Sin separates us from our God; sin prevents our prayers from ascending to the throne of God. Our knowledge of our own unworthiness through sin prevents us from working in the church and Sunday school as we ought. We cannot lead others to the source of pardon unless we first make ourselves right. "If thou bringest thy gift to the altar, and remembereds that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave there thy gift and go and be reconciled to thy brother; then come and offer thy gift."

A profane man cannot condemn profanity, neither can the cold and lukewarm tell the poor, burdened sinner that "Jesus hath power on earth to forgive sin." While we know that Jesus stands with outstretched hands, ever ready to give pardon, yet we are ever in the midst of the battle between the flesh and the Spirit. "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Some years ago we were speaking to a man who had served thirty or forty years in the service of a public enterprise; we spoke of how unsatisfying the reflection on all these years of labor. "Yes," said he, "and with me it is all winding up with an intense longing for rest, that rest that we sink into from which we never awake."

Jesus' love and mercy and his readiness to pardon takes away the fear of death the nearer we approach it.

There shall be many there, in the New Jerusalem, brought thither by Jesus' power on earth to forgive sin. For after sin is forgiven, then gratitude and love fill our hearts, urging us to make some return for this unspeakable gift. Then "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

AT THE MERIDIAN COLLEGES.

The students and faculty of the Meridian Male and Female Colleges were delighted with a visit from Bishop Galloway on Friday evening, Feb. 2, when he delivered to us his famous address on Lucius Q. C. Lamar, the great Mississippi statesman. This lecture is a masterpiece of eloquence and was a great inspiration to our young men and women to live nobler lives. It makes us think of Longfellow's lines:

"Life of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

Bishop Galloway is a great speaker and always commands attention anywhere and everywhere he goes. He is not only a great speaker but a great preacher and one of our great Southern orators. He is really a master of assemblies. Our colleges were greatly edified by his lecture and his visit to us will long be remembered by those who heard him. They are here from twenty-five States and three countries and will carry with them the impression of this great man.

FROM CLEVELAND, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am sure you will give space in the Advocate to an ex-presiding elder to say he is not quite on the list. We always buzz a bee in spring and chappy in the wood. Cleveland is a growing town and has some elegant people. This is a good place for me to "jig-a-lin" and sing. The membership is small and compact; the work well served. I have an abundance of time to read and study.

If some of the younger sprouts who thought perhaps the old brother was almost a superannuate will come down we will give them a lesson or two in humble, active pastoral work. Life is too short and the pleasures are too great, and I have seen and heard too much to be waiting to see what will turn up.

I have made eighty visits, received eleven members, sent forty subscribers to the Advocate, read four new books. Now some of you brethren do better or quit talking chloroform to men of 60.

By the way, Doctor, I think it would be well to give the names of the preachers who have accepted your proposition, and are giving the people a cheap paper. The clamor for a cheap paper has not been exclusively among the people. The preachers have made the same plea. We can never make it again.

If you do not get a dozen new subscribers in the next three months, put the blame on the preachers, where it belongs. Thousands of our people will never know of your proposition unless the preacher tells them. Where is the charge in the three Conferences that cannot send twenty subscribers if the preacher will put his heart in it? Where is the man or woman who will refuse to take it, if the preacher will put it at $1.00?

Let us know who is at work at it, and how the paper is growing. Come up and spend a Sunday with me. You shall have two good congregations.

Pray for us. W. S. LAGRONE.

ISAAC V. ENOCHS, son of Captain I. V. Enochs and Julia Harriet Enochs, was born in the old plantation home in Hinds County, Mississippi, June 27, 1862. He grew up under the tender care of a pious mother and godly father. He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the old Hennington Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, Miss., when a child of 12. He received his education in the common schools of the county, completing his course in the A. and M. College, Starkville, Miss. Here he was enabled to unite his personal knowledge of farmwork with the scientific methods suggested at College, with the result that he became, in his own section, an authority on farming. He was the most skilled horticulturist in south Mississippi. On Dec. 2, 1888, he was married to Miss Mary Rawls, of Poplarville, Miss. It was at Poplarville that his married life was spent and his life-record finished. Being of a mechanical turn of mind, he began designing and building houses. His friends looked on in astonishment and said, "What will Ike try next." Yet the beautiful buildings in brick and frame attested his ability both to design and to execute. His social nature caused him to become both a Pythian and an Odd Fellow. As a son, he was dutiful and obedient; as a husband, kind and faithful; as a father, tender and indulgent. He was beloved of his friends. His desires were for the right; his favorite hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul." The church was crowded by his friends, who had gathered to pay their last respects to the ashes of the dead. His pastor read the solemn service of the M. E. Church, South. The members of the Odd Fellows and Pythian lodges carried him to the grave, where he was laid to rest with Odd Fellows' honors, Rev. J. W. Chambers pronouncing the benediction. His wife and two daughters miss him more than words can express. He died on Saturday night, Nov. 10, 1905, saying "My only regret is that I must leave my dear wife and precious daughters to fight the battle of life alone. God bears our sorrows for us. In the "great awakening" we shall see him and pass with him before the Judge. Then, when eternity bursts full on the view, we shall know as we are known. In that day God grant we may stand in "white."

Mrs. LIDA GASKINS was born in Georgia on Jan. 21, 1877. Her father moved to Alabama during her childhood. She was converted in her 14th year; was married to Brother George Gaskins June 11, 1837, with whom she came to Louisiana in 1854, and settled in this country, where they have lived until her death, Jan. 14, 1906. Hers was a long and eventful life. She lacked seven days of being 89 years old. I first knew Sister Gaskins in 1869, 37 years ago—the year that I entered the Conference on trial. Downsville was my first work. I was with her during that year. I was here again, and with her during the time that I was on this district, 16 to 20 years ago, and last year, being returned, I found her again. Many Methodist preachers cherish pleasant remembrances of her, for her house was the itinerant's house and resting place. She was consistent as a Christian; always present at public services when it was praeticable; modest, quiet and yet firm in her profession of Christ, doing what she could for the cause of religion. She leaves a good name and a spotless Christian character, after seventy-five years of Christian profession. She was a warm friend, a good neighbor, a faithful and loving mother. She had about 117 children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, some of them being dead. She was an affectionate and devoted wife. She and Brother Gaskins had traveled a long journey together, having been married sixty-eight years, seven months and three days, and yet they were seemingly as attentive and tender toward each other, as though married only a few years. How patiently and tenderly he watched the coming end! And when the last breath was taken he arose and praised God for the quiet, calm departure of his beloved. Thus God has taken another of his children to rest. Brother Gaskins can have only a few more days of separation from her. God's blessings upon him and the family.

ROBERT RANDLE, P. C.

Mrs. SALLIE MAY, after an illness of three months, died at Gulfport, Miss., Dec. 11, 1905. She was born in Amelia County, Va., Feb. 22, 1856; was converted and united with the M. E. Church, South, during the summer of 1871. She leaves a husband and one daughter to mourn their great loss. Sister May had been a member of the Twenty-eighth Street Methodist Church for about two years, and was a teacher in the Sunday School a part of the time. She was also a valued member of the Woman's Home Mission Society of that Church. Her last meeting with that society was at the home of Miss Anna Reed in July. Never very strong physically, she was always faithful to all her Christian duties, and the ladies will specially miss her at their meetings. The interest of the church was always on her mind, and she was ever ready to help with her presence and means, if possible. She took special pleasure in extending a most cordial hospitality to her pastors, and ever giving them a hearty welcome to her home. As a former pastor, this writer feels personally bereaved, but we shall meet again. A large circle of friends sympathize sincerely with daughter and husband. Of her it may be truly said: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, and their works do follow them."

J. L. SELLS.

BRYAN WIMBUSH LESTER was born in Madison County, Miss., on March 25, 1850, and died Dec. 12, 1905. He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in April, 1892, under the ministry of Rev. L. W. Wood. He was married to Miss L. Idella Stevens on July 27, 1893. He loved the Church, and was a friend to his pastor. We miss him everywhere we go. Everything that loving hands could do was done to save his life, but God saw fit to call him from a world of toil and pain. Death has made a vacant chair in the home that no one can fill. He was a tender, loving husband, and a devoted son. He often spoke of his sainted mother to the writer in a most pathetic manner. May the good Lord comfort and sustain the devoted wife and relatives, and may they all so live in this world that some bright day they may meet in the glory land to spend an endless eternity in ecstasy and triumph.

JOHN W. BOSWELL, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1906. CHALMERS, Manager

WHOLE No. 5284. "PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD." VOL. 53—No. 9.

Glances at the Wold.

We have been of the opinion for some time past that the colored illustrations we see in the daily papers, especially the large supplements sent out on Sunday, manifested a singular taste. As time progresses, the pictures get worse, and we are constrained to believe that the taste is something more than singular. It is vicious, not to say depraved. We notice in a very respectable literary journal that they are characterized as atrocious. It cannot be said that this "comic journalism," "a shameless travesty of art and humor," is confined to a low class of publishers. Very respectable papers indulge in it, and the more is the pity, as thereby the "colored supplement," as it is termed, finds its way into the best families. Certainly these publishers think the whole thing is harmless—innocent fun—and possibly it is so intended. But the never-ceasing caricature of men — Jews, Irishmen, policemen, etc.—and of children, boys and girls, though it may create a laugh, is bound in the end to have a bad effect on the young. No fun can be really innocent that inculcates wrong ideas of real life, or implants notions in the unlearned wholly at variance with the truth. It is quite a reflection on public taste to say that these colored supplements are furnished because the public demands them. There can be no such demand, we think, but rather, it is pandering to a depraved taste, which the journals help to cultivate. A sensible observer, and one who sees the evil of such atrocities, says: "It is the children who suffer, for they absorb unconsciously the unsavory quality of such efforts to amuse, and are thus the involuntary victims of voluntary and responsible corruptionists. At a time when this country is seriously trying to implant a knowledge of and stimulate a taste for better things, artistic and æsthetic, through exhibitions in museums, libraries, and even in Sunday schools, it is not a little disheartening to realize that every step in this direction gets a weekly setback through these colored atrocities. The child of sensible parents will not see or know about them, but the child of the street, the child of the indifferent household, will warm to them like a cat to the back of the stove. There are certain negative results at least that parents have a right to expect from every educative force which is brought to bear on their children; that these children shall not be deliberately taught disrespect for old age or for physical infirmities and deformities, that they shall not learn to cherish contempt for other races or religions than their own, that they shall not take satisfaction in the tormenting of animals or weaklings—in short, that they shall not acquire an habitually cynical and unsportsmanlike attitude of mind." Christian parents should keep an eye on these papers, and religiously slip the colored supplement into the fire.

There has been much restlessness in China for several weeks past, and great uneasiness in many parts of the world for fear of an uprising similar to the Boxer troubles of several years ago. The troubles now brewing are on account of the Chinese Exclusion Act of this country, which recently has been rigidly enforced. This first resulted in the boycott of American goods by Chinese merchants, and in two or three instances the looting of missionary stations and the killing of several missionaries. Precautions are being taken by our government, and events will be closely watched. Gunboats have been dispatched to Manila, and several regiments of soldiers will be sent, so as to be within easy reach in case of need. Such, at least, is the news that has come to the public. The news, however, does not seem to be entirely consistent with certain facts. For example, there is at this time in the United States a Chinese commission, composed of high dignitaries, who are here on a friendly mission, and manifesting the friendliest spirit, which would hardly be the case if the Chinese authorities entertained any purpose of going to war, or of expelling foreigners from their country. As an offset to this, it is said the uprising is of the people, for which the government is not responsible, and which it cannot control. This does not look altogether reasonable. Among other things relating to this subject, it has been asserted by a foreign correspondent that many Japanese have gone into China, and are publishing newspapers, in which they encourage the boycott of American goods, and that these Japanese are really responsible for the present trouble on that score. How much truth there is in that statement will develop later, if there is any at all. It has been given out from the State Department that the Government is uneasy over the situation, and those having control of missionaries are advised to withdraw them from the interior to the coast, where they can be protected.

Some years ago the city of Chicago constructed a sewage canal from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River. The channel of the canal consisted principally of two rivers running into the Mississippi. The artificial portion of it was comparatively short, but it turned the lake water into the natural channel of the first connecting river. The canal, of course, turned all the sewage of Chicago into the Mississippi River, which is the chief source of water supply for St. Louis and of other towns along the stream. St. Louis objected to using water thus contaminated on the ground that it was detrimental to health, and through the proper court sued for a perpetual injunction, restraining Chicago from turning its sewage upon the citizens of Missouri. The case, after years of delay, has just been decided, and Chicago won. Among other pleas set up by the defense was that the canal carried 300,000 cubic feet of pure lake water per minute into the water supply of St. Louis, and that, instead of being a detriment, it is a benefit. What weight this particular plea had, we do not know; but under the decision Chicago will dispose of its sewage in the canal, and thus lesson the city's expenses, and improve the health of St. Louis. And the long contention is at an end.

The famine now prevailing in Japan is something serious. It has assumed such proportions as to attract attention everywhere, and measures of relief are being instituted in many places. President Roosevelt has sounded a call for contributions. The government of Japan is doing what it can to relieve the distressed, but, just having passed through a war that drained its resources, it is unable to supply in full the great need. One of the Japanese papers says that unless help comes speedily more people will die in the three provinces that are famine-stricken than perished in the great war, counting the wounded and missing as dead. The United States Consul has sent an official dispatch setting forth the suffering of the people. Whatever is done to help should be done immediately. Every pound of flour, or quart of rice sent forward at once might mean the saving of a life. Any amount of money sent to Dr. W. R. Lambuth, our Missionary Secretary, Nashville, Tenn., we dare say, will be promptly forwarded. We are not authorized to say this, but in the absence of any directions, we make the suggestion, as he is in constant communication with our missionaries in Japan.

A REQUEST.

Correspondents will please direct all communications intended for the Editor to 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La. Communications intended for the Business Department should be addressed to the Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Write with ink, and only on one side of the paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after two weeks, notify us, and we will make it right. Papers will be continued unless subscribers order otherwise.

A HAPPY PILGRIM.

The skies were fair and the sun was bright as the scribe embarked for the euphoniously-named Tupelo. Night had fallen when it was reached, but no darkness short of Cimmerian can obscure the bright blaze of hospitality which abounds there; rather is it made more conspicuous by the cheerful contrast. Let him count himself a favored mortal whom Quitman Robins takes to his home, for unstinted courtesies and a delightful blend of old-time welcome and modern luxury await him. To breathe that wholesome Christian home atmosphere for a spell strengthens one in hope, courage and resolution, for once we get enough such citadels of pure home life and influence we may hope for a speedy conquest of the world.

But further favors awaited the unworthy wanderer. Sister Blair, a stanch Methodist and a delightful hostess with it, threw wide open the gates of her hospitality, and at her table, loaded with dainties, he was feasted to the full. Thank God for the good women whom he has put into the world, who make it brighter and happier for their existence! Thank God for the grace of Christian hospitality, now unhappily in its decadence, but still practiced by a remnant of sufficient proportions to encourage belief that it will never become wholly lost.

Oh, the charm of those family roofs beneath which the pilgrim finds hospitable shelter! When he is made to feel that he is not only welcome, but that it is a privilege to have him, then his unworthiness shames him into nobler resolves to be a better man, that there be no such discrepancy between his deserts and the favors accorded him. He has a poor conception of such privileges who takes them as a matter of course; rather should he regard them as considerate courtesies shown him for his work's sake, and to deserve them should be his constant effort.

But is there not another phase of this matter to which we should do well to look? Might not sermons be preached, both appropriate and helpful, on being not "forgetful to entertain strangers?" Are not our people losing much because they are no longer, as a class, "given to hospitality?" A quaint old motto which hangs in some great chambers admonishes us that "ye ornaments of a home are ye guests which frequent it," and which of us does not feel a distinct uplift in the home life when a considerate Christian guest breaks our bread or sleeps in the spare bed?

Trouble? Not unless we choose to make it, for the visitor would doubtless far prefer absolutely no unusual stir or concern. Expense? The actual cost of admitting one other to the ordinary, simple home life is negligible; it is only when an attempt is made to do more than this that this item need give us pause. But if it were always both trouble and expense, the investment would be a good one, yielding rich dividends, desirable as is always the influence of a decent guest in multiplying the ties of Christian fraternity and in other ways innumerable.

But enough of the digression. The evening found us seated around the table of the parsonage, where presides with queenly grace Sister Lewis. True enough, she is wise and lets the good man think he does the presiding, but her wisdom also qualifies her to be mistress of the home, and royally does she fill her station. Everybody loves Tom Lewis. That radiant smile and that hearty handshake are not professional; they have their roots in his great, big heart. He is a man who is doing things. The world is said to be loudly clamorous for men who can accomplish its tasks, but there seems to be no fuss made by Tupelo Methodists, for they have this very sort, an earnest, kingly, godly man, who is pouring his life-blood into his ministry. May his tribe increase! Long live Tupelo!

Time and space alike fail before we get to tell of the delightful visit to Brother Cunningham, the retired veteran, who lives happily in his cozy home, honored and loved of all; or of his good wife, whose loving ministrations convert his cottage into a castle. May God bless them all.

PILGRIM.

A GOOD LETTER.

Dr. Boswell: I have been a subscriber to the Advocate for eighteen years, and hope to be one the rest of my days. The new dress is becoming to the dear old paper, but whatever the outward appearance it suits me well, and always contains many good things for the instruction and spiritual guidance of its readers. I pass my copy out generally. I sent one to an old man whom I did not know very well. He came and thanked me, and said: "I have been taking the Advocate thirty years, and hope to continue as long as I live."

I was glad of P. O. Lowrey's article on "Church Entertainments." It is consistent and timely, from my point of view, but it will doubtless occasion resentment and perhaps another "avalanche of letters." There are many good women who "freeze ice cream and sell grab-bags" to get money for the Lord's house and the preacher's home, and they have their own way, for it is not every pastor who has the courage to object or rebuke the good women of his flock.

I knew a good man, who, when asked by one of the members of his church if he would use his influence against festivals, etc., said: "Certainly not, sister; we want all of the devil's money we can get." I am glad to admit that he was not a Methodist; yet doubtless we have a few who like the same kind of money.

It is possible, and very pleasant, to clothe the ideas, express the differences and objections in a way to disarm prejudice, and the reader is instructed by the views and experience of others, however great may be the difference of opinions. The intolerance and sharp retort spoils the effect, and we lose the benefit that might be gained from many well-treated subjects. We respect, admire and heed a charitable writer, no matter how simple the theme or homely the letter. We like to read their communications; they brighten up things so, as we journey on. The Advocate often contains treats in the way of real "heart-warmers:" cheerful, sunny and helpful. "Gilderoy." Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr., and others give us a gleam of sunshine and good cheer, and then we sometimes see a brief, breezy note from a contented itinerant like Brother A. C.

All these add merit and attraction and make our reading pleasant and profitable.

May the Lord bless and direct all who labor in any way to make the Advocate a safe, helpful guest and companion in our homes.

MRS. DELLA PARSONS.

McComb City, Miss.

FROM THE COLPORTER'S DESK.

The Advocate, in its new dress and general improvement, is gaining favor. When the promised stitching is added, it ought soon to have 10,000 subscribers. And certainly, at the low clubbing rates offered by concerted effort on the part of the preachers and friends of the paper, this much-desired consummation may soon be attained.

Circumstances have prevented my traveling this winter, and the probabilities are that I shall not be able to do field service before April, but I hope to be ready for the spring and summer campaign of District Conferences and other occasions as the doors may open. In the meantime, by correspondence and filling of orders, we are circulating the books and keeping the work in line.

I am glad to report that the new Methodist Hymnal is gaining favor. Recently the churches at Brookhaven, Hazlehurst, Tunica and Holcomb have been supplied with this excellent book, and many nice copies are being ordered for individual use.

Now is the time to supply our congregations and homes with our songbooks, that we may have this year a revival of singing, which will insure a revival of spirituality among the people.

The Publishing House requires "cash with order" for the Methodist Hymnal, because of the heavy expense incurred in its publication and the very low price at which it is sold.

Of course payment on receipt of bill or in a very few days would answer, but it is best for all concerned that the rule be strictly adhered to.

I am truly thankful to all the brethren who have settled accounts for books bought at the Conferences and since. This is thoughtful and business-like, and it is greatly desired that all may thus see and act continuously.

The business maxim of the day is "cash or its equivalent," which means monthly settlements—or bi-monthly, at farthest—to even the smallest amount. This is imperatively necessary in order to success in any business, whether church or other.

I here record my heartfelt appreciation to the brethren of the two Conferences for their friendly aid and liberal patronage they have given the colportage work in the past, and invoke continuation of the same for greater success this year than ever before.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss.

The Reformed Presbyterian Synod has been promised $5,000 for opening a new station in China on condition that an equal amount be raised elsewhere, so that $10,000 shall be in hand before the station is opened.

LETTER FROM GILDEROY.

This, the 15th day of February, is my birthday. I am 67 to-day. I never expected to live so long. When I was a boy men of 50 were a wonder to me. My, my; half a hundred! Will I ever live to be that old? It seemed impossible. But here I am 17 years beyond 50, and I feel young yet. I am young in heart and mind, but ageing somewhat in body. I am not as active as I once was, cannot lift as much, nor do as much hard work, nor rest in as short a time, nor jump as far, nor walk as well at night, and I cannot go up on high places as I once did. My nerves are not as steady as they used to be. My teeth are pretty well all gone, and my eyesight is not good.

My only sister went home at the age of 13 months, and before I was born. My father died of consumption at 28, one brother of congestion at 10, one brother of consumption at 22, and another brother of the same trouble at 43. My mother died of pneumonia at 73. I have always expected to die of lung trouble, but I am here yet, and about as stout as most men of my age. I am the only one of my family left. God's goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life.

I was converted and joined the Church fifty-nine years ago this coming spring. The old men kept me so constantly at work for God in my young days that I did not have time or opportunity to fall from grace, to backslide—Sunday school scholar, teacher, superintendent, class leader, exhorter, steward and local preacher. They found work enough to keep me out of sin and mischief.

In November, 1858, before I was 20 years old, I was admitted on trial into the traveling connection by the Memphis Conference. I have been steadily at this work ever since. I have not once looked back since I put my hand to the plow. I have always had good appointments. Some of them have been heavy and hard, and small money compensation, but they were good appointments. I have found plenty of sinners to preach to, and a few saints to associate with everywhere I have gone. There has never been any reason why I should have any preference above any one of my brethren. I have not deserved it. I have no gifts or graces that would entitle me to any special consideration. I have been true and faithful to God and to his Church as represented by our Methodism. I deserve no credit or consideration for this, for it was my duty, my obligation. The Church is in no way indebted to me.

The bishops and presiding elders have been kind to me and considerate of me. The greatest grief to me is that my ministry now does not move men as it once did. Why this is so, I do not know. I am sure that I am more religious and prayerful than ever before, and I know more of God's holy Word, of theology and of deep religious experience. I am not now gifted in the natural fire and enthusiasm of youth as I once was. It is some grain of comfort to me to see and to know that this happens just as it does to me. I cannot now move and influence children and young people as I once did. There is some sort of an impossible gulf between us. Just what it is and why it is I do not know. I am not conscious of any drawing away from them, and, if possible, they are more polite to me and more respectful than ever before. The older people seem to hear me with pleasure and profit, but this is a constantly diminishing congregation, while the young people are constantly on the increase. So I am inclined to believe that all of this comes about in the nature of things, and that I am in nowise to blame for it. Some few older persons see the facts as they are, and, not knowing how to account for them, are disposed to blame me for not adapting my preaching to the wants and wishes of the young folk. It is easy to think of this, but it would be a difficult thing for a man of my age and fixed habits of thought to do. I have wondered why some of these wise ones did not advise the young people to adapt themselves to my preaching. They are more capable of adaptation than I. I am not now as flexible and pliant as I used to be. I am not to blame for it.

I take it for granted that other people of my age are much like me about preaching. I love to hear the boys and young men preach, and I rejoice in their ability and their success, and I am warned by their zeal and enthusiasm, but I must confess that for my own soul's good, I prefer the matured thought and well-beaten oil of an older and more matured man. I may be wanting in taste or my taste for preaching has undergone a change with the passing years. The beginners and the boy preachers were my favorites when I was young, but not so now. I take it for granted that in a general way other people have a like experience to mine.

These are some of my meditations on this (the sixty-sixth) anniversary of my birth sixty-seven years ago. Yours, GILDEROY.

Feb. 15, 1906.

THE MISSIONARY TRAINING SCHOOL.

The session of 1906 of the Missionary Training School has just finished the first term, covering a period of three weeks. The subject considered was "Church Work in the Country." The lectures were conducted with reference to Christian doctrine and methods of church work, and the discussion of problems growing out of the conditions incident to work in rural districts and mission charges. These problems must be intelligently considered and wisely handled. They are real and require the consecrated heart and trained mind that the prosperity of Zion may not be hindered. The country church should share all that makes for righteousness and higher ideals, for within it are latent possibilities, which, when refined by faith and zeal—according to knowledge—shall make for the increase of the Kingdom. Therefore, the training and equipment furnished in these studies and discussions should in the end result in larger good to the church.

The class-room work during the third week of this term was conducted by Dr. Jno. A. Kern, in "Pastoral Theology;" Dr. Thos. Carter on "The Gospel of John;" Dr. F. S. Parker, on "Christian Doctrine." These studies were enthusiastic; they furnished encouragement; they stirred hearts to a deeper desire for "the sincere milk of the word;" they made stronger the foundations of faith.

Public lectures delivered by Dr. W. R. Lambuth, and Rev. A. E. Clement dealt with issues relating to the church in our Southland. They showed intelligent grasp of the questions, and an appreciation of the place which the church has in their solution.

One very helpful feature of this term was the "Round Table Conference" conducted by Dr. W. R. Lambuth. The time was devoted to the consideration of practical questions affecting a preacher's usefulness. Particularly interesting was the discussion on the subject of "Books." Drs. Kern, Hammond, and Winton made valuable suggestions: "Select carefully; master the book: make it contribute to your power and strength; buy only the books you can use; keep a list of the books wanted; carry a book as you travel; it is not the number of books, but the way you read and digest its message." The kind of books must, of course, depend upon individual taste; but there was a unity of sentiment in this one particular, that the Bible be read and studied more than any other book. After all, it is the one book in which the preacher is to find his message.

We believe every man who entered faithfully into the spirit of the school may claim larger insight into life, and may also regard his daily conduct with consecrated men as helpful to his mental and spiritual development. The simplicity and sincerity that characterized the leaders in the diligent search for the truth were felt by all.

Perhaps the most impresive service was the one conducted by Dr. O. E. Brown on the last Sunday morning of the term. It was a quiet hour, a time of heart searching and spiritual uplift; a climax to the deep fervor which had characterized each gathering together of the students. Dr. Brown brought us a live message. As a man who knows Christ in the intimacy of close fellowship, he is competent to bring the deepest truth to the honest consideration of men. He chose on this occasion to interpret "the deeper meaning of Gethsemane." Cold type cannot well convey the impresions of the hour. The attempt would be futile, for its full meaning must be published to the world in the fuller and grander service which it inspired. "The deepest secret of Christ's life lies at last in that sacrificial love that led Him to the last limit to save men," and that love was born out of the absolute certainty of His sonship. Christ's life expressed itself in three passions which must become a part of our life, if we would enter into the fullest meaning of divine sympathy. We must have a passion for saving men; every true prophet's message was the cry of "the suffering of a heart of love" as he looked upon sin. Again, the passion of agonizing prayer that can say "not my will, but thine;" and finally, that passion to make men enter into the purpose of true discipleship. These are the forces that consume the heart and call for the expression of that deeper personality which is vitalized by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension is hereby called to meet in Third Street Church, Alexandria, on Wednesday, March 20, 1906, at 1:30 p.m. All applications to the General Board for donations or loans must be in our hands by that time. Let the applications be promptly sent to Rev. J. Ivy Hoffpauir, Secretary, Franklin, La.; or, at the latest, to the care of Rev. N. E. Joyner, Alexandria.

JOHN T. SAWYER,
President.

NOTES FROM GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

The District Stewards' meeting at Clarksdale on Jan. 16 was largely attended. Including visitors, more than twenty were present. The spirit of the brethren was highly commendable, and the work to be done was speedily dispatched.

Rev. W. D. McCullough has made a fine impression at Shaw. He has organized two Sunday schools, and projected a movement to improve his parsonage.

Rev. P. M. Covington has been appointed to the Cleveland Circuit, and Rev. W. H. Mounger to Lake Cameron Mission. Every charge in the district is now supplied with a preacher.

Brother Bradley has lately been struggling to wipe out a $1,600 debt on his parsonage. Some days since he had paid $1,100 of it, and had nearly enough subscribers to meet the balance. We have no better worker among us than this transplanted Tennesseean.

"Gilderoy" is doing well at Lula and Lyon. His salary was raised $125, thus making the assessment $1,000. His people say he is the best preacher in the Conference.

Rev. Marvin Langlev has, perhaps, the most difficult field in the district. At some places he has to make his own fires, light the lamps and ring the bell. Recently he walked seven miles to an appointment, but these difficulties do not seem to depress him. On the contrary, he is cheerful, and counts it an honor to do these things for the Master. Our Millsaps boys may be depended upon anywhere and everywhere.

Brother Neblett is pushing things at Tunica. He has received several members, and has a large large part of the Conference collections provided for.

The Quarterly Conference at Friar's Point was a good one. Brother Hull has things well in hand. His parsonage will soon be overhauled. With a good home, a $1,200 salary, Jersey cows to milk, and a religious and warm-hearted people, he ought to be happy.

Brother Rook has made an auspicious beginning at Boyle. His sweet spirit and great industry have impressed the people. His salary was fixed at $726—not what he ought to have, but a decided advance over last year. We predict a forward movement along all lines in this charge.

"Rambler" has lately been trying to explore some of the missionary territory of this section. In company with Brother Neblett, he recently had a never-to-be-forgotten drive through the mud from Lake Cormorant to Wall's, and a twenty-mile horseback ride in order to secure a look at Prichard. Such jaunts are a weariness to the flesh, but there is an inspiration and blessing in them.

Bishop Hoss will hold the Greenville District Conference at Leland April 13-15. Our people are delighted to know that he will be with us, and they will accord him a generous reception. You, also, Mr. Editor, are cordially invited to attend.

RAMBLER.

A CRITIC CRITICIZED.

Mr. Editor: Brother Honnoll, in the Advocate of Feb. 8, very justly criticizes Dr. Brooks' theory of sanctification, but while doing so runs against an error just as palpable and just as unscriptural as some of Dr. Brooks' infeernces.

It is a hard job to pull out from the ruts, theological and otherwise, in which we ran so smoothly in our boyhood days. To discard time-worn and almost universallv accepted opinions seems almost a declaration of egoims. However, Copernicus won the day with a new theory, because he accepted the correc ttheory, although there be some who still insist of the sun, "she do move."

And so, doubtless, the time will come when we will accept a new view, not only as to the occurrences on the day of Pentecost, but in Jephtha's case also.

In the visions of childhood we have seen the daughters writhing in the agony of the flames "a burnt offering unto the Lord," while the father stood by with flooded eyes and a bursting heart because of his folly.

We overlook the fact that the daughter "bewailed" not her fate as a burnt offering, but her deprivation of that most coveted blessing of a Jewess—the honor of motherhood.

Jephtha's vow was to "offer for"—not as—"a burnt offering." [Judges ii, 13. See also verses 39, 40.]

So we go on in the old ruts in this case as in the results of the Day of Pentecost.

Brother Honnoll condemns Dr. Brooks for assuming as facts statements not proven, and still goes on in the old idea that on the pentecostal day the apostles received some great spiritual enduement; some more thorough cleansing; some new faith, or hope, or love, or all of these, losing sight of the real enduement of power.

We have always heard that there was bestowed on the apostles on that occasion some great "soul-winning power," and that for this purpose "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." These men had been charged by the Master to do that which, at the time the command was given, was known by the Lord to be an impossible requirement. They were charged to "preach the Gospel to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." "All nations" were not at Jerusalem, and, if so, there was not a linguist among the apostles. To preach to the people of all languages and dialects they could not. Knowing this, and having power, at the proper time, to bestow the ability to carry out hi sorders, he directed them to "tarry at Jerusalem till * * * endued with power from on high."

When this power came, it came "as it were, forked tongues of fire" in its visible manifestation. "Forked tongues," the emblem of expression, came to them, and, "being filled with the Holy Ghost, they spake every man as the Spirit gave them utterance."

The wonder among the people was the ability to speak in fourteen different languages and dialects. God had ordered further, that the chosen ones should be able to preach to "all nations beginning at Jerusalem," and to that end had caused the assembling of "devout men from every nation under the heavens" (see Acts ii, 5-12), who heard the Gospel "in our own tongue wherein we were born."

The importation (or receiving) of the Holy Ghost, was necessary for the enduement, and we thus judge because "they spake as the Spirit gave them utterance. This power over tongues was the gift of the Holy Ghost, and, as far as facts are stated, was all the apostles received.

To my way of thinking, it is a misnomer to speak of revivals of religion as "a pentecostal time," for there is nothing that comes in our revivals to the souls of the people which came to the apostles on the Day of Pentecost.

The revivals of to-day do not affect the physical organism of men, but are the occasion of the bestowment of pardon, of regeneration, of reclamation and sanctification to God.

It was otherwise with the apostles. They were "clean" before the Pentecostal Spirit came upon them. Thev had miracle-working power. Thev had already gone wth the Gospel among the people of their own language. One thing only was lacking—the gift of languages—and that, and that only, have we authority to assert.

MORE ABOUT PENTECOST.

After writing my criticism of Brother Honnoll's review of Dr. Brooks, it was suggested that Brother Honnoll and I were in accord on the question discussed.

While it was clear that Brother Honnoll denied an additional cleansing, there were sentences which, to me, seemed to imply, if not express the fact, that the apostles did, on that occasion, receive spiritual power which the did not before possess. It was this which I chose to controvert.

The "power from on high" was certainly physical power, mparted to their tongues, and possibly intellectual power to understand what they spoke. It required "the Spirit" to do this work, and for it "they were all filled" with the Holy Ghost."

Dear Sisters: The first message that goes from the general office this glad new year must be sent to the rank and file of women who constitute the Woman's Home Mission Society. May the blessings of God rest upon you, who have become "workers together with him" for the social, industrial, mental and spiritual betterment of humanity, for this is what home missions mean. Let us, therefore, be "workers together with him" for the salvation of mind, soul and body of our neighbors in the year 1906.

Let us write upon our hearts the words:

GO FORWARD:

In the power of the Holy Spirit;
In the number of members in the Auxil'ry;
In the collections;
In prayer for workers to be trained for specific work.

This means that we must be systematic and definite in our work for home missions this year.

There has been great embarrassment in the general office this fall over an empty treasury. The current expenses amount to $3,000 monthly, and for the month of November there was only $800 in bank; so our workers were compelled to wait for money with which to meet daily expenses until the last of December. We have as yet made no payments on our parsonage appropriations, and a large sum is due our printers; so you see that debt will inevitably result if our women do not strive with energy to pay their dues in full, and each Auxiliary give an extra amount corresponding to $1 per membership—that is, if you have fifty members, send $50 (undirected to any specific object), over and above dues, to the treasurer before the end of the fiscal year (March 1, 1906). We regret that we must come to you with this blue note this year; but you have put us in the office, and, as your servants, we must give you facts.

Great encouragement comes from every part of the work. Shall we fail in furnishing the means with which to prosecute it?

Read our working orders: 2d Corinthians vi, 1-10.

Yours in the kingdom and patience of our Lord,

MISS BELLE H. BENNETT, Pres.
MRS. R. W. MACDONELL, Gen'l Sec'y.

Sent to the Advocate by Mrs. John B. Parker.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The Grenada District Conference will be held at Oxford, Miss., April 20-22. Bishop Hoss will preside. Sermon on Thursday evening by Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

The Sardis District Conference will be held at ——— April 24, 25, 26. Bishop Hoss will preside.

If our best moods continually dominated our whole life, we should all live well. We all mean to live well; at least there are times with all of us when we resolve to do so—new year days, birthdays, and other times. It would be well for us if there were some way of perpetuating these better moods, and living up to these good intentions. If a life is to be admirable when finished, its periodical good intentions must become strong, self-sustaining principles, shaping its every act and ruling all its days and hours.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

MANTACHIE CIRCUIIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am always thankful for a place to labor in the great harvest field, and the Lord has been so good I hope to have never lost the presence of mind and complained of an appointment.

It has been my privilege in time past to serve a portion of the vineyard where a preacher was as near like the Savior (Matt. viii, 20) as I have ever been, walking right, seeking shelter from the rain and cold at a railway station, or some lumber mill, where there was to be heard the merry howl of the wolves in the swamps, the attractive scream of an occasional panther, or that "hark from the tombs" of a lonesome bear.

These things I deem privileges of by-gone days (and nights), the repetition of which my "human nature" does not covet. Though should it be my lot again, I would gladly go, trusting in the Lord. Now he is leading through greener pastures, beside stiller waters; yet I am blessed with work to do. The Lord has no place for loafers, and since the days of Adam, if we would remain in the Lord's garden, we must be "keepers" and "dressers," and partake not of the "forbidden fruit."

I see letters and hear good things from so many of the brethren, I feel under obligations to my charge to speak of the prospects here and the kindnesses shown the preacher.

I arrived before my predecessor had been gone twelve hours (it doesn't differ when he left). I was cordially received by the good people, though sorry "we" deprived them of one opportunity, the usual arranging of the parsonage and pounding. But I found they had been discussing the situation, and a good boarding place was ready, where I was received immediately upon my arrival.

The work was assumed in the same old way, and Christ is with us all. No appointments have been missed; services are well attended, and three new Sunday schools have come to life, making six for the charge, and the prospects are good for a great work therein.

I have received several subscriptions for the Advocate, and am expecting to send at least twenty at an early date.

Our first Quarterly Conference was well attended, all the churches being officially represented. The assessment was raised $25.

I have a good people, earnest and zealous in their religious work, and ready to stand by their pastor and for the Church.

To God be the praise for any good thing that may come to pass. WALTER W. JONES.

Mantachie, Miss.

ROCKY SPRINGS, MISS.

Dear Brother Boswell: When I returned last Wednesday with my wife we were received with a most hearty welcome by the good ladies of Rocky Springs, who had prepared a nice dinner for us. Then, on the following evening and the next morning the good people of this circuit sent in such another pounding as I never witnessed before, which none can appreciate more than a young Methodist preacher, who has just started out in the ministry. It makes my heart glad to know my labor is being appreciated by these precious people. I have never met with as kind-hearted people in my life as I have met with since I have been in this community.

I ask the prayers of all of God's people, that we may have a prosperous year for the Lord, and that we may not compromise with the old, wicked one at any time, but may keep meek and lowly at Jesus' feet. Your brother in Christ,

H. H. GRIFFIN.

HOW TO HAVE GOOD NEIGHBORS.

There is true wisdom in the "recipe for having good neighbors—be one!" When we complain of any fault in those round us, blaming them continually for being cross, indifferent, selfish, rude, unfair, or bad-tempered, it is always well to see to it that our own conduct shall be invariably cheerful, sympathetic, unselfish, courteous, fair and good-tempered. Otherwise — strange as it may seem—they may be justified in complaining of us, too!—Great Thoughts.

THE WHITE HOUSE CHILDREN.

If you think that because the President must concern himself with affairs of tremendous moment for the country and the world, he cannot romp with his little folk, as other fathers do, you are much mistaken. And if you think that Mrs. Roosevelt has no time to see that the children learn their lessons, or to tuck them comfortably in bed, even on the nights of great receptions or state dinners, you are likewise mistaken. Or if you think that the young persons at the White House are excused from any educational tasks, or have any special privileges as to lessons or school work, and envy them on that account, get rid of the impression at once. Pocket money for ice cream soda and chocolates is not unknown, but there is no unlimited indulgence in them. The President likes all wholesome things, and he is not above the fairy tales that all children love.—December St. Nicholas.

MISTAKE OF THE MARRIED.

Many a young husband has raged inwardly because a woman seems unable to acquire sense until she has grown older and less beautiful, and many a young wife has mourned because a man cannot learn to treat a woman with thoughtful consideration until he has grown old and fat or otherwise unattractive, says a writer in the Indiana Farmer. Human nature does not change much, and thus it happens that the first year or two of married life are the most difficult, just as they were a thousand years ago. Usually each has been loving an ideal, instead of the real person chosen for a mate. Usually they have seen each other only at their best, or, if little faults have cropped up, there has been careless observation of them and a fleeting thought that "I'll easily change that when we're married." As a result, the young wife begins to mold him to her way of thinking and doing, and he begins to tell her what he thinks she ought to do, until quite frequently they get all at cross purposes before it ever occurs to them that they would get along better by making concessions. If only she had sense enough not to nag at him about his little disagreeable ways and habits, and if he had wisdom enough to understand her moods and needs; if she could understand how tired he was by night, and if he could know how monotonous her day had been; if she could understand how hard money is to earn, and he could appreciate how much she needs money for little things; if only both could estimate the value of entire candor and realize how precious their love is—and how easily it may be killed—things would be vastly different in a great many households, where bitter disappointment reigns.—The Presbyterian.

COUSIN ETHEL'S MEMORY.

Christmas had brought two beautiful, golden-haired, brown-eyed dolls to the Tracy children, who immediately christened the new-comers Dorothy and Phyllis. Unfortunately, the dolls' wardrobes were deficient; but Cousin Ethel, who, at 25, had not outgrown her love of dolls, had promised to make one article each for "Dorothy" and "Phyllis." Ruth had chosen a dress and Elinor a coat.

Alas for human promises! Weeks had elapsed, and the little mothers waited in vain.

Should they remind Cousin Ethel of her neglect?

"No, it wouldn't be polite!" sighed Ruth. "If she has forgotten we must just do without them; but how sweet Dorothy would look in that pink silk she spoke of!"

"And Phyllis is just suffering for her coat," chimed in Elinor.

To tell the truth, Cousin Ethel's thoughts had been more occupied with a certain tall young lawyer than with dolls' clothes. The promise had completely slipped out of her mind, and probably never would have been fulfilled had it not been for the young man himself.

Mr. Tracy, the children's father, was an important man in city matters, and one day the young lawyer, Mr. Haynes, had occasion to call at Mr. Tracy's house.

While waiting he heard children's voices, and presently the two little girls appeared, carrying their dolls. He inquired after the dolls' health.

"My child Phyllis is very well, thank you," responded Elinor politely.

"Isn't this a cold day for her to go out without a coat or wrap?" asked Mr. Haynes.

"She hasn't any coat yet—"

"Yes," broke in Ruth, disconsolately, "we have waited so long for Cousin Ethel to make it. Two months ago she was here to spend the night, and said she would do it; but papa says she is thinking too much of that long-legged, blue-eyed lawyer to remember us."

"O Ruth," said the older Elinor, "don't say that! Mamma wouldn't like it. Cousin Ethel will keep her word, I know."

Light broke in on the "long-legged, blue-eyed lawyer." There was only one Ethel in the world for him, but he was still a little in doubt as to the place he filled in her life.

"Children, I think you will get those things if you are patient. Give Cousin Ethel time."

"Do you know our cousin, Ethel Morse?" exclaimed big-eyed Ruth. "Oh, she tells the finest fairy stories in the world!"

"Does she, indeed?" said the lawyer, resolving to hear one of them that very evening, if possible.

The following week the hearts of two little girls were gladdened by a box containing a beautiful pink silk dress for Dorothy, and a white linen coat, with straps and buttons on it, for Phyllis.

Cousin Ethel had remembered.—Youth's Companion.

MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

Columbus Methodism is steadily growing. Rev. L. M. Broyles, at First Church, is soon to begin the publication of a weekly paper to be called the Columbus Methodist, by which he hopes to keep his large membership in intimate touch with all the plans of his church. Rev. Robt. A. Clark is bringing out a directory of his charge, Second Church, which, through his energetic business management, is not only a great convenience, but a source of revenue through advertisements secured.

Meridian is rapidly taking on the aspect of a city, with its tall buildings, its paved streets and the piles of brick and lumber, which afford promise of greater things for the near future. A handsome Union Station now nearing completion will greatly add to the favorable impression which incoming travelers receive of this thriving burg. It is gratifying to note that Christian forces are keeping pace with this rapid material development, large increases in both congregations and financial showings being reported on every side.

The bustle and stir, the sound of hammer and saw, and sundry other evidences of material prosperity one sees and hears in Hattiesburg bespeak the rapid rise of that young city and its steady advancement into the ranks of the towns of metropolitan pretensions. Barns are being pulled down to make room for costly structures. A mammoth hotel to cost a quarter of a million is under way; a handsome new Courthouse is about completed; but the churches are far from being in keeping with their surroundings. Our Baptist brethren have a neat, modern, brick structure and plans are being wisely laid by Brother Solby, so that Methodism shall shortly have a creditable house of worship, costing not less than $30,000, to replace the present neat, but inadequate, Main Street Church. If Methodism does not keep its hold on that town it will be through no lack of ability in its preachers. Where can you find a better team than they—Selby, scholarly and dignified, but aggressive and energetic withal; Dr. Black, whom everybody respects for his genuine worth, as well as his demonstrated ability; Carley, lovable and genial, a close student and a clear thinker, but with that rare adaptation which makes him at home everywhere; that Methodist veteran, H. D. Howell, now on the honor roll, but not content to cease fighting the battles of the cross, still doing with his might what his hands find. May the Church not expect great things of such men, under the constant direction of an able and vigilant Presiding Elder living in their midst? The scribe did not see Brother Burton, who was sick abed during his flying visit, but those who know him account him faithful.

CHRIST'S UNIQUE LOVE AS A LEADER.

"How unique was Christ's love as leader and hero. In military affairs the rule is that the general must not expose himself. Always the commanding officer must stand apart on some safe point. He controls the army from the vantage ground of security. From time to time his aids descend to the battlefield with his instructions. The under officers march at the head of the troops, not the leader. In going over the battle fields the sight-seer is always shown the point of safety from which the commander survived the battle scene below. Even in the olden days, when a chieftain received messages bidding him surrender, he told one of his soldiers to jump over a precipice and another to plunge a dagger into his heart, then when both had instantly obeyed, with proud disdain the chief told the messenger that every man in his army would gladly die for him. But if the soldiers died, the chieftain returned in safety to his tent. This method of sacrificing the follower has been the method of every leader from Alexander to Garibaldi. What if the chieftain had jumped over the precipice? What if the commander should seek out the thickest of the fight? Christ is the one leader who always reserved the most dangerous spot for himself. He never sent another; he rather exposed himself to the full fury of the storm. Instead of sending others down, he went himself. He bore the followers' dangers, endured their temptations, healed their sicknesses, carried their sorrows. He gave himself for them. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—N. D. Hillis.

CHRIST THE LIBERATOR.

"Loose him and let him go!" At this command of Jesus they unwind the bandages from the limbs of Lazarus, and by the old familiar path he walks back to his old home. This was the master miracle of all which Jesus wrought during his incarnation, but he is still doing for imprisoned souls what he did for the body of his Bethany brother when it had lain four days in the sepulchre.

I looked not long ago with genuine pity on a noble eagle, caged in a public park, as an exhibition for schoolboys. The old grey mountaineer felt its galling imprisonment, and occasionally flapped its wings as if it were homesick for the skies. "Loose him and let him go," was the thought inspired by the sorry sight, and how he would have sailed off to fly in company with the sun. Eagles were not born for slavery. I thought, too, as I looked at the chained bird, how much he resembled some fettered souls, yes, some Christian souls that are terribly tied down by unbelief. Too many people have enrolled themselves in the Church—some have entered the ministry—with a heavy clog that binds them to the lower earth. It hampers them, hinders them, and is fatal to all spiritual joy or growth in holiness. Many a young convert begins his religious life with a doubting and desponding spirit. He nurses his fears in a morbid way, and mistakes all this gruesomness for humility. He is a chained bird from the skies.

Others are fettered by besetting sins, from which they have never cut loose. They have never made a clean break with their old sinful self, or with the beggarly elements of this world; they are hoppled with practices and associates that they have never cut loose from. They have probably passed from death unto life, yet they appear very much as Lazarus would have looked if he had walked the streets of Bethany in his ghastly grave-clothes! This is a pitiable style of religion: it brings but little joy to its possessor, and gives him or her no power in the community. While they are content to be what they are, there is no hope for such manacled professors. Their only hope is in a timely and thorough repentance, and a fresh work of Christ, a deeper and thorough work, and for this they must earnestly seek, or else they will be chained birds in a church cage to the last.

Some really good people are clogged by bodily ailment—dyspeptic stomachs or weak nerves, and they see but little sunshine in their Christian experience. Bunyan has depicted several specimens of these pilgrims who hobble towards heaven on crutches, until death unloses them and lets them go. Such Christians are to be pitied more than blamed; they are rather patients in Christ's hospital than soldiers on his battle fields.

False doctrin, false views of sin and of Christ are at the bottom of a great deal of this spiritual debility. Every error is the enslaver of the soul. Truth makes us free; and if the Son makes us free, we shall be free indeed. Martin Luther was a chained eagle in the Erfurt Convent until that heaven-sent truth, "The just shall live by faith," unloosed him. Thomas Chalmers was another chained eagle, but when the great doctrines of man's utter guilt and Christ's redemption liberated him, he soared up into the empyrean, the king of Scotland's Gospellers. John Wesley never attained to a full salvation until in that little London prayer-meeting his eye sested on these words: "The Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." I once visited that little room—just out of Aldersgate street—as the real birthplace of Methodism. The great liberator of imprisoned souls is Jesus Christ.

Drunkenness is both a sin and a disease; while we may apply medical tonics to sustain the body and the pledge of total abstinence, yet the converting grace of Christ alone can deliver from the slavery of sin. Every true revival in a church repeats the miracle of Bethany. We see dead souls brought to life. We hear tongues unloosed to pray. Professing Christians who had been dragged down by worldliness, or hamstrung by unbelief, are let loose into freedom and a joy to which they had been strangers.

To every member of our churches who is dragging out a half-dead religion, the Holy Spirit comes with the arousing call, "If ye be indeed risen with Christ, seek those things which are above!" Instead of sitting in the gates of the tomb, cast away your grave clothes and begin to live as Christ's freemen and Christ's witnesses, and the heirs of a magnificent inheritance. Look higher! Live higher! Get a new grip on Christ and then go out and labor to draw sinners from the pit of hell. This is the revival we all need. We need a new consecration to Christ and a fresh baptism of his Spirit, for we can never convert an ungodly world while we are gasping for life ourselves. If Christ unlooses us, we shall be free indeed, and where his Spirit is, there is liberty.—Dr. Culer.

There is a plant called samphire, which grows only on cliffs near the sea. But though it grows near the salt waves, yet it is never found on any part of a cliff which is not above the reach of the tide. On one occasion a party of shipwrecked sailors flung ashore were struggling up the face of precipitous rocks, afraid of the advancing tide overtaking them, when one of their number lighted upon a plant of samphire, growing luxuriantly. Instantly he raised a shout of joy, assuring his companions by this token that they were now in safety. The sea might come near this spot, and perhaps cast up its spray, but would never be found reaching it. Such is the position of a soul in Christ. Justified and united to Him, the person may be in full sight still of the world's threatening and angry waves; but he is perfectly safe, and cannot be overwhelmed.—Bonar, in Zion's Herald.

THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1906.

The man who testifies that he "cannot keep awake in Church anywhere, except on the back seat," is close kin to the one sitting next to him, who told the preacher that by the time his sermon reached him it was "mighty thin."

It is said that a preacher destitute of humor will "miss many things." Among other things, "he will miss making after-dinner speeches." Let no preacher grieve over that loss. The world is not dependent on preachers who are good for nothing except to eat and make after-dinner speeches.

Dr. Lovett, in the Wesleyan, asks: "Does anybody know a 'skirt of woods' thickly stocked with good sticks of bishop timber?" Yes, if you persist in spelling Bishop with a little "b." But Dr. Greathouse, of Texas, tells the readers of one of our papers that we want men who, if put into the office, "will not be an embarrassment to themselves or to the Church." Men in that class are not numerous in any section.

In reading of organic union, we sometimes see a sentence like this: "We will wait and not hurry the Divine will in this matter." It always puzzles us. Is it the will of God that the two Methodisms in question should unite? If it is, why should anyone hesitate to sanction the union? Or does the brother who writes thus mean to say that he will wait until he knows what the Divine will is? If so, how is he to find out? Will he accept a change in his own mind as an indication of the will of God? But suppose all others who have stood out against organic union should still remain firm—then what? Should the change in his mind satisfy him that all his brethren are wrong, and in rebellion against God?

Since the new hymnal is the authorized Hymnal of the church, and the only one, we are heartily in favor of its use in all the services, in the Sunday school, as well as in public and social worship. We use it in the little church where we worship and sometimes try to preach; and we follow the new order of service without skipping any of the bracketted parts. At the same time we are persuaded that the book was not produced in answer to a general demand by the preachers or people of Southern Methodism, but to gratify a sentiment. It is our book, and we join the editor of the Midland Methodist in exhorting everybody to get the book and use it. We are neither mad nor "grumpy," Brother Burrow.

IS THE REVIVAL HERE?

Many times during the past two years or more we have heard it said that we are on the eve of a great revival—perhaps the greatest the world has ever known. The prediction, in a measure, has been fulfilled, especially in Europe. Has the revival begun among us?

We understand by revivals, a quickening of the spiritual life of the Church. Such a revival leads to greater activity in personal work, and works of benevolence. Such a revival generally leads to the conversion of sinners, and adding them to the Church. If these fruits, or evidences are not seen, the revival, no matter how great the crowds, or how much noise is produced, is shallow and worthless. Judged by these signs, we see no more evidence of a revival now than there was a year ago. Judged by the ingathering of the churches, there is not quite so great an evidence, for 1905 was not so fruitful in numbers as 1904.

There are those who tell us that the revival is here. They see it, not in the quickening of the churches, and conversion of sinners, but in the quickening of the public conscience. They reason thus: "Every great revival has had its inception in an idea or truth that has laid hold of the public mind." In proof, they point to the revival of the Sixteenth Century, produced under the preaching of Luther, who brought to light the long-concealed doctrine of justification by faith; to the revival under Wesley, who proclaimed the doctrine of free and unlimited grace, as opposed to ultra-Calvinism; and to the great work of Mr. Moody, whose leading thought was the love of God. Now they ask: "Is not that other great truth, the righteousness of God, commanding the minds and consciences of men?"

There can be no doubt that gracious influences are at work on the public conscience. The revolution in Ohio, by which the candidate of a political party with about 200,000 majority was defeated by the candidate of the opposing party by 44,000 majority, thus turning in a single season about 244,000 votes, which turning was not on a political, but a moral issue. It was civic righteousness that wrought the overthrow of corrupt rule in Philadelphia; that made Mr. Folk Governor of Missouri, and that exposed the shady and shameful doings of insurance lords in New York. It is a quickened public conscience that is to-day forcing public officers to search out and expose corporation and municipal "graft" wherever it is suspected.

All these things are good; but we are not willing to accept them as the fulfillment of the prophecy of a widespread revival of religion. The hand of God may be in these movements, for "He maketh the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder of wrath doth he restrain." But civic righteousness is not the whole of religion, and, however thorough and widespread, does not effect the quickening of the individual conscience, nor bring into vital relation with God.

The revival we need, and for which we pray, must be in the Church—not in the State. If it is only a civic concern, and men should be influenced to work for nothing save the purification of the State, the Church would be left just where it is, and the so-called revival would prove to be a failure. By all means let us have a turning to righteousness on the part of those who direct the government, but in the Church let us have contrition before God, and a thorough re-consecration to his service. This is the demand of the hour. Nothing short of this will insure personal safety, or fire the heart with zeal for the salvation of souls. It requires this to produce an awakening among the unsaved. The Psalmist prayed: "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy Spirit; then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." Let the Church become thoroughly alive to its own needs, and get right with God, and live every day that manner of life demanded of persons professing godliness, and the influence would pervade every community and sweep hundreds and thousands into the fold of Christ.

The signs indicate the coming of such a revival. The power of God has been felt and seen in Canada, and has reached over into the cities of our land. It may reach our Sunny South. God grant it. We would rejoice to see an old-fashioned meeting, and to hear the glad shouts of saints and new-born souls. But we would not be disappointed should the gracious work show itself in altogether a different way. No matter; let it come any way the good Lord may see fit to send it. What we want is to see the Church revived and sinners converted.

IS IT A FALSE ALARM?

The St. Louis Christian Advocate says: "Taking into account the Young Men's Christian Association, the student movement, the young peoples' societies of Christian Endeavor, and similar organizations connected with the various churches, it seems probable that at least half the church membership is composed of men, young and old. So long as this is the case it is not easy to perceive any special cause for alarm."

What the St. Louis says may be true, but the alarm sounded is not over a supposed decrease of the number of men enrolled as church members, but of the absence of men from the regular services of the church. And that is the point to which the editor calls attention in the opening paragraph of his article.

It does not follow because the membership of the church is composed of an equal number of men and women that as many men as women attend public and social worship. It is declared that men, in large numbers, absent themselves from religious service. It is on this account that an alarm is sounded. There was no such alarm a few years back. The alarm sounded today is not the result of "nervousness," nor founded on imaginary conditions. Nor can it be poohpoohed into silence by saying, "Somebody said that he read somewhere that somebody else thought that there was a general impression in the minds of the people that a distinguished preacher had once observed that, in his opinion, more women than men attended the ordinary ministrations of the church."

Our observation during the last five years confirms the oft repeated statement that more women attend church than men. Often have we seen twice as many women as men in the congregation, and not infrequently have we seen as high as five women to one man, and this not at one church, but at several. At the meetings of a young peoples' society, widely advertised, we have been present when, but for the preachers on hand, the men attending could have been counted on the fingers of one hand.

There is no false alarm on this subject. It is true, and fortells danger. It avails nothing that the men and women belonging to the church are equal in number, and that the men pay the biggest proportion of money for the support of the church, as long as the men neglect or ignore the duty of attending upon its ordinances. Spiritual dearth will ensue, and in the end the decimation of the church's ranks. The young men of today who ignore the church, will tomorrow have wives and daughters who will imbibe their spirit and follow their example. And then what?

How general the state of things is, as we have seen it, we do not know. But it must be far wider than our own personal observation. Else we would not hear the alarm proclaimed from so many quarters. Our observation is confined to the cities. It may not now be observable in the country, but if it is true of the cities it is only a question of time when it will be true of the country. The cities set the pace of life everywhere and in everything.

PERSONAL.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, of Alexandria, passed through the city on Monday last on his way to Nashville to attend the Student Volunteer Convention.

We thank Dr. W. H. LaPrade, of Jackson, Miss., for words of approval and appreciation, and for the kind invitation to visit his charge, which we hope to do some time this year. The Doctor is arranging for an active canvass in behalf of the Advocate.

Rev. R. O. Weir, of Zachary, La., spent a day or two last week in the city. He reports that Rev. R. W. Tucker, Presiding Elder of the Baton Rouge District, had the misfortune to lose his barn by fire a few days since. The loss of barn and contents was total, except a small quantity of corn.

A correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate, Little Rock, Ark., says that Rev. T. L. Mellen is moving up things in Cordell, O. T., his new charge. We feel sure that the good people of Cordell get the pure Word, and, do not wonder that they have largely increased the salary over last year's figures.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., has been doing excellent work for the Advocate. He has sent us thirty-nine new subscribers and secured the renewal of nine others. Such work is appreciated.

Rev. H. T. Gaines, Presiding Elder of the Sardis District, is much encouraged in his work. The Quarterly Conference services have been spiritual, salaries raised above last year, and reports for the first quarter agreeably surprising. The prospect is fine for a glorious year.

We acknowledge an invitation to the marriage of Mr. Walter McDonald to Miss Malcour Etoile, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. John A. Randolph. The marriage will be celebrated March 6 in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Baldwyn, Miss. We will not be able to accept the invitation to be present, but we extend to the happy pair our best wishes. May they live long and prosper!

Rev. J. J. Smylie, of Lake Arthur, La., one of our most useful men, fears that he will be compelled to retire from active work for a while on account of an affection of the throat, which is giving him great trouble. He came to the city last week for medical examination, and was told by the physicians that he would be compelled to change to another locality. We hope the case is not serious.

We had the pleasure on a recent Sunday of worshiping with the brethren of the Carondelet Street Church in their temporary quarters on Calliope Street. The pastor, Rev. J. E. Wray, was greeted by a good congregation, and he preached a thoughtful and heart-searching sermon. It was brim-full of Gospel; and presented in a way that gave it a telling effect. Brother Wray is much loved by his people.

A note from Rev. John A. Randolph, Chaplain, informs us that he has leave of absence for a short time, and will be at home during March and April. If any of the preachers would like to have him speak to their people on the Philippines and the East, he would be glad to make a limited number of engagements. The only compensation he asks is the privilege of taking collections for his army work. Those who are interested will address him at Baldwyn, Miss.

Rev. H. C. Edmondson, of Tocco lo, Miss., and Rev. D. M. Gean, of the Randolph Mission, combined to raise a list of subscribers for the Advocate, and have sent in a list of twenty-eight, of which the former secured sixteen and the latter twelve. Brother Edmondson is in fine spirits, with fine prospects ahead. His first Quarterly Conference was the best for the first quarter in a long time. There is marked improvement in the Sunday schools. He has visited seventy-three families one or more times since Conference. He is doing well. May he reap a rich harvest of souls.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

In another column will be found a communication from Rev. W. W. Woollard, President of the Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference, in which he calls attention to the mid-year meetings. The Annual Conference advised the meeting of all the boards at the same time and place. It is a new departure, and, we dare say, will prove of great profit to the various interests concerned. It will bring together a large number of brethren, each one of whom, though directly interested in his own special work, will have a better opportunity than at the Annual Conference, to get acquainted with the work of others, and thus be inspired to greater interest in all. The move is also in the interest of economy of time and expense. This the brethren of the various boards will appreciate. If this joint meeting in June proves to be a success, the plan will doubtless be continued.

A BIT OF INFORMATION.

It may be of interest and profit to our readers to know that the Methodists of Spokane, Wash., are arranging a "midsummer excursion" from Spokane through the Yellowstone National Park. They extend an invitation to Methodists throughout the country and other Christian people to join them. Persons who desire a summer trip of the kind indicated will find it to their interest to communicate with Rev. Henry L. Rasmus, South, 217 Howard St., Spokane, Wash.

BISHOP MORRISON AT BROOKHAVEN.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Yesterday was a great day with the Methodists of Brookhaven. Bishop Morrison was with us, preached a great sermon on "Partnership With God," and took a collection, which will more than pay our church debt of $3,400. This debt has stood for more than two years a menace to every forward movement in the church, and a nightmare to many of the members. It will soon be a thing of the past, and the church at Brookhaven will take its place among the very best churches in the State. We have a membership of more than 400, and most of them are loyal and true. The Official Board is made up of good men, who recognize and appreciate the responsibilities of their office.

The Church has responded to every request made by the pastor. Yesterday's collection represents a great deal of sacrifice. Bishop Morrison has consented to come back soon and dedicate our new brick church, which was built during the pastorate of Brother C. W. Crisler. Doctor, we would be very glad to have you with us at that time.

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

CONFERENCE JOURNALS.

The journals of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences for 1905 are in hand, the former reaching us nearly a week in advance of the latter. The editors have done their work well, and are entitled to the thanks of the brethren. Both journals were gotten out by the same printing establishment, and the work is excellent. These journals should be in the hands of the Methodists throughout the Conferences. We thank the editors, Revs. A. F. Watkins and H. M. Ellis, and Rev. J. R. Countiss, for complimenting this office with copies.

MACBETH's lamp-chimney would have to cost five times what they do before it would pay you to buy any other. Buy a poor lamp-chimney and it breaks; no name on it, no way to know. No way except to get the kind with MACBETH on them. I send the Index to Chimneys free—write for it. Address

ZWOLLE, LA.

Dear Advocate: Everything is moving on pleasantly on this charge. We reached our post here on Jan. 18, in time to say "good-by" to Brother Patterson, the out-going pastor, who is greatly beloved by the people here.

We were very cordially received by the members and friends of the Church, who have already given us two big "poundings," and have kept up a sort of continuous fusilade of good things.

Our lines are fallen in pleasant places. We have been very hard at work since we came, fixing up and improving the parsonage. The brethren are planning for enlargement in the church building at Zwolle, as it is now too small for our Sunday school work to be effectively carried on.

There are very hopeful signs at the other points on the charge, and we are praying for and expecting a fruitful year. J. M. WEEMS.

NORTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have met most of my people at church in North Bossier Charge. I find an energetic and enterprising people in the charge.

Cotton growing and lumber manufacturing is the chief industries. It seems to me that the people here live to be a blessing to all or each other. Their every emotion of heart seems to revolve upon the point of brotherly and neighborly love, instead of revolving upon the pivot of selfishness.

We had a well-attended quarterly conference. The preacher in charge was made the happy recipient of $120.20; the presiding elder, $20.50; foreign missions, $3.

The outlook for the Conference year is fine.

People who move out and work as these have since I came on the charge surely love God and keep his commandments.

I have no parsonage as yet, but the people tell me that they want a fine parsonage at Plain Dealing. The good people at Bolinger, La., propose to give us a home till the parsonage is built out and out. I am in one of our good and saintly old-time Methodist homes.

May the choicest blessings of heaven fall upon and remain with the dear, good people that I am to serve.

T. J. HOLLADAY, P. C.

Plain Dealing, La.

PHILADELPHIA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Thinking possibly some of the readers of the Advocate would like to know something of the Philadelphia Circuit, I pen the following:

My family and I reached here Dec. 27, 1904, at 4:30 p.m. We were met at the depot by several of the brethren, with conveyance for ourselves and baggage, and when we arrived at the parsonage we found several more brethren and a number of the elect ladies awaiting our arrival to give us a cordial greeting. We were introduced to a warm fire and soon to a warm supper.

After our friends had looked well after the bedding, the wood and such other things as were necessary to make us comfortable, they took their leave. After their departure we found they had left very substantial compliments in the dining-room and larder. To these "compliments" others were added day after day, and they keep coming.

We find here a growing town of more than 700 population. New residences and business houses are being built every day. The commercial and financial status of the town has increased at least 100 per cent in the last twelve months, and is still growing.

We have not a few good people here, who love their church and their preacher. We preach here two Sundays in each month, and are greeted at each service by a large and attentive congregation. The Sunday school is improving, and the Wednesday night prayer meeting is very well attended.

We have two other churches, Mars Hill and Hester's Chapel—two as fine communities as are to be found in the country.

Our First Quarterly Conference has passed into history. It was an enjoyable occasion. The "beloved" was on hand looking after the affairs of the church in his usual cheerful mood, and presiding in his usual pleasant, but positive, style. We are always glad to see him.

The Stewards made liberal provision for the preacher and his family. May the Lord help us to prove ourselves worthy of their confidence and liberality! Success to the Advocate!

T. J. O'NEIL.

CITY BOARDS OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

"City Boards of Church Extension may be organized in cities having three or more pastoral charges of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the following general provisions: (1) The members of said Boards shall be elected at the quarterly Conferences on nomination of the preachers in charge, who, with the presiding elder of districts embracing such cities, shall be ex-officio members thereof. (2) The said board shall have authority to locate churches and parsonages, advise quarterly Conference of their size, style and cost, secure donations and funds in the cities where located for the erection of the same, and they shall see that the title in each is secured in trust for the church as the discipline prescribes. (3) They shall co-operate with the General Board of Church Extension in the procurement of special loan funds to be administered by said General Board according to its regulations for the benefit of the particular cities in which they are raised when so directed by the donors, or requested by the city boards concerned. (4) They shall report to the annual meeting of the General Board the names and value of church edifices and parsonages aided by them, the amount of their receipts and disbursements, and such other items as may be of general interest. No part of their work shall conflict with the collections and operations of the General and Conference Boards of Church Extension." Discipline, page 162; p. 392, Art. 11.

The importance of the law of this part of our church cannot be overestimated.

The method employed in our growing towns and cities in the long ago and in some cases even down to the present may be stated about as follows: Our people unitedly built the first Methodist Church in the town and when the time arrived for a second church, the few of the people in the vicinity of the proposed church were allowed to build as they might be able and the main body of our people were content to sit and worship in the first church and let the few build, and the result has usually been that the second is only a mission chapel, and so with the third church.

This law is designed to demand, after the third church has been built and further progress is called for, the unification and co-operation of all the wisdom and strength we may have in our church in any city in every new church enterprise to be undertaken. The fact stares us in the face that the cities throughout our territory are outgrowing our churches, and I may add that they are outgrowing all the churches, and it becomes our people to bestir themselves in all the cities. I am thankful to be able to encourage them to do so by the statement which I can very confidently make that the General Board of Church Extension is heartily willing to co-operate with them as far as it may have the means to do so.

I am sorry to say that in many of our cities, the law of the church above quoted has been ignored to the present time. Last year only three City Church Extension Boards sent reports to this office. I am sure that there are many more than these three cities in which we now have City Boards organized and at work, and I expect to receive full reports from all of these, and by publishing a suitable account of them I hope to stimulate all our city people who have not yet organized to do so without further delay. Better far that our people should go in advance of the law on this subject and unitedly build the second and third churches than to ignore this very helpful and important provision of the discipline and fail to do the very best that is possible in the hope that they may rescue the perishing thousands that are on the road to ruin and that are now creating almost unbearable confusion in sections of our cities which are not unusually called slums, and that are in fact a menace to the peace of the city and of the land. It will give me very great pleasure to be of any service I possibly may to any of our brethren who may be willing to organize their people for united effort to set forward the work of the church in any of our cities. In union there is strength and the condition of our city work demands that we bring to bear all the force that is possible upon it and do this as soon as we possibly may. I will be glad to hear from any of the brethren on the subject, and I trust that all our City Boards will furnish me their Annual Reports promptly.

HOW TO GET RID OF CATARRH.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent Southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to DR. J. W. BLOSSER, 469 WALTON STREET, ATLANTA, GA., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

All charges in the Mississippi Conference expecting to make application to the General Board of the Woman's Home Mission Society for aid in building or repairing parsonages should have such application, with letter containing full data and particulars, in the hands of the Conference corresponding secretary not later than March 1.

Last year some charges failed to get before the General Board because the applications came too late.

God must be sought and seen in His providences; it is not our actions in themselves considered which please Him, but the spirit in which they are done, more especially the constant, ready obedience to every discovery of His will, even in the minutest things, and with such a suppleness and flexibility of mind as not to adhere to anything, but to turn and move in any direction where He shall call.—Madame Buyon.

HOW TO GROW EARLY CABBAGES.

If you have it, select a piece of mediumly low, well-drained land. Do not put on any fertilizer in the fall or early winter. Plow this land as thoroughly and as deep as you can, so long as you do not turn up the subsoil. I usually plow eight to ten inches deep, pulverize thoroughly with good clod-breaker, or harrow. Be sure that all lumps are broken and the soil is fine and soft. Lay off your rows, east and west, if you can, thirty inches apart, using a bull-tongue plow for the purpose. Just before you order your plants make up your beds, by throwing two furrows together, with a single-horse turn plow. Then firm the beds by rolling them with a light roller, such as you would use in rolling hay land. "In small gardens use a plank for firming them." Remember that no fertilizer is to be applied until after the plants are set. When your plants arrive take the baskets to the field, and as you take the plants from the basket dip the roots in water to moisten them. Then set your plants on the south side of the bed, far enough down the side so that the top of the bed is above the top of the plant. This is done to keep the cold north and northwest winds from twisting and breaking the plants while small. Your plants should be set twenty inches apart in the row, and the entire stem of the plant up to the first leaves should be in the soil. Pack the soil good and tight about the roots. The soil should be so firm that the leaf of the plant would pull off before plant would pull out. In a climate where the thermometer does not go below eighteen or twenty you can get best results by setting your plants in December and January. Where the thermometer goes below eighteen it is best to set them in February and March. The object of setting in cold weather is this: the top of the plant is dormant and will stand severe cold without injury. The roots are in land, where there is no fertilizer, and they continue to grow and spread all winter. About two weeks before your regular spring weather opens up take a turn plow or half-shovel and throw a furrow away from the plants in each alternate row. Run the furrow as close to the plants as you can. Then put in this furrow fertilizer analizing 8 per cent ammonia, 7 per cent phosphoric acid, 5 per cent potash, at the rate of 1,000 pounds to the acre, and then throw the furrow back, working dirt well up around the plants.

This working will have worked and fertilized one side of each row. About ten days after the first working, work and fertilize the other alley in exactly the same way. You will then have worked both alleys and have put on 2,000 pounds of fertilizer to the acre. From this time on keep both alleys well cultivated and the soil as open as possible, using a diamond tooth harrow and cultivator. The roots that have been growing all winter will now take up the fertilizer very rapidly and make you a crop of cabbage two or three weeks earlier than you can make them by growing your plants.

In purchasing your plants be sure that you get them from a reliable grower, who uses nothing but high-grade seed, as the success or failure of your crop will depend upon the seed from which the plants were grown. Reliable seed growers select their seed from only the perfect heads of cabbage, cutting out all imperfect heads before they seed. Some seasons they have to cut out over one-half of their seed crop. Other growers allow the entire crop to make seed. Seed selected by the first class of grower will cost you three times as much as the seed grown by the second class. The cost of seed is about two-thirds the cost of growing plants, and for that reason the plant grower who uses the better grade seed cannot sell you plants at the same price as the grower who uses the cheaper grade seeds. LAST BUILDING OF MERIDIAN MALE COLLEGE BURNED.

Trouble seems never to come single-handed. We are sorry to announce that the last remaining building of the Meridian Male College, the new building that was erected last summer, was destroyed by fire on Monday evening, Feb. 5, while the students and faculty were at supper in the tabernacle, several hundred yards away. The evening was bitter cold, and some student built up a large fire in the stove to have his room warm when he returned, and came back to find the College in flames. A brisk north wind fanned the flames so that in a very few minutes the building was in ashes. Nothing was saved, not even the office supplies, bills, receipts or ledgers. Dr. M. A. Beeson, the President, was burned on the head, neck and hands trying to save his ledgers, but lost them, after all. His wounds were not serious, and he was up the next day. There was $3,000 insurance on the building and $500 on the furniture. This is certainly a serious blow to this College, coming just one month and one day after the other building had burned. It is a severe testing, but His grace is sufficient. We are trusting it will rise above the ashes, larger and better equipped for greater usefulness than ever before.

Not the making of a fine career, but the simple doing of God's will, is the one true aim in living. Thus only can we achieve real success. If we do this, though we fail in the earthly race, we shall not fail in God's sight.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

JUNIOR LEAGUE.

"Good news for us."—Luke ii, 11.

Dear Junior Leaguers: May I ask you to let me talk to you a wee bit about your prayer-meeting lesson for next Sunday afternoon? I think the subject of it is lovely—don't you? Let's repeat it together: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

Children, you haven't an idea how much cheer and sunshine you give to this every-day world of ours by your presence in it. A few days ago, a lady was walking on one of the avenues of this city. She was weary and felt depressed in spirits, when just before her there appeared a baby-carriage, in which nestled a brown-eyed, rosy-cheeked child. The baby looked at her in a sweet, wistful, innocent way and—do you know?—the lady felt actually refreshed. Without knowing it, the little one, in her guileless infancy, had been as sweet in her influence as the fragrance of violets is to the senses.

And what about the babe Christ? If God had wanted to, he could have opened the heavens and sent his Son down as a man. But are you not glad that Jesus was born on earth, dear, loyable baby? I am. Did you see anything sweeter or prettier than your very own baby-sister or brother? No, indeed, you answer. You would not have him any other way, but just little like that, so that you can hug and pet him to your heart's content. Well, the good news comes to us that "Christ the Lord" is born "in the city of David." Let us join hands then, and go to the town of Bethlehem. We walk through many narrow streets, but at last we come to the inn. Quickly we enter, for love lends wings to the feet. On we go, past the largest, best rooms, and then we stop before a low door, pass in and see the precious infant held tenderly in the arms of his mother, Mary. The morning is in its freshness and infancy, and so is the Christ. We fall at his feet and cry: "Our King! Our Lord! Our Savior!" All childhood is hallowed and blessed and beautified by the birth on earth of the babe of Bethlehem. The dewey purity of his first morning here passed away and gave place to the heat and burden of the day, but the Christ was as spotless and unspoiled on the day of his death as he was on the day of his birth. We ought to be so glad of that, for we can look up to him with so much faith and reverence, knowing that the lily itself is not purer than he, or that unbroken snow is not whiter than he was in heart.

Dear Juniors, suppose each one of you start out afresh to-day and try to live the Christ life? Did something go wrong yesterday, and did you forget to be good? Well, don't be discouraged, but begin over again, and pray the dear Savior to help you.

"He is willing to aid you.
He will carry you through."

After church service to-day, I read such a pretty little story. It was about a young teacher who had charge of a country school. She had dismissed her pupils, and was feeling so lonesome, for she was far away from home and loved ones. The little teacher put her head down on the desk and murmured, "Nobody cares." A rush of tears came to her eyes. Just then she heard a light footstep, a gentle, small hand was laid on hers, and a kind child's voice said: "I thought you felt bad, and I wanted to get you some candy, but could not; so I went into the fields and gathered you a bunch of clovers and buttercups." The teacher looked up and smiled brightly through her tears. She said that it seemed to her that the whole room was blooming with clovers and buttercups.

Leaguers, bring happiness and peace to all whom you meet. Jesus "went about doing good." By your pure, young, unselfish life, spread the Gospel—the good news of the coming of the babe of Bethlehem.

Sunday School

(By W. B. Campbell.)

FOR MARCH 4, 1906.

Matthew v. 1-16.

Golden text: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "The Beatitudes; or, Jesus Tells Who are Blessed."

The Ten Commandments, the Lord's prayer and the Sermon on the Mount contain about all the theology necessary for the foundation of a saving faith. A close study will reveal the fact that our Lord began his teaching with more simple matters than the deep truths contained in the Sermon on the Mount. He had used object lessons to impress the first elements of his mission on earth. Healing the sick told them that he had come to make the soul well, as also the body. Giving sight to the blind taught them of a clearer vision of himself as the Son of God. Raising the dead taught that sin could kill us eternally, unless we believe his life-giving words.

After having laid the foundation for building the Christian life, he knew that they must have a clear view of the comforts that surround the believer. "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." They had read and learned the thunderings of Sinai, which was the letter; and now they were being taught the interpretation of the law. The great Master had come to fulfill it all. Listen: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill, but I say unto you that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause * * *," teaching that the sin of act is preceded by the sin of thought; teaching that as act proceeds from thought, so thought must be brought in obedience to the captivity of Christ. (2d Cor. x, 5.)

Studying on this line, we will readily comprehend the fulness of the Beatitudes. He looked in compassion on them as they were gathered around a little further down the mountain side than where he was seated. Then began the most wonderful sermon on record, one that takes its place as a supplement to the Ten Commandments. As we read it, we are entranced. How would we have been affected had we heard the gracious words spoken by "him who spake as never man spake?"

In our lesson our attention is especially directed to the Beatitudes, a most beautiful beginning of the sermon.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit." All we that are filled with a feeling of unworthiness, that have counted all our righteousness as "filthy rags" and have looked on all that we have done as nothing, and are satisfied to be counted with the lowest of the lowly—they are the poor in spirit, and "it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

"Blessed are they that mourn." How can the broken-hearted ever see that they are blessed? The earth is filled with those that mourn, and the greater part of them can see no hope. Our Lord says nothing of the cause of the mourning. Those that mourn for the ungodliness of men are the most to be blessed. Those that mourn for the poor and needy are Christ-like—but they all shall be comforted; for this cause does Jesus call the Holy Ghost "the Comforter." When we think of the third person of the Trinity having the special work of comforting those that mourn, then is the mourner comforted indeed.

"Blessed are the meek"—not those who try to be meek, but those that are meek without trying. Moses was the meekest man, and he inherited for his loved people all the promised land. He was unselfish, which is one of the graces of meekness. The meek are the ones that have an intense desire to work for the Lord, and also a desire to be unknown in a manner, letting not the one hand know what the other doeth. These are they who inherit the best the world can give.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness." We all want to be good; it is our most intense desire, and when we read that "there are none good," we despair until we know that it is ours to have the righteousness of Jesus Christ by faith in him; then we know that the amount of righteousness is measured by our faith; then we have "the fulness of the blessing."

"Blessed are the merciful." "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." This blessing of obtaining mercy is positively conditional. God will not pardon our sins unless we forgive "from our hearts" those who sin against us.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." O what a rich blessing—to see God!—even now, while we live, to see God—to see him in the life of the humble Christian! To see him in the simple, loving faith of the little child;—in all nature: budding leaves and blooming flowers, lofty mountains and lovely vales, the mighty rivers and the boundless ocean. But we must be pure in heart, serving Christ because we love him, remembering that "God looketh on the heart."

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." Because our Lord was the Prince of Peace, then are his faithful followers advocates of peace. It is the natural tendency of unregenerate man to stir up strife. How fascinating it is to tell that which will arouse anger! O that all would "study to be quiet and do their own business!" (1st. Thes. iii, 11.) How effective is the very presence of the humble, lowly Christian that is known as a lover of peace! One or two can keep the whole membership of any church from angry differences. "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you—not as the world giveth. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake." Think not that persecution for this cause is confined to the past days of the martyrs. A righteous man is persecuted in our day and time for no other reason than that he is a righteous man.

O what a soldier of Christ must a man be to move among men in every-day business! He needs every piece of the "whole armor of God" from the "helmet of salvation" down to "his feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace."

So, then, let us "rejoice and be exceeding glad that as we desire to receive these blessings, we can obtain help to deserve them." "Lo I am with you always." Is it true that we are the salt of the earth? Then let us pray that the salt may not lose its savor. Are we truly the light of the world? Then let our lives give "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." (2d Cor. iv, 6.) Our candle is burning—maybe under a bushel, but burning it is. Let us take it out and place it where it will give light.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works," and not give you praise, but "glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Tho' is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Mrs. ELIZABETH HOLLOWAY was born in Lowns County, Miss., Sept. 24, 1827. Her maiden name was Beatty. She first married Mr. Miles Story, and after his death she married Mr. J. M. Holloway. There are four daughters and two sons living. As her last husband died more than thirty years ago, she had to bear the great responsibility of rearing the children alone, but it was well done, as they are all taking active and useful part in the world's work, and also important part in church work. Her early advantages were good, and were turned to good account in active life. All the former pastors of Lake Circuit for the last forty years will remember her as one of their best friends. A few days before her death she fell from the front gallery, which was doubtless the immediate cause of her death. She died Jan. 28, 1906, having passed her seventy-eighth birthday. The remains were buried in the cemetery at Lake, Miss., to await a blissful resurrection.

C. McDONALD.

Mrs. LEUNA HOLLAND (nee Roberts), after much suffering, departed this life Jan. 29, 1906, in Memphis, Tenn. The subject of this sketch was born in November, 1876; professed faith in Christ and became a member of the Episcopal Church at the age of 15 years; lived a consistent member of that Church until God, in his wisdom, saw fit to call her home. She was happily married on Dec. 28, 1905, to Mr. W. T. Holland, a druggist of Memphis. Sister Holland was a brilliant lady, just in the bloom of youth, having lived an unspotted Christian life. She had many friends, who mourn her departure. She leaves a sorrowing husband and a heart-broken father and mother, one brother and one sister and a host of relatives to mourn for her. We buried her body in Jones Cemetery, near Quincy, Miss., after service by the writer, but we felt assured by the life she had lived and from her dying testimony that her real self (her soul) had returned to the God that gave it. In her last hours, when her cheeks, once rosy with life, had become sunken, and her eyes, once brilliant, had become dulled with death, she clapped her poor, bony hands together, shouting Jesus' name, and declared she was so happy. She made her husband and father, who stood weeping by her bedside, promise to meet her in heaven. She is not dead, but sleeping, and in the resurrection morn she shall rise with all the saints and shout God's praises forever. We extend our sympathy to the mourning friends, and trust they will be faithful and meet her where sad partings come no more.

O. P. ARMOUR.

Mrs. ELIZABETH JANE WALKER (nee Byrd) was born Jan. 14, 1835, in Jackson County, Miss., and died Aug. 4, 1905, in Harrison County, Miss. She was married to Mr. Samuel Walker Feb. 19, 1852. She was the mother of ten children, of whom five daughters, one son, and her husband survive her. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about 1844, and when 15 years old was converted at Old Salem Camp Grounds. On Oct. 11, 1888, she received the blessing of entire sanctification at Palmer Creek Camp Ground, under the ministry of the writer, who then made the record that "Sister Sam Walker entered Beulah land with a tremendous shout." She shouted in life, praised the Lord when dying, and testified that she was going to live with Jesus. She was a faithful wife and loving mother, and fulfilled the portrait of a holy woman, as given in Prov. xxxi, 29-31. She loved Christ and his ministers, and for them she delighted to toil. To the writer and his wife the memory of Aunt Jane and Uncle Sam Walker is very precious, for, during the yellow fever scourge in 1878, they were lovingly taken into their home, and their lives saved.

W. W. HOPPER.

On Jan. 25, 1906, the death angel entered the home of G. P. and Mrs. Delia O'Neil, and took from them their babe, GEORGE CLINTON, who was born Oct. 16, 1905. Little Clinton was the idol of his father and mother; in him centered their affections. Though so small, he was the light of the home. An aching void is left in the heart, a sad vacancy in the home, but a bright star shines on the shores of everlasting deliverance to attract mother and father there. May the Lord comfort the parents in this time of bereavement, and bring them to meet their darling in the by-and-by!

Continual sunshine and gentle zephyrs in the outward world would not produce a healthy atmosphere for animal or vegetable life. It is just so in a spiritual sense. Continued abounding in heavenly enjoyment would tend to make us relax our efforts to abide in our only safe state—that of watchfulness and prayer under a humiliating sense of our own insufficiency for any good word or work.—Rachel Hicks.

HURRICANE AT MER ROUGE, LA.

Mr. Editor: It is well known by yourself that I seldom write to the Advocate unless I have something in the way of news to impart. I have been reading of late in the columns of your paper of storms in different parts of the country, which struck the parsonage with some force, making the hearts of the preacher and his family glad. All this made my heart rejoice that the lot of some of the brethren had fallen in pleasant places.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 16th inst. the atmosphere about Mer Rouge became very close, and without any warning the wind commenced to blow at a fearful rate.

To alleviate our fears, a good sister got the preacher and his wife away from home under pretext of selecting hymns for the choir. But the preacher returned just as the cyclone struck the parsonage in full force. The wind blew in sacks of flour, hams, bacon, meal, sugar, lard, coffee, rice, grits, syrup, oil, eggs, canned goods in abundance, sweet and Irish potatoes, and many other things. The larder was full and overflowing.

These people do not know how to do a thing in a half-way style—they do everything in a whole-hearted way. In proof of this assertion, someone has said (I believe it was Gilderoy) that the hen was a prime factor in Methodism. There were four nice hens blown into the parsonage during the storm. The itinerant's faithful old horse, "Mack," was also remembered with a bale of hay.

It takes pretty good Gospel to create all this flurry. This Gospel was preached by Rev. J. M. Henry, P. E., and my predecessor, Rev. J. E. Denson.

May God bless these good people and help me to do the work committed unto me. C. T. MUNHOLLAND.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

JOHN W. BOSWELL, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1900. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager

WHOLE No. 5285. "PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD." VOL. 53—No. 10.

Glances at the World.

It is hard for common people to understand why it is that Congressmen, who receive $5,000 a year, and 10 cents a mile from their homes to Washington and back, and no postage to pay, should want free passes over the railroads. Why should they ride on a free pass and then put in their pockets the money paid them for traveling expenses? Is it not more than likely that this is the reason why many members of both houses are so frequently absent at home or other places looking after private business? Now that the roads have decided to issue no more passes, it is more than hinted that Congress will try to punish the roads. If so, will it not go far to sustain the oft-repeated charge that the roads bribe Congressmen and legislators with free passes? If the roads have sacredly observed the laws, and the terms of their charters, they have nothing to fear in the way of investigation at the hands of Congress; if they have not, then Congress is bound to look after and punish the roads, even though every Congressman had his pockets full of passes. The railroads, like all other enterprises, are entitled to "a square deal;" if they have granted rebates, or discriminated against any city, or any road, they have played false in not calling them to account. If the anti-free pass action of the railroads serves to straighten out any kinks good will have been accomplished, even though it may have been brought through the spite of Congressmen who are denied the privilege of riding on a free pass.

Shipping whiskey into prohibition territory for "Cash on delivery" (C. O. D.) is a serious business, not only because it largely nullifies the laws of the States, but because it is getting to be an annoyance to the express company that carries on the trade. It is the belief of many that the company doing the biggest business in that line in Mississippi does not transact its business exclusively with bona fide customers, but consigns packages to fictitious names, and thus technically violates the law. Mr. John Sharp Williams, who introduced a bill to properly control this inter-state traffic, made such statements before the committee in Congress having the matter in charge. Express agents have testified that the business is getting to be troublesome, but that the Company—the American Express—is under contract with one of the big distilling companies, and could not now quit the carrying if it would. The Legislature of Mississippi has unanimously petitioned Congress for relief against the law that virtually makes every express office in the State a liquor store. It is proposed to make all liquor shipments from one State to another subject to the laws of the State to which the shipment is made. Such a law would shut out the trade of foreign dealers, and go far to break up the illicit traffic.

On Friday, March 2, the most destructive tornado that ever visited East Mississippi struck Meridian, the largest town in the State. Hundreds of houses were injured—some of them demolished—and the property loss reached far into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Hundreds of people were injured, and twenty-six were killed. Two persons were unaccounted for, and it is supposed they suffered death. Citizens went to work immediately after the storm for the purpose of relieving the distressed, and, though outside aid was offered, they generously agreed to take care of the suffering themselves. This will probably impose upon them a heavy burden. Meridian is an enterprising and growing town, and though the storm was a heavy blow, the back-set will be only of short duration. The people will rise up and build, and the town will be better and stronger than before the tornado.

Since the above was written we learn that the citizens of Meridian, though making no call for help, will thankfully receive any aid that may be given.

BISHOP KEENER AS EDITOR.

BISHOP C. B. FITZGERALD, IN MIDLAND METHODIST.

There were four elements of efficiency in Bishop Keener's equipment as editor. The first was in the fact that he knew something. He was a copious reader. Men and things he knew, having consulted the best authors concerning the most important transactions. He knew what the best writers had said; he knew what the most heroic leaders had done. The first thing demanded of a man who is called to the tripod as an instructor, to guide and stimulate influence on his generation is that he shall know what has been done and what is being done by his predecessors and co-workers.

The next thing in Bishop Keener's equipment for editorial work was a sense of proportion. He did not waste his strength or space on trifles. The great themes of the gospel had the right of way of his columns. Externalities took a secondary place with him. The Pharisees that magnified these little things in the inverse ratio to their intrinsic value went elsewhere to find a channel through which to express their pedantry or they kept graciously silent. In dealing with this editor who followed his Lord in magnifying the new birth and the new life of a New Testament disciple above any fresh or curious linguistic quibbles or quirks, he avoided trifles and magnified the essentials of the gospel as revealed by its Founder.

The next item in Bishop Keener's equipment for editorship was courage. He had the courage of strong conviction. He knew Whom he believed. He knew what he believed. That clear-headedness which is indispensable to a religious teacher who magnifies that sacred office was possessed by him. His constituency would have confined almost any other limitation or shortcoming rather than a lack of moral courage. The patrons of his paper soon learned to look for his opinions, and allowed to them the weight due to the utterances of a man who was not afraid of minorities, and who refused to run with the multitude when it went the wrong way. By him mere pugnacity was not mistaken for the Christian courage which was accompanied by conscientiousness and circumspection. He fulfilled the apostle's injunction to "walk circumspectly" as well as fearlessly while going in and out before his brethren as the editor of their official organ.

Bishop Keener exhibited enthusiasm as an editor, and his enthusiasm was of the sort that is courageous. Every reader knows the difference between the enthusiasm that is genuine and its counterfeits. A book that he approved and enjoyed, a doctrine of the Gospel in which he glorified, a fellow-disciple and co-worker of fine quality and large caliber, drew from him expressions that gave to his columns the glow of hearty admiration and affection. The patrons of his paper learned to expect in its columns Methodist history suffused with a fresh charm, Methodist doctrine expounded with the earnestness and power of undoubting confidence, and the current history of Methodism recorded with the martial enthusiasm of a good soldier of Jesus Christ who was called to be a watchman on Zion's wall and a defender of the faith once delivered to the saints.

Under Bishop Keener, the New Orleans Christian Advocate achieved a high rank as a religious newspaper and did a gracious work which was turned over to his successors—a work that is blessing the Church and glorifying its all-glorious Head unto this day.

LETTER FROM GILDEROY.

Continuing my birthday meditations, I note that my mind has undergone as great a change about the reading I do as about the preaching I hear. The class of books that interested me most when I was younger fail to feed or interest me now. I never fooled away much time on flimsy or trashy books. It always seemed to me a waste of time to wade through a wide morass to gather a few wild flowers. I never acquired a taste for reading novels. I was always fond of history, poetry, biography and philosophy, and I cannot recall a time when theology did not have an attraction for me. For many years I spent most of my time reading the old theological books, mainly because I had no others to read, and also for the reason that they were worth the reading. Most of them were controversial, and this tended to develop and cultivate a disputatious spirit. Most of these old questions have been settled, or have been stored away in the lumber-room. What I gained from the old books is of little use to me now, only as it helps my own thinking and sometimes serves as a cudgel to belabor some belated traveler who has not kept up with the procession.

The books that interest me most now are works on missions, on the progress of the Gospel, "lives of Christ," treaties on the mission of the Spirit, criticism (higher and lower), metaphysics and books that stir the deeper, inner, spiritual life—books that set me to thinking, praying and seeking to know more of God. A purely polemic book has little or no attraction for me now. We are all too well agreed about the main things to fight over immaterial things. It is more important to scorch or kill the common enemy than to gain the victory in an argument over a small matter. I want books that will inform me, feed me and lift me up closer to God.

I read the Bible more now than ever before, and with far deeper spiritual insight and interest. I like to have two or three versions handy, where I can consult them on passages where I want to see more clearly. A correct interpretation or exposition of God's holy word weighs far more with me now than when I was younger—an interpretation that interprets to the satisfaction of my mind and to the longings and experiences of my own soul. I see more in the Bible and I get more out of it than ever before. All of this, likely, has colored and controlled my preaching. As I grow older I meditate on God and Divine things, and I pray more—lifting up my heart to God as I go here and there. I do not kneel to pray so often, nor do I kneel as long as I used to do, but I pray oftener and more, and get in touch with God far more readily. Indeed, I believe I am on far more intimate terms with God than at any time in my past life.

The communion of saints, conversation with spiritually-minded persons, with the preachers, with devout laymen and laywomen of our own Church and other churches, is a privilege and a joy to me. I often suffer with an intense longing for the lack of it. Those who enter into this kind of heart-to-heart conversation are not very numerous in some sections. Almost anywhere one can find people who are ready to talk about the Church in a general way, but not about experimental godliness in a particular way.

As I grow in years and in grace, I am less inclined to dispute with fellow-Christians about forms, ceremonies and modes of doing things. Some doctrines are not now as important as I once thought they were. As long as men are men, they will differ about some things. Indeed, I am not as absolutely certain about some things as I once was. They may or may not be true without at all affecting my religious life, or the religious life of my opposing brother. It is in the nature of young men to know things positively, and sometimes to know them hotly. Years of experience temper and tone down the heart of youth.

In conclusion, I remember as if it were yesterday, my interest in and my solicitude for the young men I heard when I was a boy, but I do not now recall a sermon, in whole or in part, of a single one of them. The sermons of the old men have clung to me through all these years. At the time I felt no special interest in them and no solicitude for them, but to-day I recall their texts, their expositions or Scripture, and I could write out a pretty full outline of some of their sermons. They gave me the sincere milk, the condensed milk, of the Word. It was their preaching that has stayed with me the longest and has done me the most good. If my preaching now is to abide with a few boys and girls as theirs did with me, I am willing to preach on.

Who could forget Wm. McDonald, David Harkey, Wm. Carmfield, Robt. Bonner, W. L. Bonner, G. W. D. Harris, Thos. L. Boswell, J. H. Brooks, M. J. Blackwell and others? Five of them were local and four itinerant preachers, some of them feeble and tottering from age when I first heard them. I owe a larger debt for permanent good to M. J. Blackwell than to any other preacher, living or dead. Yours,

GILDEROY.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

The greatness and divinity of God is demonstrated by the heavens, which declare his glory, and the firmament, which sheweth his handiwork; so to create wisely is divine. His love is shown in his giving this world to man; this is man's world; man is the highest type of God's creative power in the flesh, man being so highly honored as to be made in his image and invested with authority to keep and dress the garden (this earth), he ought to feel it incumbent upon him to be like his Maker, and to so conduct himself, and so care for the world as not to disappoint God in his expectation.

The concern of God for the welfare of the human race was expressed by his ministering to their suffering and their shame in the way of putting clothes upon them. (See Gen. iii, 21.) "He made coats of skins and clothed them."

You need not wait till you reach the pearly golden city on high to realize that you are blessed; just do like your Maker did—help someone that is naked or needy, someone that is hungry, and so realize that it is more blessed to give than it is to receive.

The sheep (that is the saved in heaven) were put on the right hand and saved because they had fed and clothed God's little ones. The goats were sent to hell because they had seen God's little naked and hungry, and had not ministered unto them. Which are you—a sheep or a goat?

Many mighty good folks are trusting in God because God, for Christ's sake, pardoned them—that is enlisted them into his service as soldiers or co-workers with God, and there they rest, having wrapped their talent in a napkin of self-complacency, and waited or tarried and slept till their stock of oil had run so low that their lamps went out, and they could not find the guest-chamber till the door was shut. What about your oil supply?

* * *

"The prayers of the righteous availeth much." Have you any righteous persons praying for you? "The smile of the Lord is the joy of the soul." Are you doing anything that so pleases God that he smiles on you?

* * *

Soldiers must fight for their king, servants must work for their master, so as to earn honor and wages. Are you doing anything for your Lord? How (you may ask) can a man serve God? Why, by doing just what God would do were he in your place—in fact he is in your place (your heart), if so be that you have his Spirit.

* * *

God led his children through the wilderness, fed them when hungry and brought water "out of the rock" when they were thirsty. He blessed them in their bodily wants and so proved to them that he loved them. Can't you demonstrate that same love by helping others?

* * *

Christ took a few loaves and fishes and brake and divided and "fed five thousand men, besides women and children." Have you ever tried to divide with hungry folks? If so, didn't you find that you had a plenty and fragments to gather up? If you haven't tried this, dare to do it, and find that "he that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord, and he will pay him again."

DR. A. S. YARBROUGH.

HOMER, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell—The new year has begun nicely here. The spirits of the people are buoyant. Received thus far on profession of faith three. The building committee has accepted plans for the new church. Plans were drafted by Smith & Drago, of Monroe, La. Will send a cut of same before long.

We have received the regulation pounding. The good people sent to the parsonage enough good things to eat to last some time. We serve a good, kind and loving people. All are delighted with the new dress and form of the Advocate. Our motto is an Advocate in every home of my people.

STATUS OF INFANTS AND THE NEW BIRTH.

Of late much has been said relative to the above subjects, and since much which we have seen is not clear or satisfactory, and since competition in the intellectual world and a little friction is as good for the mind and the advancement of thought as it is in the business world, I will, Mr. Editor, by your permission, advance a few thoughts relative to the above subject.

Since a large per cent of our race die before accountability can be predicated, we have one of two results following in case of the death of infants, to-wit, that they are saved, or that they are lost. The latter is justly repudiated by all. Those who contend that infants are sinners, by logical sequence, have to admit that a large percentage of the race are saved in their sins, or that they are arbitrarily regenerated or born again, by which arbitrary act they are prepared for heaven. For neither of the above conclusions do we find any evidence in the Scriptures. To say that infants are sinners, but do not know it, and for that reason are saved, must be incorrect, for it leads to a conclusion which contradicts a plain assertion of the Bible; for it says nothing impure or unclean shall enter that holy place. To attempt, therefore, to escape by saying that they are prepared by the Holy Ghost before death is a gratuitous assumption; for which, in its support, no proof-text is cited. It is a necessary assumption to avoid the former conclusion, which we have seen stands in opposition to a plain declaration of the Word of God.

I am of the opinion that, if we will go to the Bible and confine ourselves to what is written in connection with these subjects, we will have but little trouble in reaching right and satisfactory conclusions.

We must admit the infliction of the penalty of the law, and, so doing, we should ponder its death-dealing effects. Here we are made to see how utterly void the guilty pair were for moral capability, being dead. And thus it was, all died in Adam. St. Paul (Rom. v. 18) referring to the effect and the extent of the effect of the fall, says: "By the offense of one, judgment came upon all men unto condemnation." Thus we have the sequence of the fall, universal condemnation of the race. And this was unavoidable in the very constitution of things.

Having seen that the act of disobedience resulted in the death of the soul, and by sequence all moral capability and the inclination to righteousness, we are led to inquire: Whence, now, has man this moral capability and religious inclination? This, we trust, will be answered as we proceed.

When we speak of the lost life of the soul we mean it in the sense of separation from God, in whom it found its life of peace and religious capabilities.

So we rightly conclude that, if man now has moral aspirations and capabilities, it must result from the grace of God. Therefore, whatever of good discoverable in man in rendering homage and obedience to God is simply man's voluntary use of that grace by which he has the inclination and the ability to respond, and to place himself in correspondence with law, and by so doing secure the conversion of the soul; and this is all that God had, or has in view, in the great scheme of redemption. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. (Psalm xix.)

None will be so foolish as to think of the law being an active agent in this instance; but rather a revelation of a system for act on; it being admitted that since the fall, apart from the grace of God, man was incapable of responding to religious demand, besides having lost the disposition or inclination thereto.

But now we see all men are capable of responding to instruction, and have feeling, inclining them to right living.

How are we to account for this?

Only by admitting that a prior work of the grace of God has been an accomplished fact, for the whole race of man from the day of the fall of man, and ever since, man responding to the terms of salvation or regeneration is only his voluntary use of that which God had given him. And thus it is—man becomes a co-worker with God, and the result is the evolution of the new life under the new system.

When we get rid of the idea that religion is something we get from without, and grasp the more Scriptural doctrine (as we think), that it is something developed from within, and that that something within is from God, and is life, and that that life is like all other forms of life, is germinal, and must be evolved or developed like all forms of life, which is suitable surroundings or adjustment to law, corresponding to the nature of the life to be evolved or developed, we will be relieved of many of the absurd conclusions to which we are forced by many of the positions we take in the discussion of these subjects.

We think, from the views here given, we may, without embarrassment, construct an Arminian system of doctrine which will be in accord with the Bible, agreeable to reason, and to free moral agency of man.

We will present one other paper under the above caption.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

To the Presiding Elders, Pastors and Epworth Leaguers of Mississippi Conference:

The Fourth annual session of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League, will convene in McComb City on Thursday evening, April 26, at 8 o'clock, and continue through Sunday (this being the fifth Sunday), and we ask that you announce it as you have opportunity, and be present at the Conference, with a full delegation from your Leagues; would urgently request that no district conference or protracted meeting be arranged for these dates.

We have secured so far the promise of Dr. DuBose and Rev. J. W. Shackford to be with us, and think that we will have several other workers in the different departments.

I would like to have the names and addresses of all the officers in each local chapter in the Conference; also something about the work being done in the different departments. I will certainly appreciate it, and count it a very great favor if you will do this right away.

Now, to the pastors who have no leagues, please make the effort of your life to organize a league at each of your churches and get them to send delegates to the Conference. If you need the District Secretary to help you, call on him, or any of the Conference officers near you.

Let us all make a good, strong pull together, and have the best Conference in our history—what say you? Who will be the first to answer?

The Leaguers of the Meridian District are trying to arrange to have a special car from Meridian to McComb City.

Do not forget to send us the information asked for, and at the very earliest convenient moment.

Truly yours in the cause,

W. D. HAWKINS, President.

CONFERENCE OFFICERS.

The following officers were elected at the last annual session of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League, which met in Meridian in June, 1905:

President—W. D. Hawkins, Meridian.

First Vice President—Prof. H. P. Todd, Crystal Springs.

Second Vice President—Mrs. Z. M. Davis, Vicksburg.

Third Vice President—Miss Celia Mortimer, Crystal Springs.

Fourth Vice President—Rev. H. T. Carley, Hattiesburg.

Secretary—J. B. Holland, Meridian.

Treasurer—Miss Daisie Magee, Poplarville.

All unpaid subscriptions should be sent at once to the Treasurer, Miss Daisie Magee, at Poplarville.

It is very much desired that all the pastors forward to the Secretary at their very earliest convenience a list of their respective leagues, addrsses of their officers and the number of members enrolled.

Let us begin at once to make this (the coming) Conference, which is to be held at McComb City, April 26-29 next, the most enthusiastic and profitable of all meetings we have yet held.

J. B. HOLLAND, Secretary.

Application has been made to the Southern Passenger Association for reduced rates for the occasion of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League, and we hope to make the announcement within a short time that it has been granted.

* * *

It is to be hoped that all the pastors will begin at once to talk the League Conference, for it lies within their power to make it the best Conference ever held. It will be held at a time when it will best suit their convenience to attend, and if the opportunity is accepted the League cause will receive an uplift never before experienced.

PONCHATOULA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell—The people of Ponchatoula Circuit have received us kindly for our third year and I am glad to say that we are moving off well. The Sundey schools and Epworth Leagues are increasing in attendance and interest. Rev. R. R. Jones has been assisting me in two meeting, at Hammond and Panchatoula. I can say for Brother Jones he has done a faithful and good work at Hammond. There was a better interest manifested than usual; mast all of the other churches took part with us, and there was a united effort put forth for the salvation of souls. Fifteen united with the different churches, ten of which joined our church. At Ponchatoula we had a good meeting, notwithstanding the shows and masquerade balls that were going on at the time of our meeting. There was twenty-five accessions to the church and a good revival in the church. The preacher's salary has been increased from $575.00 to $800.00. We are taking steps toward building a new church at Ponchatoula. We have much to be thankful for, and to God be all the praise.

F. N. SWEENEY, P. C.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF MAN.

If we realized the fact that we are all "children of one family," the knowledge would change our manner of life. Suppose we enter a home where several members of the family are sick and suffering: we pass from one room to another, finding in each someone in need of human help, till at last we enter the parlor, where we see the eldest daughter, dressed in royal apparel, seated at the piano playing skillfully some sweet strain, to which we listen with mingled feelings of admiration and disgust. We cannot refrain from asking, Do you not know that several members of your family are ill and need your help? "O yes," she says; "I know they need help, but father gave me a musical education, and I have a perfect right to enjoy it. I am in good health and circumstances; the other members of the family have as good a chance as I have to stay well. It is not my fault that they are sick. You surely do not think there is any harm in my playing the piano?" Any person with a heart of flesh would pronounce that girl either an ingrate or a lunatic.

A large majority of our brothers and sisters for whom Christ died are sick unto death, and we know it; still we sit in some secluded spot, enjoying all that our Father has given us and all we are able to get, lulling our consciences to sleep with the refrain, "No harm, no harm."

When called to give an account of our stewardship, we shall be asked about the affairs of this world and how we left them. We shall begin to tell how many social functions we enjoyed, what fine clothes and jewelry we wore, and how well we fed, clothed and educated our children, fully expecting to hear, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." But, instead, it will be, "Depart; I never knew you. Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it not to me."

When Christ shall have come to "restore all things," "and sorrow and sighing shall flee away," Christians may have time for the harmless enjoyment of self. But if we pretend to follow Christ we must "go with him all the way." "He went about doing good;" so must we.

"All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient." "Let us work while it is day," knowing that "we shall rest beyond the river."

NOTICE.

The members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference have doubtless seen from the Woman's Missionary Advocate that the Mississippi Conference had no report in December. I feel that a word of explanation is due them and me. I waited as long as I could for reports, and at the last I had only three district secretaries' reports, and they were meager and incomplete. I could not possibly make out a report from them, and I wrote Mrs. Trueheart to that effect.

I do not wish to seem to cast any reflection on the district secretaries; their failure may have been due to the neglect of the auxiliary secretaries to send in their reports at the proper time. Let this be a lesson to us.

If Dr. Boswell will give us space, I shall publish the reports sent to me hereafter, with the names of the societies that have not reported. In this way we can tell just where the failure lies.

MRS. A. F. WATKINS,
Corresponding Secretary.

THE ESPRIT DE CORPS.

Nothing is more important in an army of any kind that the spirit which prevails within it. The victorious spirit bodes victory and the discouraged spirit defeat. The army of the Lord is much like any other militant host in this regard. Our communion has cause for much gratitude and encouragement in the fact that we are closing another quadrennium with a spirit of almost unexampled faith and zeal. The round of Annual Conferences is now nearly over, and full attention is being turned toward the quadrennial gathering in May next. It is doubtful whether since our organization we have had a quadrennium of greater prosperity than this will prove to be when all the elements and conditions which go to make up organized ecclesiastical success are taken into the account. This judgment is made up in the absence of the official figures and rests largely upon personal observation, as we have gone through a number of the representative Conferences. The visible signs of prosperity are abundant and manifold. We have grown healthfully in numbers in nearly every part of the connection; and our ministry was never so thronged by devout and intelligent hearers of the word. Our preaching was never so enlightening nor more evangelical. The two indispensable conditions of a true gospel movement, the religious training of the young and the existence of revival influences have never so fully met perhaps in any previous four years of our history. Our Leaguers have grown in the graces of breadth and vitality, and consequently in the enjoyment of religion, and of social life within the Church. The Sunday school work is in many respects far in advance of the status even four years ago, while almost all our educational institutions of whatever grade are full to overflowing. The building of churches and parsonages has progressed at an astonishing rate, while the collections for missions both at home and abroad have largely increased. This quadrennium has marked a new era in the full payment of assessments by a number of the Annual Conferences. The divine blessing on the work of our hands has not been confined to the Church at home, but has extended in even a more marked degree to every mission field under our care.

But underneath and beyond all these tokens which reach the eye and the ear, there is something better. It is the spirit which pervades the Church from side to side. We are at peace. Possibly in no other period have the Annual Conferences been so utterly free from cliques and schisms, and all expressions of the spirit of division. We are dwelling in love. The fellowship which prevails, is of a high order, and lends strength of impact to all the movements of the Church. We have very little experimenting now with the new doctrines and strange experiences. And yet there has not been a day of greater studiousness of the doctrines of the Bible, nor a devouter searching after the deep experiences of the divine life. We have been peculiarly impressed with the growth of our people in grace and a knowledge of the truth. We have an eminently clean and able ministry for which we cannot thank God enough, and an earnest membership ready to follow its lead into large and enduring enterprises. This membership has become each year more and more conscious of its power of achievement in religious, social and educational fields which it is called to master. The development of this consciousness of power is full of significance. We have reached a day in which we shall not dare any more to be little in our plans and labors in the kingdom of God.

The General Conference which is to meet in the spring has now been practically made up—that is, nearly the whole of its constituency has been elected, and, in so far as we have seen, it has everywhere been made up without an issue in the vote. Men have been chosen on their own account as the trusted and not the virtually instructed representatives of their Conferences. This implies that the General Conference, when it meets, will be pervaded by the same spirit of courage, candor, and good fellowship which prevails throughout the great Church for which it stands.—Sunday School Magazine.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

The Greenville District Conference will be held at Leland, Miss., beginning April 13. Bishop Hoss will preside.

R. A. MERK, P. E.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.

The New Orleans District Conference will convene with the Carrollton Avenue Church on April 4, at 7:45 p.m. A complete programme will be furnished later. Let all the preachers and delegates be present.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE JOURNAL.

The statement on page 18 of the Journal of the recent session of the Mississippi Conference to the effect that E. C. Grice, with others, was continued in the class of the second year, because not present to answer the disciplinary questions necessary for reception into full connection in the Conference, is an error, and does an injustice to Brother Grice.

A few years ago Brother Grice was received into full connection in the Conference, having come to us in Elder's orders from the Baptist Church. He was received in Elder's orders, and as such needed only to take the four years' course of study. The Secretary regrets that his being an undergraduate in the class of the second year caused his name to be written among the names of others of that class who were not received into full connection.

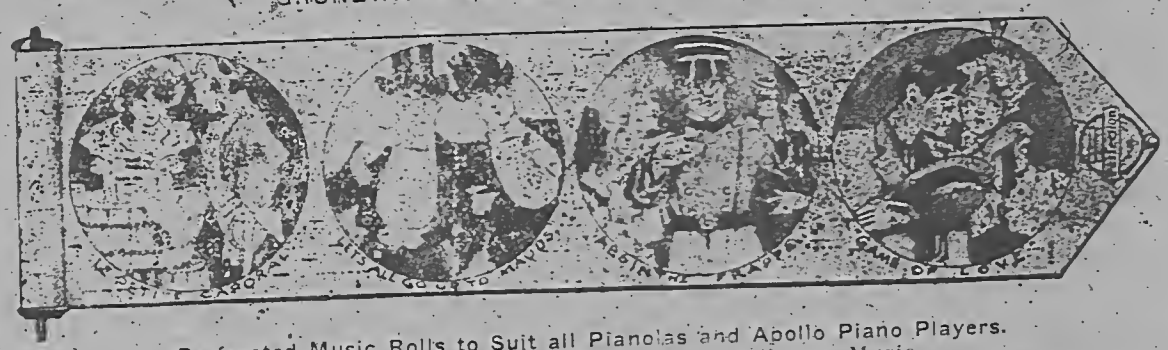
THE SHREVEPORT TRAGEDY.

It is difficult, if indeed not possible, for one to write about the fearful crime perpetrated upon little Margaret Leary Monday afternoon, Feb. 19, without yielding to the bias of passion; but as you have asked me, in order to get at the real facts, to give an account of the matter in your paper, I will endeavor so to write, that I will not find it necessary to modify my statements in the future.

In broad daylight, and in sight of houses in which people were living, and in sight of people who were near enough to recognize him, Chas. Wilson, alias Coleman, committed the double crime of murder and rape upon this fifteen-year-old child. The heart-rending details of the crime are not such as to serve any good purpose. It is enough to say that the most revolting crime was committed after the poor child had been fatally wounded by a pistol shot. The testimony in the case was absolutely convincing, and the day before the execution of the negro, which took place between twelve and one o'clock, Thursday, March 1st, he made a complete confession, not only of this crime, but of others.

The purpose of this article is not to describe the crime, or to seek to paint in real colors the blackness of the character of the brute who perpetrated it (the fact of the commission of it is more poignant than any human words can express), but to call attention to certain conditions incident to it. There could be no greater proof of the fact that the people of this community (and I think they are representative of the South) have the very idea of mob law. The feeling of men and women and children was at the highest pitch. Resentment and vengeance was in every heart. Hundreds of men gathered about the jail, and it seemed for several days that it would require the severest exercise of force to prevent a lynching; but after the people had a little time to reflect, and having become persuaded that the Court would proceed by the shortest possible legal route to the gallows with this wretch, quiet began to reign, and in an hour and a half after the expiration of the time positively fixed by law the negro was hung. Those people in another section of our common country who imagine that the people of the South enter lightly into the hateful task of lynching these fiends, are far more lavish of sentimental talk than the exercise of good common sense. I do not believe all the militia of the State would have been able to save this negro from lynching had not this assurance been given to the people. I think I speak with some knowledge of the case, as I acted as the messenger of the authorities at the funeral of the victim of this negro's lust, giving them positive assurance, in the presence of the District Judge, who was at the funeral, that no technical delay would be tolerated. Rev. H. N. Brown, the pastor of Texas Avenue M. E. Church, South, had charge of the funeral service, and this writer, at the request of the proper parties, made an appeal to the people to let the law have its course, backing that appeal with the above assurance from the court. I do not think the mere appeal made by myself had much, if any effect, but the assurance that the case would go immediately to trial, and that no technical dodges would be permitted to delay the execution, had great weight.

I wish to give the proceedings of the court in this case, which, I think, suggest the best cure for mob law and lynching. The crime was committed a little before five o'clock in the afternoon, Monday, and by nine o'clock that evening the jury commission was called in session by the District Judge. The next day the grand jury was summoned, and on Wednesday the grand jury found a true bill against the negro, and Saturday, the earliest possible time under the law, he was tried and found guilty. Then three days after, exclusive of the day of trial and Sunday, the sentence of death was executed. There was absolutely no delay in giving execution to the law. I ought to mention the fact that by appointment of the court, two of the ablest lawyers of the State represented the case of the accused. These gentlemen did nothing more than see that the accused had a fair trial. There was no attempt on their part to obstruct justice. Here I wish to make an observation: If public opinion would hold in deserved contempt the lawyer, who for the sake of a fee, or through desire to make himself a name for shrewdness and sharp practice, seeks to turn loose upon the public criminals, against whom evidence is full and clear, another great step toward the solution of the question of mob law would be gained. There is no greater enemy to good government and good morals than the lawyer who makes it his business to find ways and means to cheat the law. It is always in order, if the crime is of such a nature as to justify it, to plead for mercy in the infliction of penalty, but to seek to clear the really guilty may be "good practice according to conventional custom," but it can never be good ethics. The fact is, lynching is far more the result of the people's impatience of the delays of the courts, than the passion of the people in the presence of those crimes which furnish the occasions of mob law. Technical subterfuges at the hands of hireling at the bar constitute the primal cause, while the crimes for which this summary punishment is administered are only the occasions. The pro-sentimental feelings of the court, and the conflict of the learned lawyers in the case, in their considerate regard for the accused, ought to give confidence to the people that after a while we will reach a point at which the law's delays and mob violence will be buried the same grave, but so long as the first endures the second will survive. What is the ethical difference between hiding the real criminal under the shadows of the law's technicalities and lynching him under the darkness of night? Maybe those technical dodgers of the law might explain the difference, but to my simple perception, it seems the difference is that, in the first case it gets the technical dodger a fee, and in the other it is likely to get him an indictment before the court.



But I pass to some general observations. We of the South have been held up before the civilized world as semi-barbarians on account of the distressingly frequent instances of mob law. We are ashamed that these things occur in our country, and it is a well-known fact to those who have taken the trouble to find out that the people of the South are not noted for lawlessness. We are simply placed in circumstances which try the patience of men in an extraordinary degree. The facts show that lynching is no more indigenous to the South than to the North. The difference is that we have an element to deal with in the lower type of the negro, that the North has not. It seems almost that recent events in Springfield, Ohio, came just in time to give the uninformed reformers of the North something to think about at home. A fifteen-year-old girl is murdered and raped (I put it in the order in which the deeds were accomplished) in the very Southern State of Louisiana; the court proceeds and tries the case, the criminal is condemned and executed, not one citizen is injured by the mob, not a single innocent negro is molested. A man is shot by two negroes in Springfield, Ohio, perhaps fatally; a mob forms, citizens are injured, innocent negroes are attacked, incendiarism runs riot, a thousand soldiers and the police of the city with the fire department are unable to prevent the burning of the homes of innocent negroes—a distant echo of the same mob violence of about two years ago, when scores of negro houses were burned. Compare the characters of the two crimes: Murder in the South, followed by legal execution; rape in the South, followed by legal execution; assault, fatally fatal, in Ohio, followed by mob assault, violence which does not discriminate between the guilty and the innocent. Brethren of the North, we do not criticise you for these things, but we ask you to take a little time from your sentimental dreamings about the poor persecuted negro ravisher in the South, and consider the girls who are their victims, and on the word of a man who hates mob law and lynch law, you will discover a latent manhood in your heart that will prepare you to help us of the South in our efforts to eradicate the sources of this evil.

THE C. O. D. WHISKY BUSINESS.

To the Citizens of Mississippi:

The C. O. D. whisky business has stirred the hearts of the righteous in many neighborhoods of our great State.

The recent decision of Judge Niles on the subject would have discouraged the timid, but it has only aroused the determination of the courageous citizenship of Mississippi.

Unquestionably the laws are being violated, but even if the laws were kept they would not be sufficient for the full protection of the people. The whisky dealers are gloating over our supposed helplessness.

Some of our Mississippi Congressmen are working zealously at Washington for such changes in the interstate commerce laws as will give us protection.

Many of our noble representatives in the House and Senate at Jackson are earnestly at work on the question. The mass meeting held at Jackson on the 20th was a notable gathering. Many prominent citizens met there, with a fine representation from the House and Senate. Stirring speeches were made by Governor Vardaman, Bishop Galloway, Hon. C. H. Alexander, Hon. E. F. Noel, Hon. Sidney Smith and Mr. Hicks of Jefferson, the able Chairman of the House Committee on the liquor traffic. Such able men as those above named claim that laws can be framed that will meet the difficulties. The House and Senate seem to be practically unanimous in their desire to meet the situation effectively, and our courageous Governor is ready to lend all possible aid. Let the people realize that this is a fight between the upright citizens of this proud State on the one side and outside whisky corporations on the other. Who shall win? There can be but one answer. Our people will not stand idly by and see the express offices of the State turned into "grog shops."

I send out this letter by request of the mass meeting held in the Statehouse on the 20th. It is hoped that all papers in Mississippi will copy.

Let every citizen in every community who is a friend to law and order be on the alert. Let us assist and encourage our legislative and executive officers to the full extent of our power, and the victory will be ours.

W. T. Lowrey, Chairman.

THE CHIEF CAUSES OF CRIME.

In the course of his address to the State Health Conference at Alexandria, the other day, President Irion, of the Louisiana State Board of Health, took occasion to speak of the supreme importance to health of good cooking, and he declared that improperly prepared food was the cause of many crimes.

Without doubt, the origin of many serious diseases is to be traced to unwholesome and indigestible food, and a person suffering from dyspepsia often feels miserable and desperate enough to commit any crime, no matter how outrageous, but it is doubtful if the annals of the criminal courts record many crimes that are properly attributable to defective cuisine. When we come to strong drink the record is vastly different. It is probably not an exaggeration to say that four-fifths of all violent crimes are the result of excessive use of intoxicating liquors. The following scene from a Chicago police court, but which might have happened any large city, is from a recent Chicago paper:

Fred Taylor, 35 years old, who asserted he was an alumnus of Harvard University, was sent to the Bridewell for fifty-three days yesterday by Justice Mahoney, in the Sheffield Avenue Police Court. He did so at Taylor's request, the latter pleading to be sent to some place where he could recover from the effects of drink.

"Please, Your Honor," was his plea, "if you wish to save an honest but unfortunate man from becoming either a criminal or a suicide send me to the Bridewell long enough to get the whisky out of me and to keep me away from the cursed stuff so I may overcome the habit."

Taylor entered the Sheffield Avenue Station Tuesday night thinly clad, cold and hungry. He wore no hose and most of the sole was off one of his shoes.

"I am a human wreck, an outcast of society," continued Taylor in response to Justice Mahoney's questions. "My parents are wealthy and among the most respectable in Massachusetts and I have a wife and two of the prettiest little girls in the county. They are now dependent on the charity of my wife's mother, when they should be living in a home of their own and riding in their own carriages."

"Young man, your story interests me," said the justice. "I will grant your request and send you to the Bridewell for fifty-three days. If at the end of that time you feel strong enough to resist the craving for liquor and are still of the same resolve to once more become a man, come to me and I will help you."

The drunkard will commit any crime in order to secure the means of gratifying his depraved appetite. So also will the miserable wretch who is addicted to the use of narcotic drugs. When overcome by the demand for gratification, both men and women are transformed into creatures that descend lower than the brute beasts. They cast behind them every human quality, characteristic and capability, and are driven by one all-controlling appetite.

Of course, all crimes are not chargeable to liquor and drugs. The scientific burglar and "safe-breaker," the forger and the ingenious and plausible confidence swindler, need cool heads, strong nerves and steady hands. So does the gambler. They would be ruined by the excitement of an artificial stimulant. The intelligence and intrepedity required to carry on the operations are exciting enough, and they are universally temperate and sober, if they are to be successful, but the man or woman who comes under habitual subjection to liquor or drugs is a miserable creature who retains only the human form and but little of proper human characteristics.—The Picayune.

LIQUOR AND LAW.

The liquor people do not believe in a Christian Sabbath nor in any laws protecting it. This ought not to astonish any one: neither should it be a surprise that they antagonize any and all who stand for a quiet, God-respecting holy day. For them ther are no things holy, and whisky and Sabbath-breaking and go-as-you-please "liberty" go together. Recently the Wine and Spirit News spoke derisively of "a Christian Sabbath, which means a Peter Cartwright Methodist Sabbath, with baseball tabooed and all human joy perpetually stifled on the first day of the week." And it furthermore declared insultingly, in the face of all the laws on our statute books, "If they want baseball, excursions and places to amuse, entertain and instruct themselves on the first day of the week, they should have what they want," and yet you now and then find a preacher who is opposed to an organized fight on the saloon. It really seems some people are so afraid of political alliances, or so considerate of "feelings," as to cause them to submit to any shame.

Some say, "you can't get rid of it." Pooh! Who said it was a necessary evil? Some men apologize for the saloons, saying, "It is the poor man's club." God forbid. Some men would apologize for the devil.

The saloonist, says one of his customers died yesterday. Only a few days ago they sent one of his most frequent customers to the penitentiary for a murder done while drunk, and I hear another is in the madhouse hopelessly insane. That saloonist is losing trade. Who will take the places of these men?

Somebody's boy!
Your neighbor's boy!
Your boy!
My boy!

Men, sovereigns of the ballot, strike down this enemy of our boys. Crush the saloon!—Alabama Christian Advocate.

A GREAT SHAME.

The shame of the Nineteenth Century was that England and America made an opium and liquor market out of poor heathen China. It seems that no greater shame is to shadow the Twentieth Century than that our great government is to stand guardian over gigantic breweries and liquor shops in Cuba and the Philippines. The graveless bones of the victims of Spanish misrule, and the orphans of the Reconcentradas who died by the inch, and the blood of Christian heroes who laid down their lives for the freedom of their island neighbors, all protest. The devil and the liquor dealers go where they are not wanted.—Exchange.

A GOOD THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK.

"It is divine to forgive and forget. All great men forgive those who injure them and forget the injury. Oftentimes in our wilful obstinacy we refuse to forgive and forget, and suffer much loss. Many business men sustain great financial losses through their unwillingness to forgive and forget. If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbor's faults. Forget the slander you have heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding, and give a little thought to the cause which provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and only remember the good points which made you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out, as far as possible, all the disagreeables of life; they will come, but they will grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thought of the acts of meanness, or worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday; start out with a clean sheet for to-day, and write upon it for sweet memory's sake, only those things which are lovely and lovable."—The Presbyterian.

The Home Circle.

MARY ANN AND MARIAN.

Mary Ann and Marian are two little girls, just the same age, but O, so different in every other way.

I will tell you about Mary Ann first, because I admire her so greatly.

She is the twelve-year-old daughter of my washer-woman, and her mother takes in fine washing and ironing, and has six children. Mary Ann has a great deal to do when out of school helping her mother about the house and tending babies.

I was in Mrs. O'Brien's house one afternoon to get a shirt-waist that I needed before the clothes would come home, and, while waiting for it to be ironed, I sat watching Mary Ann, who, singing cheerily, was "doing up" the dinner dishes and keeping one eye on the two-year-old Terrence playing in the back yard.

"Do you always feel so happy while at work?" I asked her.

"Wabash, Far-r-r away," Mary Ann stopped at the end of the line, and setting the frying pan to "dry off" on the back of the stove, said:

"No mum, not always, but I tries to be. It helps the work along, that's what mother says."

She now put her pans, pots and tins away, put a little pearline in her dishpan, poured hot water over it, and singing, "O the moon is fair to-night along the Wabash," beat it to a foam with the dish mop, keeping perfect time.

"But what makes you wipe off the stove and do the pots and pans first?" I asked during the next pause.

Mary Ann's mouth—a generous one—broadened to a rich smile.

"Because, mum, I hate to do 'em so bad."

"That's just the reason most folks do them last, Mary Ann."

"Yes, mum, I useter, but since I begun to do 'em first the dishes don't seem half so—" Here she dropped her dish mop and ran out the back door to pick up little Terrence who had come to grief; she kissed the bump and started him playing in the sand with a shovel and pail. "As I was saying, mum, I like ter do the glass and plates, knives and forks; so when I gets down to them, mum, its sorter play like, with the horrid part all gone."

She polished the tumbler until it glistened, set it down very carefully, and continued: "It must be fine to eat off'n real chiny and have real solid silver knives and forks and spoons for every day, but mother says it ain't always the rich folks that's the happiest, that's what mother says." Mrs. O'Brien now came into the kitchen with the shirt-waist neatly tied up. "She's a good gurrel, mum, shure, I couldn't kape house without her mesilf," she said, as she opened the gate for me to pass through.

A good girl that she is, and, all unknown to herself, a young philosopher, having learned three very important truths, that a cheerful heart lightens labor, that the disagreeable duty should be done and out of the way as soon as possible, that what "mother says" counts. Following these, Mary Ann O'Brien will make a grand woman, one of these days, if she is only the daughter of a washerwoman and the daughter of a hod-carrier.

Now let me tell you of Marian. She has so little to do, to wipe, not wash and wipe the breakfast and supper dishes and put them in their places, to make up her own pretty brass bed and mend her one pair of stockings each week. Besides this she is expected to practice one hour a day, and once in a great while, when mamma is very much rushed with her work, to take baby sister out in her go-cart. She thinks herself dreadfully abused. Would you believe it? She thinks dishes are drudgery, scales "just horrid," and as for taking sister to ride, all the little sister she has, she just pouts and "don't like kids anyway."

I can imagine Mary Ann's pride if the O'Briens had such a pretty baby carriage for Terrence and the other baby. The only way Terrence gets a ride is by trudging along beside the squeaky little express, and, after it has discharged its burden of washings, Mary Ann puts him into the now empty cart and wheels him home. And a piano! It would seem like heaven itself if a piano found its way into the O'Brien home, judging from the way Mary Ann listened, awe-struck, one day, when I played to her, not from the classics, but the songs of the day, hoping she would sing; but Mary Ann would not sing a note.

I don't suppose Mary Ann ever had a quarter of a dollar all her own in her life; yet that is what Marian's papa gives her every week. Marian has such a dear, kind manma and papa, such a sweet little sister, and such a nice home, she ought to be very happy. Which little girl do you like the better, and which is most like you.—Mrs. J. W. Wheeler, in Southern Christian Advocate.

THE WEDDING IN THE WHITE HOUSE.

Saturday February 17, at Washington, in the "East Room" which is the chief social assembly hall of the White House as the official residence of the President of the United States is designated, Miss Alice Roosevelt, daughter of the President, was married to Mr. Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio, a Representative in Congress from that State.

The ceremony was celebrated about noon, in the presence of a large and brilliant assemblage, and although the official position of the bride's father, and the world-wide esteem in which he is held, gave a certain distinction to the occasion and brought to the young lady bridal gifts from so many foreign potentates and princes as to confer upon it a sort of international character, it was after all a wedding wholly American, as to the nativity and quality of its principal participants, with no flavor of foreign fortune-hunting or American rage for foreign titles.

The bridegroom is a worthy scion of an Ohio family which wrought its way into social distinction and fortune in commercial pursuits where the highest characteristics of personal honor and business integrity were associated with intelligence and public spirit. Mr. Longworth is a member of the bar, a gentleman of culture and refinement and the inheritor of untainted wealth.

The bride, who is personally known in New Orleans, where she has been a guest and recipient of many hospitable attentions, is a spirited American girl of much attractiveness of manner and possesses in many respects the generous and impulsive characteristics of her father.

Some historian who has been ransacking the records of the past, finds that since the national capital was fixed at Washington, the following weddings have been celebrated in the Presidential mansion:

1811—Miss Todd, of Philadelphia, relative of President Madison, and John G. Jackson, of Virginia.

1820—Maria Monroe, daughter of President Monroe, and Samuel L. Gouverneur, New York.

1826—Miss Helen Jackson and John Quincy Adams, Jr., son of President Adams.

1832—Miss Lewis, of Tennessee, relative of President Jackson, and M. Pageot, Secretary of the French Legation.

1842—Miss Elizabeth Tyler, daughter of President Tyler, and William Waller, of Virginia.

1874—Miss Nellie Grant, daughter of President Grant, and Algernon C. F. Saftoris, of England.

1886—Miss Frances Folsom, of New York, and President Grover Cleveland.

Let us preach the Gospel. There is only one. But we may bring forth from the good treasure of our hearts "things new and old." The Gospel is exhaustless.

There is a caution in the Scriptures against being in haste to get rich. There is another just as important: "If riches increase set not your heart upon them."

Nobody is so insignificant as "to count for just one." No boy ever got into mischief and escaped the consequences alone. No one ever undertook good that he did not soon influence some one else.

Old Brother King, an Arkansas friend of ours, used to say: "I want to see every man a good member of his own church." As a Methodist he fully exemplified in his own life that which he desired to see in others.

No county in Mississippi, or parish in Louisiana is dependent on the liquor traffic for "life, liberty or the pursuit of happiness," nor for honor or wealth. It is a blight and a curse, the prolific source of poverty and crime. Let us drive it from our midst forever.

The idea that doubt as to the truthfulness of some story of the Bible is fully made up by "embracing more firmly the spirituality of the Psalms and the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount," is the latest defense of the higher critics that we have seen. By the way, the author of that idea tells us that the "higher criticism" is but another name for "interpretation."

* * *

"Bicycle religion." That is a new term. We are indebted to "Stylus," correspondent of the New York Christian Advocate for it. He applies it to Christians who are zealous for their own personal enjoyment of religion, but care nothing for anybody else. They ride alone. The term is about as apt as Uncle Billy Gibbs' "goose-eyed religion"—a kind of religion he did not like. "What kind of religion is that, Uncle Billie?" we asked. His only answer was: "A goose's eye is always dry."

THE THINGS WORTHY OF AFFECTION.

When St. Paul exhorted the Colossians to "set their affections on things above, not on things on the earth," he was not talking at random. They had professed to "be risen with Christ," and must aspire to high and holy things. To attain them it was as necessary to take their affections off the things on the earth as to set them on things above. The love of the world is debasing and unsatisfactory, and wholly inconsistent with a profession of godliness. Under its influence no one can render acceptable or useful service. "No man can serve two masters." "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

Our Lord understood the world and its ways, and the liableness of human nature to come under its destructive influence, and warned his disciples, and at the same time set before them the substantial, elevating and eternal things as the objects worthy of human affection: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

Earthly things are good and useful when subjected to human service, but are altogether ruinous when substituted for God and the things above. They cannot be trusted to minister to the interests of the soul, nor can they be relied on when men need comfort and help. They are fleeting and are soon gone. If perchance they remain, at last we must leave them, only to find ourselves drowned in destruction and perdition.

None of the sacred writers deny to Christians any of the good things of life. Nor did our Lord. All recognized the world's resources and the perfect adaptation of man to his surroundings. All recognized human proclivities and aspirations, and the possibility of satisfying them to the full. Only men were cautioned how to obtain worldly things, and how to use them. They were allowed full liberty to use the world, but not to abuse it.

There is full liberty under the Gospel for the needful pleasures of life. God would have his children to be happy, else social life and all its accessories and accompaniments would be interdicted. But they are not. It is only when enjoyment takes the form of lust—"the lusts of the flesh, and the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life"—that the Gospel interferes and demands self-denial. Only sour godliness commends and practices abstemious living.

There is nothing wrong in money or money-making. The wise man said "money answereth all things." But another said, "if riches increase set not thy heart upon them." A Christian may properly engage in the pursuit of gain—and the more he gets the better for himself and the world, but everybody knows that the man who gives himself wholly to the pursuit of wealth for its own sake sets his heart upon it, and becomes sordid and selfish and godless—a mammon worshiper, whose original was the rich fool, and who at last meets a like fate.

There is nothing wrong in politics and office holding. Somebody must crystallize public sentiment and direct the affairs of government. None are better fitted for such work than Christian men, but everybody knows that the professional politician and chronic office-seeker are dominated by unholy ambition or party supremacy and the spoils. Hence politics must be subservient to the demands of the Gospel.

These and scores of other things, lawful in themselves, may so take hold of the affections as to absorb all of our time and energy, and make us altogether earthly, sensual and devilish. God graciously and wisely puts before us better things—the "things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Who can tell what the things are which we are exhorted to seek. When St. Paul said God hath revealed to us the things prepared for those that love him he had special reference to the blessings that are received by those who accept and trust in Christ—blessings which the eye of the natural man has never seen, nor the ear heard—blessings which are spiritually discerned. The things above are different things, to which only those who discern spiritual things can ever aspire or hope to attain.

All the things, whatever they may be, are included in one thing, the "crown of life," which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to all them that love him. On this we may set our affection, and strive earnestly to obtain—not on the crown itself for any intrinsic value it may have, but "that for which the crown stands," fidelity to our Lord. Only for that reason can the crown be secured.

With the crown of life comes everything else that heaven has in store for the faithful. Having that, we become welcome citizens of the skies, and enter into the joy of our Lord. We will be introduced into the society of angels, and through eternity walk with the redeemed in white, among whom are our own happy dead. If these things, together with the hope of hearing the Master's plaudit, do not suffice to draw our affections from earth and fix them on heavenly things, then there is no hope. God can do no more.

ANOTHER UNION OF CHURCHES.

A conference composed of representatives from the Congregationalist, United Brethren in Christ and the Methodist Protestant Churches, was recently held for the purpose of effecting organic union of the three bodies. The meeting had little trouble in agreeing on a doctrinal basis and church polity. The only hitch came when they undertook to select a name for the new organization. After lengthy discussion, it was "agreed" to leave the matter of a name to a special commission of two from each denomination," which commission is not to report until all other details of the union have been worked out and agreed upon by the united body. A leading member, "hoped that the council so harmonious in other things, would not split upon this rock of name." To do so would be like the North Carolina farmers, who raised a big crop of corn, gathered it, and divided it like friends, and then fell out and fought like Turks over the shucks.

The meeting made some of the brethren feel real good and inspired a conception of the world-wide possibilities of the union. "This," said one, "is only the beginning of the movement. When the Methodist Episcopal and the Presbyterian Churches come knocking at the doors of the United Church, then this will be an organization that will cover the continent." That brother stands on solid ground. The Episcopal Methodists and Presbyterians already "cover the continent." With the help of such bodies the "United Church" would have a hard time covering the United States, let alone the continent.

In point of rank, determined by numbers, the three churches stand thus: Congregationalists No. 14, with 667,951 members; the United Brethren, No. 17, with 251,312 members; the Methodist Protestant, No. 23, with 185,445 members—a total of 1,104,708. The Presbyterians alone are almost equal to the United Church, having 1,006,170 members. The Methodist Episcopal Church South, with 1,013,305 members, is nearly one-third larger than the United Church. The Methodist Episcopal, with 2,865,661 members, is considerably more than twice as large as the three churches put together.

The Episcopal Methodists and the Presbyterians united show a membership of 3,547,000, a force more than five times as large as the United Church. Before such a force could be stored away comfortably by the brethren of the United Church they would have to pull down their old barns and build bigger ones. Bishop McTyeire said some years ago, when the Episcopal Church authorities hinted at the idea of taking Methodism into their care, that it would be like turning the Mississippi river into a bayou.

When the Presbyterians and Methodists unite and are consolidated with the United Church there will be nothing left of our little sister. But we must let the little sister indulge her imagination. She is like a girl who has just donned her first long skirt.

THE UNREST IN CHINA.

Since our last notice of the unrest in China was put in type, there has been an uprising of the natives in one of the provinces and several English missionaries and French Jesuits were killed. The missionaries of our Methodist Episcopal Church escaped unhurt. As the truth comes out more and more, we see more clearly the reasons why the Chinese hate the foreigners. The following paragraph, taken from the Christian Advocate, gives one of the reasons:

"An officer of the general staff of the United States Army who has just returned from a tour of China whither he was sent to investigate the temper of the natives toward the foreigner reports that the main cause of trouble is the arrogance of the whites in their treatment of the natives. Everywhere he found the lower orders of the people ugly and sulky; the coolie classes, he believes, are ready now to massacre every foreign devil in China.' According to this authority no Chinese are allowed in the parks in the foreign quarter in Shanghai. They may not even listen to the open-air band concerts, and great placards at the park entrance warn the natives to keep out. Foreigners driving out from Peking go along in a slap-dash style, and the natives have to scatter to get out of the way or keep from being run over. On the other hand he notes that the missionaries are the only foreigners I found in China who were treating the natives with any sort of courtesy and decency, and I believe that many of them would be spared in any general uprising." If these statements are true, we do not wonder at the bad temper that is just now being displayed by Chinese. Americans would not put up with such treatment at the hands of unnaturalized foreigners for a single month. How can they expect the Chinese to be passive a whole lifetime?

Home Made

Have your cake, muffins, and tea biscuit home-made. They will be fresher, cleaner, more tasty and wholesome.

Royal Baking Powder helps the house wife to produce at home, quickly and economically, fine and tasty cake, the raised hot-biscuit, puddings, the frosted layer-cake, crisp cookies, crullers, crusts and muffins, with which the ready-made food found at the bake-shop or grocery does not compare.

Royal is the greatest of bake-day helps.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

PERSONAL.

The work at Collins and Magee moves nicely and is prospering under the ministry of Rev. C. S. Harrison.

Rev. J. W. Raper, of Arcola and Hollandale, Miss., is succeeding in his work. He has recently received four persons into the Church on profession of faith.

Bishop Morrison, after an absence of three weeks from the city, has returned. He will preach next Sunday morning for the brethren of the Carondelet Street Church.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Centerville, Miss., visited relatives and friends in the city last week, and kindly remembered the Advocate. His church is in good condition, and Brother Saunders is busy and cheerful.

Rev. M. E. White, of Walnut Grove, Miss., informs us of the serious illness of Rev. Irvin Miller, of the Mississippi Conference. He has been sick four weeks, and does not improve. Let the brethren remember him in prayer.

Rev. Theo. Copeland, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, delivered an earnest and forcible address on Sunday last to a large congregation at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall. The subject was "The Christian Life."

Mr. John Caillier, son of Bishop W. A. Candler, has recently come to New Orleans to make his home. He is in business with the Fairbanks Scales Company. He connected himself immediately on his arrival with the Carondelet Street Church.

We are under obligation to the following brethren for good work done in behalf of the Advocate: Revs. M. L. White, J. T. Abney, R. P. Goar, C. C. Evans, G. W. Hiveley, W. D. McCullough, J. E. Napper and W. W. Jones. Together, these brethren have sent us 108 subscriptions.

We learn with pleasure of the great success of Dr. Richard Wilkinson at Monroe. He has, by his genial manner and earnest and eloquent preaching, won the love of the people—not of the Methodists only, but all. His members are heartily co-operating with him, and the prospect is for a year of signal success.

A card from our old Arkansas friend, W. L. Morris, asks: "How is Brother Boswell?" Brother Morris is located at Lucedale, Miss., and edits the Pleindealer, a copy of which we have received. The Presbyterian blood in his veins still runs red, and is healthy. We can unreservedly write for the moral tone of all that comes from his editorial pen. He was always a brotherly brother. We are happy to renew our acquaintance with him through his paper.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE TAX-FREE.

The brethren of the Louisiana Conference will be glad to learn that the Mansfield Female College has been declared exempt from taxation. This bit of information is given to the public in a dispatch from Baton Rouge. The dispatch says:

"When the question as to whether this property, under the Constitution of the State, was exempt from assessment, the matter was referred by the parish assessor of De Soto to Attorney General Guion for his opinion, and the Attorney General, after all of the facts had been submitted, held that the property was not being leased for the purposes of private or corporate profit and income.

"This opinion of the Attorney General that the property was exempt from taxation, with all of the papers in the case, was submitted to Governor Blanchard, who concurred in the view taken by the Attorney General and ordered the property marked 'erroneously assessed.'

"The State Constitution exempts such school property from taxation as is not used for private or corporate gain."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Rev. W. A. Terry, of Vicksburg, Miss., is authorized to act as agent for the Missionary Training School literature in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

On Thanksgiving Day (Nov. 30, 1905), when we assumed charge, the circulation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate was 4,500.

This week we print and mail 5,150 copies of the paper.

The following preachers have sent in lists of subscribers at our $1.25 club rate:

Mississippi—Revs. T. W. Lewis, H. P. Lewis, Jr., R. T. Nolen, B. P. Fullilove, O. L. Savage, H. C. Edmunson, D. M. Gean, G. W. Bachman, L. W. Cain, C. McDonald, R. P. Goar, M. L. White, W. S. LaGrone, W. N. Duncan.

Louisiana—Revs. R. H. Wynn, G. W. Hiveley and J. E. Napper.

We have installed in the Advocate office machinery of modern manufacture at a cost of $9,000 since Nov. 30, 1906. We have still one other machine to purchase in order to properly fold and paste the paper together. This is an important factor, since a fast folder and paster is requlred in order to facilitate rapid mailing, so that there will be no delay in placing 5,150 copies of the paper in the hands of subscribers in a few hours after going to press.

We are negotiating for a Dexter folder and paster, to cost $900, and expect in about two months to have this machine installed and in operation.

Our office is fully equipped for publishing newspapers, books, pamphlets, conference minutes, etc. We are prepared to turn out this class of work in a shorter time, with superior workmanship and accuracy in tabular work and diction than many of our so-called competitors.

In giving estimates on work, we do so honestly, according to specifications, and consequently are placed at a disadvantage in bidding on work against printers who bid below cost, and make the loss up by giving cheaper stock and inferior work. If good workmanship, correct tabular work and quick delivery are requisites, we would be pleased to furnish estimates on this class of printing.

The Gulf Conference Minutes, M. E. Church, were printed in this office, and we now have in hand the North Carolina Conference Minutes, M. E. Church. The Young Men's Hebrew Association Magazine, a most excellent fortnightly publication, is a product of our office.

WESLEY CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I will send a few notes from Wesley Circuit. I have made one round on the work. My reception was cordial at every Church. I was greeted by large, attentive congregations. The membership needs organizing, so we can utilize our forces for a successful year's work. Our wide-awake Presiding Elder, Rev. J. R. Moore, held our First Quarterly Conference on the 14th inst. He was careful in conducting the business, looking after every interest of the Church, and kind in his administration as president of the Conference. He preached a strong, practical sermon, luminous in thought and sound in doctrine. The Stewards made a liberal assessment for the support of the ministry. The congregation was large and orderly. The supply of good things to eat was abundant. We have received three into the Church, and hope to have a large ingathering during the year. I am hopeful, and, under the Divine leadership, hope to succeed. Fraternally.

THOS. J. MARTIN, SR.,
Postoffice address, Ringgold, Miss.

VIENNA, LA.

Mr. Editor—Vienna is a small village four miles north of Ruston. Being on a very high hill, it cannot be hid. Really, Vienna is the mother of Ruston in more ways than one. It used to be the parish capital of Lincoln Parish, but when the Courthouse was moved to Ruston most of the people also moved, but there is yet a handful of people, who are the salt of the earth.

There are five churches in this circuit, but our work is very compact.

We were a little late in reaching our new field of labor, and have just started on our second round of appointments. To us the situation is hopeful. The lines have fallen to us in exceedingly pleasant places. Our motto is, many souls for Christ and our collections all in full. Pray for us.

Yours truly,

GEO. W. HIVELEY.

Fostering Selfishness.

A certain middle-aged woman has been spending the Summer holiday season in visiting her three married sons; and yet, in spite of her cordial relations with them and their wives, her visits were not wholly happy.

"The trouble is," she said to an old friend, "my boys are all selfish. Their selfishness does not consist in being mean in money matters, or in wanting their own way all the time, but only in expecting other people to wait on them. Now they expect their wives to do it. The fault is wholly mine. I didn't bring them up right."

Many another mother, if she were as frank as this woman, could bring the same charge against her children. The selfishness of which she complains is the almost inevitable result of a parental solicitude which is unwise, however, deeply rooted it may be in affection. John wants his slippers or a fresh collar, or his clothes need brushing; it is mother who waits on him. By and by John marries, and almost before he knows it he is exacting of Mary, his wife, the same little personal services to which he has become so much accustomed that he takes them as a matter of course. Such sons and such husbands miss the finest flower of life, which is service, and not tribute.

Guarantee I guarantee Plants to give purchaser satisfaction, or will refund the purchase price to any customer who is dissatisfied at end of season. These plants are grown in the open field, on Seacoast of South Carolina, in a climate that is just suited to growing the hardiest plants that can be grown in the United States. These plants can be reset in the interior of the Southern States during the months of January, February, and March. They will stand severe cold without being injured, and will mature a head of Cabbage Two to Three weeks sooner than if you grew your own plants in hot beds and cold frames.

My Largest Customers are the Market Gardeners near the interior towns and cities of the South. Their profit depends upon them having Early Cabbage; for that reason they purchase my plants for their crops.

I also grow a full line of other Plants and Fruit Trees, such as Strawberry, Sweet Potato, Tomato, Egg Plant and Pepper Plants; Apple, Peach, Pear, Plum, Cherry and Apricot Trees, Fig Bushes, and Grape Vines.

DISEASES OF KIDNEY SUFFERERS.

WHY DO YOU NOT TRY A REMEDY THAT WILL CURE YOU?

MR. T. R. HALL.

MRS. J. ADDIE.

MR. W. T. WALLACE.

MRS. F. WINGET.

MR. A. M. WEAR.

We do not want you to spend a cent in its purchase until you give it a satisfactory trial at our expense. All you have to do is to write us and you will receive a liberal sample absolutely free by mail. Could any offer be more fair? The Kava-Kava Shrub, called by Botanists Piper Methysticum, from the Ganges River, East Indies, acts directly on the Kidneys and cures thoroughly and permanently by draining out of the blood every particle of poisonous Urid Acid, Urates, Lithates, etc., which are the cause of Urinary and Bladder Troubles such as Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Gravel, Backache, Difficult or too frequent passing of water, sore and weak Kidneys, Dropsy, Diabetes, etc. As a positive proof we have thousands of Testimonials from people in every walk of life, including Governors of States, Executives of Cities, Officials of Hospital Boards and Boards of Health, Ministers of the Gospel and Evangelists of Renown. Full authentic reports are contained in our books and pamphlets which are mailed free. The Kava-Kava Compound acts with remarkable effect in hopeless hospital cases when all other remedies known to medicinal science have failed. As proof we have to offer the testimony of the President of the Suffolk Hospital, Boston, Mass., Dr. Machette of Indiana, Secretary of the Board of Health, Bourbon, and a large number of other Physicians of high standing in their profession.

The persons whose pictures we publish hereon have all been cured and the particulars of their diseases are as follows:

Mr. T. R. Hall, Knoxville, Tenn., is a United States Railway Mail Clerk, was cured of Bright's Disease after being off duty one year and when every other means of cure had failed. Mrs. J. Addie, Del Rio, Texas, had the best Specialist of the Harper's Hospital, Detroit, Mich., and six other prominent Physicians pronounce her case incurable. A complication of diseases including Bright's Disease was her trouble. She is cured and strong to-day and says our remedy saved her life. Mr. W. T. Wallace, McCormick, Ill., says that our remedy completely cured him after three Physicians had failed. Mrs. Frank Winget, Wapakoneta, Ohio, was given up by the best Doctors who said her life was short if she did not have an operation performed. Our remedy cured her and an operation was not necessary. Mr. A. M. Wear, Justice of the Peace, Barnett, Mo., had been sick many years with Kidney Trouble, Indigestion, etc., and had tried Physicians both Allopathic and Homeopathic, but could get no relief. He used our remedy, which completely cured him; two of his neighbors were also cured through the use of our remedy on his recommendation. The Hon. R. C. Wood, a prominent lawyer of Lowell, Ind., suffered from Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble for years, had tried home Physicians and three specialists without relief. Our remedy restored his health and he has had no return of the diseases. Mrs. F. B. Smith, Recording Secretary of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, was completely crippled with Rheumatism, to-day she is completely cured and our remedy is the cause. Mr. F. N. Reese, Tyler, Iowa, had been a sufferer of Rheumatism for over three years but our remedy completely cured him. Mrs. Mary Fox was a severe sufferer with Kidney Trouble and Rheumatism and had been in bed four months when our remedy cured her. Mr. John Will, R. F. D. No. 3, Muncie, Ind., a prominent farmer, was a sufferer from Diabetes and was told by several Physicians he could not get well. Our remedy completely cured him; he has taken out Life Insurance since and the examining Physician pronounced him sound as a dollar.

Had we the space we would give particulars of thousands of such cases. We do not ask you to take our word, but investigate for yourself. Besides we give you a sample to judge for yourself which is the strongest evidence of our confidence in the medicinal qualities of our great remedy, the Kava-Kava Compound, named Alkavis.

NOTE—ALKAVIS is FRESHLY PREPARED from the Kava-Kava Shrub by this Company exclusively, and is always ready to supply PROMPTLY as wanted. By special arrangement, One LARGE CASE is given away, entirely FREE by mail, to every reader regardless of expense. It is a sure specific and cannot fail. Write to-day. Address,

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

We are just closing our first half-session, and the record has been an unusual one up to date, in that up to date we have not lost a single student who has entered, and nearly every week recently has brought additions to our boarding department. During some recent trips made in the interest of the school, I came under obligations for help rendered and courtesies shown by Revs. J. R. Fulton, R. O. Weir, R. C. Grace, C. D. Atkinson, W. W. Holmes and Hathorn, of Louisiana; Revs. C. W. Crisler, T. B. Holloman, W. T. Griffin, J. W. Campbell, L. L. Pickles, J. T. Leggett, W. L. Blackwell, I. B. Robertson, C. N. Guice, W. H. Saunders, B. F. Jones, of Mississippi, besides several laymen and teachers. According to signs and plans, the dormitories will be filled to the utmost another season.

The Trustees and citizens there greatly appreciate the help the Conference is giving in paying for the new dormitory. We do not see how the school could get along at all without this building.

We are expecting to hold a revival meeting in the school soon. Our commencement will be held June 17 and 18. Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Natchez, will preach the sermon and Rev. T. B. Holloman, D. D., will deliver the address.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE MATTERS.

OUR STATISTICS.

Dear Advocate: For several years I have been exercised in mind by the defective statistics reported to our Conference sessions. Last year the preachers in charge reported "additions on profession of faith," 2,311; "additions by certificate and otherwise," 2260; add these two numbers together and we have 4571. Subtract from this number those "removed by death, certificate or otherwise," which is 2107, and we have 2194, which is our net gain. Will one one please tell us how we can get a net loss of 81 from these figures? Somebody is too careless in making figures, or maybe the handwriting is so crude and poor that it cannot be easily read. Take the Sardis District as an example of variation in the figures. I select that district because it is the first on the list, and not because its preachers are sinners above all that dwell in Jerusalem. They added by the usual methods 310; they lost 182; the net gain ought to be 127; but they report a net loss of 26. How shall we cure the defect in our statistics?

T. W. LEWIS.

KOSCIUSKO CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor: Perhaps some one would like to know how we are progressing on our new charge. We were cordially received at all our appointments, and the prospects are very encouraging for a prosperous year, both spiritually and materially. I believe I will be safe in saying all our assessments for this charge will be paid in full, for the people have already shown a willingness to cooperate with their weak pastor. The people of this charge are able to do a great deal for God, and they have manifested a Christian spirit; therefore we believe that God is going to do great things for us, whereof we are glad.

My good brother and predecessor, Rev. T. H. Porter, did a good work last year—so we found our people religious. I have received into the Church since I came three persons, and have sent nine subscriptions to the New Orleans Advocate from my charge.

We are planning to have Children's Day service at all our appointments. Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God is that all our people might be saved. Pray for us. May God give us gracious revivals all over Christendom, is my prayer.

J. E. GANT, P. C.

SCOOBA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I want to say a few words through the medium of your paper. This is my second year on this charge. Last year was a very pleasant and profitable year. We had an increase of twenty members on the charge and built a $1,000 parsonage with only $200 indebtedness on it. We have at this writing that debt down to $145. We have raised money to buy an organ for one of my churches, and have painted the pews in another. We have in sight about $500 to build a new church in the town of Wahalak, and we have planned to build one of the neatest little churches in the county and fit it up with a bell, all complete. Our Church is doing her very best in this little town. We have some of the noblest people I ever knew; they love their "little preacher," as they call him, and, of course, he loves them. We hope to do a great deal of work this year—in fact, we hope, trust and pray that this may be the best year of our life.

Of course we have some obstacles, as all men have, but we ask God to help us over them, and on we go. If we put our trust in him, what need we fear?

I am delighted with the improvement in the Advocate. I make it a part of my work to solicit subscribers. May God pour out his richest blessings on the paper. Truly yours,

H. B. PERRITT.

OFFICE OF DR. THEO. TURNBULL.
President State Board Medical Examiners, and President Jefferson County Board of Health. Surgeon of S. F. & Ry. Monticello, Fla.

I certify that I have prescribed in hundreds of obstinate cases of Bilious, Intermittent and Remittent Fevers with excellent results. I am free to say that knowledge of its formula, gained by me, induced me to recommend it to take the place of M. D.'s and the public generally. In Neuralgia arising from general debility or in Malarial cachexia Johnson's Tonic is a specific. In parturient women who suffer from Malarial Fevers, or even in delicate constitutions where large doses of Quinine would be inadmissible, Johnson's Tonic can be given with speedy relief and of those it never disappoints. In delicate stomachs where the taste is so disagreeable, it can be instantly removed by adding a pinch of salt to the tablespoonful of the mouth immediately after taking. THEO. TURNBULL, M. D.

"The Tongue and the Temper."

Golden text: "Keep the door of my lips."—Psalm cxli. 3.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." What a beautiful train of thought do such quotations lead us to; and when we find such beautiful expressions in our Book of books they are doubly dear to us.

How often are all clouds dispersed by, and sunshine comes from, a cheerful, pleasant word. One of the Lord's apostles—St. James—says that all kinds of beasts and birds and serpents have been tamed, but the tongue no man hath tamed. Why is it so grievous that the tongue is not controlled? Because it is the most direct evidence we have of the thought that is in the heart: "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If there is an abundance of love in our hearts for Jesus, his name and his cause will somehow take its place in due time in every conversation we have.

It is supposed that our Lord intended two lessons to be taken from his words, "Swear not at all." He was referring to taking an oath; before carefully considering the gravity of the matter, and again he was alluding to the sin of taking God's name in vain. Some have supposed that taking an oath in a court of justice is here condemned. Not so, for our Lord himself recognized that custom among men, when at his trial before the Sanhedrin—the court of the Church—the high priest put him on his solemn oath in these words: "I adjure thee, by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ the Son of God." Jesus answered at once, and in the affirmative.

The lesson most needed by us is to learn to teach and speak against the use of profane language. We all know what a prevailing sin this is, and with shame we confess that it is not confined to one class of people. What a shame to our nation to have the name of being the most profane people on the face of the globe! No tender nature is safe from this contamination, for men do not regard the presence of ladies and little children; on the street cars, on the street, everywhere where people do congregate, cursing and swearing is heard on all sides. Boys, growing up, learn to curse at an early age. Alas, for the fact that some of them hear it at home from both parents. It prevails to such an extent in some homes that the boys, when they grow up, are surprised to hear that it is wrong.

Jesus knew that this admonition was needed among his followers, for did not Peter curse and swear on a slight provocation? How rare and, oh, how pleasing it is to hear pure language among men! Think of the harm of it! First and most forcibly the harm comes to him that swears. The ruin of it! Breaking one of God's commandments, given to men to make them honor his holy name. "They that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me will I lightly esteem." (1st Samuel ii. 30.)

A good rule to keep [illegible] how not to speak of God and [illegible] religious [illegible] of [illegible] hear the expression, "my God," or "good God," as exclamatory of some emotion of surprise. The [illegible] of the loving Christian to be a [illegible] ful disregard to heedlessness [illegible] impress [illegible] that such [illegible] more [illegible] of profanity.

Jesus said, "By [illegible] shalt be justified, and by [illegible] shalt thou be condemned." [illegible] than that he was [illegible] words one is guilty to [illegible] the time. This evil of profanity is [illegible] the holy exhortation [illegible] typewriter is no check on the use of it.

The lessons of God will not follow any who even think of [illegible] name without reverence. "Let your answer be yea, yea, nay, nay; what cometh more than these cometh of evil."

The discourse of our Lord changes to the tendency of man to [illegible] revenge for injuries, and he says, "Resist not evil." Take every [illegible] oppose nothing that is done in a spirit of spite. Many who make no pretense to being religious make use of this principle, even as a good business method. "A soft answer turneth away wrath," said Solomon; and if we had more of the heathen to deal with [illegible] who smites on the right cheek will gladly smite the left when he sees no offered resistance.

"Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away," even when there is no shadow of hope that the borrower will pay, so Jesus teaches. Oh, what hard lessons to learn, unless we are filled with God's amazing [illegible] Listen further: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you." The world exclaims—"impossible!" No, all this can be learned by the Spirit of Truth. Years may pass by [illegible] any progress is made, but it cannot be hindered; only keep close to the Master, and daily inspire him for [illegible] and the time will come when your ways will please the Lord, and even your enemies will be at peace with you. (Proverbs xvi. 7.)

Remember that all these difficult things must be mastered before we can be the children of our Father in heaven. He sets the example in nature: "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust."

We deserve no credit for loving [illegible] that love us; even the publicans do as much. The standard that we are to be perfect in respect to our treatment of our fellowmen, even as our Father in heaven is perfect; with out respect of persons, without showing partiality to even his chosen ones. The main point to teach is the love of Christ. If we have his love in our hearts we are complete and prepared for all the duties of life, and duty seems no more irksome, but becomes a pleasure.

Let us teach and learn as we teach, as he taught the way to live, walking in his steps. Then we will be the friends of sinners, as he was. This Divine love of Christ is our most powerful weapon. Our Lord was [illegible] passing those who should take up the work that he was inaugurating, and these blessed principles are for us of today, for we have the same work to do as those to whom he was speaking. The most conspicuous man in our time is he who lives the Christian life every day and everywhere. The influence of such a life is more powerful now because of the few who live it. O that the Lord would send laborers into his harvest. The fields are white and ready to harvest, and are right at our doors. This is no time for formalities and conventionalities; we are to go out after those whom we have been so long studying plans to reach. Fear not, but go! Our Lord is with us, and in our hand is the strong sword—his Word, also the promise that "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

Expert Medical Advice Free to The Sick.

Recognized as the Oldest Established and Most Reliable Specialist.

No matter where you go, you could find no physician or specialist more competent to advise or to treat you, if you have a chronic disease, than Dr. Hathaway of Atlanta; and too, he is offering to counsel and advise every sufferer free of charge. If you have any disease of a chronic nature, such as Kidney or Bladder Disease, Stricture, Rheumatism, Varicocele, Skin Disease, Nervous Debility, Catarrh of the different organs, Stomach, Bowel and Liver Complaints, diseases peculiar to women, etc., you should at once write and take advantage of this offer. In addition, you will be sent a valuable booklet on your disease. Dr. Hathaway is recognized as the most successful specialist in the South today, and the secret of his success lies in the fact that he has always dealt with his patients in an honest, straightforward manner, promising them nothing that he could not fulfill and by curing their disease. His charges are not extraordinarily high, but are reasonable, certainly no more than you would be willing to pay for successful treatment of your case. All correspondence strictly confidential. THE MID-YEAR CONFERENCE, JUNE 12-18.

Dr. Boswell: The Mid-Year Conference, a joint meeting of the Boards of Missions, Education, Epworth League and Sunday Schools, will meet at Grenada in the College June 12 to 18. Hitherto these Boards have all had separate meetings. Our busy pastors and laymen have not had the time to attend all or the half of these different gatherings. We have felt our personal loss. So these four Boards have agreed to unite in this Mid-Year Conference. A programme is making, which will assure a large attendance and a profitable hearing. Each Board will have one or two of the best speakers of our Church, in addition to our own pastors and laymen. This constellation of suns will give us much light.

There are many reasons why this should be an occasion of great profit. Our Annual Conferences give us little time for real devotion, study and instructive addresses. Here this is the primary object.

We will be entertained in the same building, eat at the same table and have the advantage of a gracious association.

The careful study of these great interests will be an inspiration to us in our work. It is desired that in the Bible Institute feature of this Conference the examining committees call together their classes for close study of the Conference Course.

A full programme and all particulars will be published in ample time.

BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference desires to make full quarterly payments to all pastors on mission charges. The appeals which come from some of these good brethren are distressing. I am sure if all the pastors could read them their domestic mission assessments would be sent to the Treasurer, J. G. McGowan, Water Valley, right away. Very little has been paid so far. The first quarter is now nearly due. How can we meet these obligations? Brother Pastor, will you not immediately remit to the Treasurer all of a part of your domestic mission assessment? The same urgency exists for our foreign mission collections. The parent Board is calling for funds to meet its pressing obligations, and with which to stop interest.

On March 11 the Treasurer will make his first quarterly report through the Advocate.

W. W. WOOLLARD, Pres.

HURRICANE AT MER ROUGE, LA.

Mr. Editor: It is well known by yourself that I seldom write to the Advocate unless I have something in the way of news to impart. I have been reading of late in the columns of your paper of storms in different parts of the country, which struck the parsonage with some force, making the hearts of the preacher and his family glad. All this made my heart rejoice that the lot of some of the brethren had fallen in pleasant places.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 16th inst. the atmosphere about Mer Rouge became very close, and without any warning the wind commenced to blow at a fearful rate.

To alleviate our fears, a good sister got the preacher and his wife away from home under pretext of selecting hymns for the choir. But the preacher returned just as the cyclone struck the parsonage in full force. The wind blew in sacks of flour, hams, bacon, meal, sugar, lard, coffee, rice, grits, syrup, oil, eggs, canned goods in abundance, sweet and Irish potatoes, and many other things. The larder was full and overflowing.

These people do not know how to do a thing in a half-way style—they do everything in a whole-hearted way. In proof of this assertion, someone has said (I believe it was Gilderoy) that the hen was a prime factor in Methodism. There were four nice hens blown into the parsonage during the storm. The itinerant's faithful old horse, "Mack," was also remembered with a bale of hay.

It takes pretty good Gospel to create all this flurry. This Gospel was preached by Rev. J. M. Henry, P. E., and my predecessor, Rev. J. E. Denson.

May God bless these good people and help me to do the work committed unto me. C. T. MUNHOLLAND.

Mrs. MARTHA ANNIE, daughter of Capt. J. B. and Mrs. Fannie Enochs, was born Sept. 28, 1868, was married to Bro. W. J. Beasley Aug. 11, 1892, and died Feb. 11, 1906.

In the home she was an affectionate and obedient child, and in the church a constant and a devout Christian. Her religion was a garment with which she clothed every motive and achievement of her life. As a student she was painstaking and accurate, and as a teacher inspiring and helpful. But it was as the wife and the mother, all the grace, the strength of character and the wisdom of her being was most perfectly developed. It was here that she realized woman's mission, and she filled her place with a fullness that makes it sadly vacant to-day. Her sufferings were long and intense, but the end came like the burst of the beautiful morning—full of hope and of glory.

JAS. M. WEEMS.

Mrs. SINTHA LAURA KIZER (nee Vawters) was born Aug. 4, 1842, near Meridian Miss. Her girlhood days were spent in the genial warmth of a sunny Christian home, the spirit of which she carried through her life. April 26, 1865, she was married to Mr. T. D. Kizer, Strayhorn, Miss. Nine children were the fruits of this happy married life, all but two survive her. Stricken with paralysis, she lingered for a month. The death angel came January 22, 1906, and wafted her to her heavenly home.

Mrs. Kizer's home life was beautiful. A charming, innocent simplicity characterized her whole life. She was a devoted wife, counting no sacrifice too dear for her loved companion, the faithful partner of youth and old age and the devoted companion of a long life. She was a devoted mother, passionately fond of her children, whose pleasure and eternal welcome was her daily solicitude.

Giving her life to God in her youth, consecrating her youth and vigor to Him, lived an exemplary Christian him, she lived an exemplary Christian, sacrifice for her God and those she loved; her supreme desire was to see loved ones saved. "She is not dead but sleeping." Devotedly loved by her own, highly esteemed by all her memory will be sacredly treasured.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Mrs. ANN HYDE GRAYSON was born Jan. 24, 1832, and died in Biloxi, Miss., Jan. 7, 1906. She was buried in Ocean Springs, Miss., Jan. 8. The space of 73 years, 11 months and 13 days is the time that marked the life of this noble Christian woman. Dec. 16, 1847, she was married to Thomas W. Grayson, who a little less than two years ago preceded her to the world beyond. In 1849 she, with her young husband, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; of which she was always a loyal, consistent and helpful member. Sister Grayson had a large family of children, of whom two sons and five daughters are left to mourn her loss, all of whom are members of her Church, and know where she has gone and the way to go to her. The unselfish devotion of these sons and daughters, their watchful care and anticipation of her slightest wish, especially since the going away of the husband and father, was indeed beautiful. The two sons—noble, young men, of whom any mother might well be proud—with the daughters who are left, no doubt feel that there is another hand beckoning them to the home of the pure and the blest. And may they all follow in her steps as she followed in the steps of her Lord. As her pastor for five years, I count it a blessing that it was my privilege to be often in that home and know and feel the influence of that noble Christian life. May God's blessings rest upon the sorrowing ones, and grant unto them the comforts that He only is able to give in such an hour of sorrow.

JAS. G. GALLOWAY.

One of our very best men has gone home. CHARLES EDWARD ALSTON was born in Sumpter, S. C., July 17, 1845; moved with his parents to Louisiana about 1857; from thence to Columbus, Miss., 1859. He served two years in the Thirty-fifth Mississippi Cavalry; professed religion about twenty-five years ago. He joined the M. E. Church, South, at once and faithfully served as steward and Sunday-school superintendent at Soule's Chapel until he went home on the 17th of January, 1906. He was happily married to Sarah J. White, of Oktibbaha County, Feb. 22, 1866. Brother Alston was a shining light in his community all his Christian life. He was especially loyal to the Church; a good friend to the pastors; often talked of his conversion and how the good Lord had upheld him in adversities and afflictions, never losing sight of the good way that leads to heaven. Many times during his last sickness he gave happy expressions of Jesus' presence and his readiness to depart and be at rest. He leaves a sorrowing companion, one brother and sister, three sons and two daughters to mourn their loss. All of us miss his shining face so much when we go to Soule's Chapel. May his sons be noble men and emulate their father's virtues, and let us all meet him in the sweet by and by.

D. W. BABB.

RACHEL STARLING was born Jan. 15, 1831, in North Carolina, and Oct. 12, 1847, she was married to Mr. William H. Rush. There were five children, of whom a son and two daughters are living. The greater part of her life has been spent in Mississippi, and her children live here. She has been a widow for many years, and her home has been mostly with her son, in Newton County, just north of Lake, Miss., where she died Feb. 8, 1906. She had just entered her 73d year. She united with the Methodist Church when about 13 years of age, and always adorned the religion she professed. In the last days she was shouting, happy, ready and waiting her translation to the better world. Her children are good representatives of her Christian life.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions were passed by the Sunday School of Como, Miss., in reference to the death of Brother J. A. FULMER, a member and officer of the school:

We, your Committee appointed to draft suitable resolutions in regard to the death of J. A. Fulmer, late treasurer of this Sunday School, beg leave to make the following report.

The grim monster death has again invaded our ranks, and has taken from us and from the walks of men a man whom we all delighted to honor. Brother Fulmer was an officer of this Sunday School for a number of years, and was always faithful in the discharge of his duty, and in this faithfulness he must have adopted as his motto of life the words of St. John the divine. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Brother Fulmer has wrought well and we doubt not that he is enjoying that rest that remaineth to the people of God. Our loss is his eternal gain, and we bow in humble submission to the all-wise Ruler of the universe, who doeth all things well; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Fulmer this School has lost an ideal officer, the community at large has lost an ideal citizen, and his family a loving, tender husband and father, and while we realize that mere words cannot assuage the grief of the stricken loved ones, we can point them to Him who said, by the mouth of the sweet singer of Israel, "Yea, tho' I walk through the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff doth comfort me."

Resolved, That a page of the Sunday School records be set apart for transcribing these resolutions.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Sardis Reporter, and that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

Respectfully submitted.

C. R. BROWN,
J. H. POINTER,
Committee.

IN MEMORY OF J. A. FULMER.

Joel Albert Fulmer was born in Pickens County, Ala., in 1858, and died at Como, Miss., Jan. 17, 1906. He came to Mississippi in 1866, and to Como in 1884, where he engaged in the mercantile business, which business he was pursuing at the time of his death. In the summer of 1892 Rev. J. M. Wyatt, who had charge of the Methodist Church at Como, received Brother Fulmer in the Church. In September of the same year he was happily married to Miss Lucy Singleton, Rev. J. M. Wyatt officiating. Their union was blessed with five children, three of whom survive. His sad and untimely death is a great loss to the Church, to the town and to the community. In this weak tribute to his sacred memory the writer is deeply conscious of the fact that words are inadequate to express what he feels. Nevertheless, he would endeavor to testify to some of the worthy brother's merits.

Brother Fulmer was a man in every sense of the term. In business his fidelity to his word and his honesty won for him many friends. Honesty with him was not merely commercial strictness of dealing. It was honesty in its plain and unambiguous sense. It was consistent honesty, that honesty that includes man's whole duty to his neighbor. It was manifested by his fairness, carefulness and straightforwardness of speech, of purpose and of conduct.

He was a model citizen, was found on the right side of every moral question. He had strong convictions, and he had the moral courage to be true to his convictions. No desire of gain, no fear of loss could move him from what he believed to be true and right. His fellow-townsmen had the utmost confidence in his fidelity and in his integrity. This was shown by the official capacities in which he had served them, both as Mayor and as Alderman.

He was active in the work of the Church—ever ready to do his part, even more than his part. He loved the Church. It was on his heart. He had been treasurer of the Sunday school, secretary of the Board of Stewards for several years. The wisdom and the faithfulness which he exercised in these capacities will be held in grateful remembrance both by the Sunday school and by the Board of Stewards.

His home life was very beautiful. He was so kind and considerate, so attentive and devoted. As a citizen, as a Christian, as a husband and as a father he was faithful in the performance of every duty, and firm and constant in the discharge of every trust. In every relationship he studied "to show himself approved unto God—a workman that needed not to be ashamed." His life was indeed a light that burned not only constantly, but steadily. Every one who came within its range felt its glow and its warmth. The untimely removal of such a beautiful and useful life from among us has left a vacancy and a shadow that we all deeply feel.

To the bereaved ones we extend our deepest sympathy, and express our hope that even so great a loss to them and to us may be overruled for good by Him who hath said that all things work together for good to them that love God. His friend and pastor,

J. A. HALL.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a Southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 469 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

depends upon the life-long study and experience of the men who direct this business, and who mix a fertilizer which "makes three (often a dozen) blades of grass grow, where only one grew before." The name of it is Virginia-Carolina Fertilizer.

By its very liberal use, a week or two before, or at planting, as well as second application, multitudes of farmers in the South have "increased their yields per acre," and with the larger profits which these increased yields brought, paid off the mortgage on their farms. Don't be fooled by any dealer into buying a "cheap" substitute.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

For some weeks past there has been a dread among coal operators, and some other business men, of a strike among the miners. Such a strike was threatened, and dreaded because so many thousands of persons and such vast interests were involved. It was said that if the strike materialized, the suffering involved would be far greater than anything ever experienced, as the result of a strike. But the scare blew over, and business interests breathed easier. Now comes the news that miners of anthracite, or hard coal, will go on a strike in the near future. And, it is intimated that the strike will be in the interest of the bituminous or soft coal miners, as it will increase the demand for that coal, and necessarily increase the wages of the miners and the price of their out-put. This in turn will force an advance in wages in the anthracite mines. If all this is true, it looks like a conspiracy between the miners of the two kinds of coal to force an advance in wages—a conspiracy that partakes of the nature of a trust to control trade. In this sense, a conspiracy between miners is no more to be commended than a conspiracy between manufacturers.

A new plan has been devised for the purpose of discovering the hiding places of the mosquitoes so frequently charged with the crime of spreading the yellow fever scourge over the country. If the hiding places are found, of course, a war of extermination will at once be inaugurated. The President of the Board of Health of New Orleans, offers a reward of five dollars for the first live female stegomyia mosquito found in any house in New Orleans, and delivered to him during the month of March. Three dollars will be paid for the second, and two dollars for the third. These offers will set many boys, and possibly girls to work. No doubt, they will find mosquitoes, and many hunters will be disappointed, for not all they catch will answer the conditions. They must be female stegomyias. In addition, five cents will be offered for all stegomyias, male or female, dead or alive, found in any house in New Orleans during the present month. A good mosquito hunter, who knows the deadly thing when seen, ought to make the business pay fairly well during the month. It may be, however, that the Health Officer believes that the tribe was exterminated last summer, and takes this method of proving the fact. Let us hope that such is the case.

In 1804, about the time South Carolina took charge of the whiskey business of that State, with a view to regulating the traffic and reaping its profits for the people, we expressed the opinion that in the absence of prohibition the dispensary as it was called, was about the next best thing. Dr. W. D. Kirkland, to whom we were talking, and who, as an interested citizen of South Carolina, had studied the question, was of a different opinion, and added "that as a measure for regulation it might succeed, but would set back prohibition for many years." The measure, he said was "in no sense a help toward prohibition." And so it has proved. Dissatisfaction with the dispensary has been growing for years. It has of recent months been as objectionable as open saloons, and about as fruitful of drunkenness. The law by which these dispensaries were established has been repealed, and State dispensaries are no more. Instead there is a law authorizing county dispensaries on the local option plan. The law also gives the counties, or districts, the option of prohibition. The city of Charleston will be allowed to issue license, provided the Constitution of the State, which forbids license, can be evaded. This seems to be a strange sort of proceeding. We do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement. We simply give it as we find it in the news. Such a law looks like an effort to put a premium on efforts to break the law.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The Louisiana State Sunday School Association will hold their twentieth annual convention at Alexandria on March 20th, 21st, and 22nd. An extremely interesting programme has been arranged and all Sunday school workers are urged to attend.

LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTES.

The Conference Sunday School Board has tried for the past three years to make arrangements with Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., for a Sunday school campaign of institutes throughout our State, but were not so able. Having failed in the past owing to the great demand for these workers, they persisted and are glad to be able to announce the full plan of itinerary for such a campaign during the latter part of this month.

We, your Board, are planning four institutes to be held at the following places:

For all workers of the Arcadia and Monroe Districts, both pastors and Sunday school workers, at Ruston, opening Thursday, March 22, at 10 a. m. and closing with a rally service on Friday night. All communications should be sent to Prof. O. B. Staples or Rev. R. H. Wynn, at Ruston.

For all workers of the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts, both pastors and Sunday school workers, at Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, opening Saturday, March 24, at 8 p. m. and closing Monday night with a grand rally of workers. All communications should be sent to Brother A. F. Godat, in care of Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance Company, New Orleans, La.

For all workers of the Crowley and south end of Alexandria Districts, both pastors and Sunday school workers, at Crowley, opening March 30, Friday evening at 7:30 p. m. and closing Sunday night, April 1. All communications should be sent to Brother A. P. Holt or to Rev. W. W. Drake at Crowley, La.

For all workers of the Shreveport and north end of Alexandria Districts, both pastors and Sunday school workers, at Mansfield, opening Monday afternoon at 3 p. m. April 2, and closing Tuesday night, April 3. All communications should be sent to Brother J. C. Roberts or to Rev. K. W. Dodson, Mansfield, La.

Every pastor in the Conference is invited to be present and to take at least one or two of his best workers.

Dr. and Mrs. Hamill are experts in Sunday school matters and we should have a profitable time. Bring your note-book and pencil and take home all you can.

Write the chairman of your institute immediately, saying how many will come from your school and write immediately. No one will be entertained who does not forward notice of coming. It is expected that the railroads will give the usual one and a third fare on the certificat plan, should there be fifty in attendance holding certificates of having paid full fare going. Let each district rally and have a great meeting.

Respectfully,

JNO. F. FOSTER,
Chairman of Conference Board.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Winona District Conference will be held at Itta Bena, Miss., April 17-19. Bishop Hoss will preside. The Woman's Foreign Missionary and Home Mission societies are cordially invited to represent their work.

STATUS OF INFANTS AND THE NEW BIRTH.

In my first article I spoke of the germ of the new life. Some have objected to the notion of the germ of eternal life being the heritage of every child born into the world. We think, however, when we look further into the matter as relates to the status of infants and the new birth, that it will not only appear Scriptural, but necessary, if we would run clear of fatalism. You notice, in the first place, that death—moral, spiritual death—resulted from the act of disobedience.

Will you settle in your mind the capabilities of a dead body, a dead soul? One is as capable as the other. We cannot rest the charge of rebellion or disobedience against the dead.

Next, consider the fact that the Bible, in its approaches to humanity, whether reference is had to adults or infants, are such as involve the necessity of having the germ of life, by which we may be furnished the moral or spiritual capacity to respond to religious instructions. Obedience being rendered to the instructions of the Gospel results in one surrounding himself, and forcing such association as results in the development of the Christ life which may be read and known of all men.

In our former article we refered to Rom. v 18, in which we have the extent of the evil effects of the fall to the race. We now refer to the latter part of verse 18, where we see the extent of the benefits of the atonement: "Even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Here, in this verse we see universal death resulting from the offence of one, and universal life from the righteousness of the other. Could anything be plainer? We see reason and truth alike in Christ saying that infants are members of His Kingdom, and constitute the best specimens of it. And only in the light of what is here stated is there reason for the instructions to fathers to bring their children up in the nurture of the Lord, and for children to religiously obey their parents. The allusions here are as wide and universal as the race; and there can be no justification in restricting these allusions to good fathers and good children.

Since, therefore, the above allusions apply to universal humanity, it follows that universal life is the heritage of all men. Since this life is the gift of God, supplying the moral capabilities, the incentives and motives to a good life—these good motives being bestialized by the carnal appetites—sin is made to appear exceedingly sinful, and blame can attach to no one but the sinner. He may not hide himself under the plea of depravity, a term the use of which has done more to retard the growth, the development and extension of the Kingdom of God, both subjectively and objectively, than any other theological term now in use. I think the only significance that attaches to the term is, that man destroyed his original capacity for the ends and purposes of this creation.

These ends are now being reached by a new way. Moral capacity is no longer inherent, as in the beginning, but is the result of a gift. Man's use or abuse of that gift determines his final destiny. We might ask, when was this lost life and capacity restored? We would say in the garden before man was thrust out—when God said "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel." We see proclamation of man between the parties addressed and their respective seed. We see no reason justifying a modification of this language, limiting its application to those who have become good.

The war is on. It is universal. The conflict is between righteousness and unrighteousness. The contending elements are the sense of moral right and the sense of sensual, sinful pleasure and gratification.

The Holy Spirit is arbiter between the internal contentions. The carnal mind is very clamorous and persistent. It is not subject to the law of God, neither can it be. It is only when the sovereign will takes charge that the carnal mind surrenders its extravagant demands and the soul is allowed its imperial right to dominate the appetites of the flesh and to keep them in due and legitimate bounds; and further, by its activities, it surrounds itself with such associations as are suited to further development and growth.

It is all from within, and hence an evolution as truly as any other form of life, and, like all other forms of life, when the proper surroundings obtain and are maintained, the growth and development of the life is as necessary in the spiritual realm as in the natural.

From what is suggested above you may account for the different grades of life and character. Perfect adjustment to law or rule insures perfect and symmetrical development in the spiritual world as in the business or natural world.

God is back of all life. He is the source of all life. It is He who develops all life, but not independent of rule or law.

He has decreed the conditions necessary for the evolution of all life, and when these conditions obtain in reference to any form of life, the hidden germ begins to show its vitality, and nothing can hinder it from fulfilling its mission but arbitrary interference.

If these suggestions are studied in the light of many of the parables of our Lord, and many of his miracles, light and evidence will shine in vindication of the correctness of what we have said.

We have meant only to offer suggestions, rather than to attempt to follow the subjects by close and connected argument.

R. A. Ellis.

Belzonia, Miss.

There is as yet no culture, no method of progress known to men, that is so rich and complete as that which is ministered by a truly great friendship.—Phillips Brooks.

LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Nakatsu, Japan, Jan. 25, 1906.

New Year's greetings to our many friends who are readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate from Nakatsu, Japan.

Perhaps it may seem rather late for my "greetings," but we always have two "New Years" in Japan, the old and the new, and here in Nakatsu the old, or "China New Year," is celebrated more largely than the new. Mr. Waters reports very few people on the streets to-day, and many of the homes shut up—just as they do in China. The people are probably inside eating "mochi," the celebrated New Year's rice cakes.

We have been in Nakatsu now more than three months, and are beginning to feel at home in our new appointment. It is our first taste of real interior missionary life, and, strange as it may seem to many who dread such isolation, we are really enjoying it. Heretofore there have always been, at least, two or three other foreign families in the place where we are working; but excepting the French Catholic priest in Nakatsu I know of no other foreigners nearer than Kokura, a mission station two hours distant by rail. Oita, the nearest mission station of our own Church, is almost a day's journey from Nakatsu.

Our home (thanks to Brother Callahan) is beautifully situated on the bank of a most beautiful river, and the tall, dark mountains in the near background, together with the rivers, give us on one side of the house, all that we could ask of inspiration from natural scenery. On one side it seems all God; on the other all heathenism. The work here, so far, has been pleasant and encouraging. The demand for English Bible classes, in connection with his other work keeps Mr. Waters busy.

On last Saturday afternoon, although the snow was on the ground, there were twelve women present at our regular Saturday afternoon woman's meeting. Besides the regular devotional exercises, we cut and made over some old garments for the poor, whom we hope to relieve somewhat during this cold weather. We had a good meeting.

Last week we organized a woman's inquirers' class, with six members present. There are several other inquirers, who have expressed their intention of joining this class.

Just now we are very much interested in the work of distributing Bibles in Nakatsu and on the circuit. The money for this purpose was given us last winter by a friend and her little country school near Columbus, Miss. We sent the money on ahead of us, but, on our return to Japan, finding that it had not been used, we took charge of it, and it has been such a help and pleasure to have all the Bibles we need for the work. One old lady, a Christian, bent with age and a weak back, was so pleased with a copy of the Psalms, in large print, that we gave her. Another woman, an inquirer, who has weak eyes, was so glad to receive a Testament that she could read.

We are planning to give an entertainment soon for fifty invited guests from the neighborhood of our church, at which each one of the guests is to be presented with one of these Bibles. We expect to have songs about the Bible, solos and choruses, prayer, talks about the Bible from different speakers, and close up with tea and cake (it will cost only about $2.50 for the fifty), just to show our love and desire for good fellowship.

We hope to have these entertainments at other points on the circuit also.

Asking for a special interest just now in the prayers of the readers of the Advocate for Nakatsu and her new missionaries.

Yours in the work,

Lula Lipscomb Waters.

IS THERE A REAL NEED OF HOMES FOR THE SUPERANNUATES OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE?

At the recent session of the Louisiana Conference a resolution was passed instructing the Joint Board of Finance to take such action as they deemed necessary to erect homes for our Superannuates. After deliberate consideration, the Board made its recommendation to the Conference endorsing the movement, and appointed the writer Agent for the Board. The Conference adopted the action of the Board. The duties of the Agent were to vigorously press the cause, keep it before the Church, solicit aid, investigate titles to property, plan and execute arrangements for buildings, etc. It was understood that the Agent would do no traveling except as necessity required, but that his work should be done by correspondence. Hence the Agent is entirely dependent on the co-operation of the preachers for success.

In taking up this work the first question that presented itself was that contained in the caption of this article. The answer was found in part by the Conference resolution and the action of the Board; but in order to present an intelligent appeal to our people for aid, I felt that the need for superannuates' homes should be based upon the actual ability of our superannuates to occupy these homes if built. I, therefore, wrote to each of the twelve superannuates now on the list asking if they could occupy a home if they had the opportunity. Of the eight responses to this inquiry, six are either occupying homes of their own or living with their children, and would not need the home. Two are without homes and a cottage free of rent would be a godsend to them. Both of the Brethren are veterans of many years of honorable service in the active ranks, have helped to build many of the comfortable parsonages our preachers are now occupying, have served the church with ability, giving their active days to our Master's cause; and now, when they can no longer toil—feeble, broken in health and body—they are left homeless and penniless, except for the small pittance given them by the Conference. One of these "old soldiers" says: "I am now living with my daughter (a widow and a claimant on our fund) whose little home is under a heavy mortgage, and I am afraid she will not be able to redeem it." The other brother who needs a home has just gone on the list, being placed upon it without his own request, he says: "I was thrown out homeless and penniless, and know not where to go. I have rented a sort of a house, a kind of shanty, you may say; no conveniences, and I am paying eight dollars a month for it." This Brother was given $100 out of the sinking fund—all our regulations will allow him for this year—$96 with which to pay his rent, $4 to live on! He has moved twice since Conference at a cost of $75. He has two children to educate. Fortunately he is still able to do a little preaching yet, and is among a kind people. Here are two cases of great need—a home for each. We must build them this year.

I went a step further and addressed a letter to sixteen of the senior preachers now in the active ranks, some of whom will likely fall at their posts and ascend to their homes on high; but doubtless some of these will seek the honored and respected place of the superannuate. Where will they live? Most of them are happy in that their faithful wives linger with them still. The time of their superannuation is not far distant. After superannuation—what? We asked two questions in these letters, viz.: 1. If you should seek superannuation in a few years, could you occupy a house free of rent? 2. How will you manage if no such house is provided? One replied that he had already secured a home of his own, one other that he would live with his children. Six replied that such a home would be a great blessing to them. The others we have not heard from. I wish all our people could read these letters—certainly we would soon have homes to welcome these faithful servants of God. Read these extracts from two of them. One true, good man, whose footprints are planted all over our territory, carrying with them great ability, zeal and faithfulness for the past forty-six years, says to the first question: "Yes, yes; when superannuation comes what am I and my wife to do for a home has long been a burning question with me. Your second question has never been answered by wife and I. When on the ——— District I could raise a little extra money and was preparing to buy a cottage in ———, but Bishop ——— removed me to a place, to reach which all my spare money disappeared, and after remaining there one year, gave me another move, which cost me $117.50. So it has been for forty-six years. And so, also, for many others. Old age has found us homeless, and—seemingly, at least, to some—useless. Forty-six years of unbroken service—near the end of his journey, and—homeless! Brethren let us remove this reproach!

Hear another! "How will I manage? I do not know. I have no money, no rich kindred. I will be a very dependent man. I have been a traveling preacher since 1860—46 years. I would not know what to do for a living. My wife and I are both getting old—I am sixty-six and my wife sixty years old, and we have spent all our married life in the itinerancy." So in much the same strain the others write; yet how noble their faith. All express great faith in God. Says one, "But the Father above has cared for me all these years and I am not afraid to trust Him still." And God will provide for them; and the success of this movement will be his answer.

But this means that each pastor must do his part. Already lots in desirable localities have been offered, and now we need lumber, nails and money to buy material with and to employ labor. and if each one will present the cause in the right spirit and properly exert himself, the money will be forthcoming. The cause is laudable. The need is pressing. Your co-operation means success. Surely every one of our preachers will act upon the following

SUGGESTION:

Present the cause, make a strong appeal and take a collection in each congregation on Easter Sunday. Let those preachers who serve circuits take the cause to each congregation in the bounds of his work during the month of April. Make this matter a subject of prayer, public and private. Wherever needful, make a private appeal. If the preachers will do this, our success is assured. Insofar as they refuse or neglect to do so, the cause will be jeopardized.

Let your contributions to this cause go to S. B. McCutchen, Shreveport, La., Treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

By turning to the proper page in our admirable Book of Discipline, one may find the duties of this body clearly defined. Judging from the questions that are so judiciously arranged, it would indeed seem a difficult matter to neglect any essential feature of our church's general work. However, despite this well marked channel, it is evident even to a casual observer, that the Annual Conference has undergone a change within the last five years.

I am seriously in doubt whether this change is for the best. The essential features are the same, the questions are the same, the same men, barring the changes made by loss and gain in the ranks, meet as in former years, but the spirit and warm life-giving interest are lacking. The tone and color of an elder day is gone, and why? I will endeavor to show we are intensely connectional. As a church, one might travel far to find our superior in this respect. But our Annual Conferences are not connectional conventions. The most vital interest of this most important Conference, viz. the report and discussion of the work under its immediate supervision and care is hurriedly and superficially done. The reports from the various charges are given but scant courtesy and brief audience. Yet our people are more alive to a report from C. R. Hardtravel, of Faraway charge, than to any Board of Education, Extension, or anything else. Now this is plain, but it is my honest conviction. The things we wish to hear from and know about are kept in the background and the things with which our church periodicals and nice type written letters from the secretary of our secretaries, giving full information are thrust upon us. The Bishop is to blame some, not altogether. The connectional men only speak in recent years when they can get a hearing, so that some of them have almost forgotten how. I think the difficulty lies nearer home—it is with the body itself. The remedy, as I see it, is to so stress and magnify the immediate work of the pastor and the home church; that nothing else be of more or vaster importance, that we can consider. This is undoubtedly the greatest interest of an Annual Conference.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS.

The Woman's Board of Home Missions of the M. E. Church, South, will hold its eighth annual meeting in Central Church, Asheville, N. C., April 26-May 2. The opening service of the session will be held on Thursday Evening, April 26.

The names of all members of the Board and of the visitors to this meeting should be sent promptly to Mrs. W. W. Barnard, 137 Chestnut street, Asheville, N. C. Visitors coming to attend the session of the Board will be cordially entertained by the ladies of Asheville.

Reduced railroad rates will, if possible, be secured from all points, and the terms of reduction announced later.

FOR THE PRESS WORK.

The General Superintendent of the literature and press work has sent to each Conference Superintendent a request for a scrap-book made of clippings to show what has been done in the line of literary work in each Conference. For that book we solicit material from each auxiliary in the State. Let none feel that her auxiliary has done so little it is not worth reporting. Printed matter is especially desired. Any notice you have inserted about home mission work in your local paper, photographs of missionaries, lay workers, and deaconesses. Send a picture of your parsonage. If you are carrying on a mission school send a picture of it and write an article to interest others in it. Each auxiliary should feel a personal pride and responsibility in this scrap-book and I hope that this appeal will meet with a hearty response.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR MISSIONARIES AND CHRISTIAN WORKERS, NASHVILLE, TENN.

This school, which will be under the direction of the General Board of Missions, will give a six-weeks' course for the leaders in the woman's department of the church. The school will open March 3, and the expenses will be $16.00 for each course, and $4.00 per week for board. The Bible study class will be directed by Dr. Carter, of Vanderbilt, and Mr. Court, from Japan. The sociological study will be conducted by Mrs. J. E. McCulloch; the mission study class by Mrs. J. Cobb and Miss Lella Clark. Kitchen-gardening, first-aid-to-the-injured, methods of work, etc., will be taught by Miss Estelle Haskin, Mrs. I. G. Johns and others. Lectures and stereopticon illustrations of home and foreign missionary work will be given twice each week.

CITY MISSION BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the City Mission Board will be held in Algiers Church Friday, March 9th. The Board will hold two sessions, the first from 11 to 12:30 o'clock, when it will adjourn, to enjoy the hospitality of the Algiers Auxiliary, to re-convene at half past one. This Board is composed of six delegates from each home mission auxiliary in the city and was formed for the definite purpose of uplifting the dwellers in our slums. Their special field of labor is in the section known as the Irish Channel, a particularly vicious neighborhood. There where the waves of sin and vice and misery beat all around, stands the Mary Werlein mission like a light-house, shedding its torch of hope on the troubled waters. It is there that you may find Mrs. Lillie Meekins, ever ready to render spiritual and practical aid to all around her. She is employed as city missionary by the Board and is tireless in her efforts to minister to the sick and suffering around her.

All who are interested in home mission work are cordially invited to attend this meeting. A special invitation is extended to our pastors and church members. Come and hear what has been done during the past year and learn what is being planned for the future.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

MARY SMITH SCHOLARSHIP.

Any Methodist young woman, 18 years of age, of good moral character and desirous of training for Christian service, if suitably recommended, can apply to Mrs. L. C. Shoff, Ofibo, Miss., Conference Corresponding Secretary of North Mississippi Conference, Woman's Home Mission Society, who will present her claims to the Committee on scholarships at the next annual meeting, which convenes in Kosciusko, May 19-23.

The scholarship is at present being used by a young lady from the Mississippi W. H. M. Society, who is in training for active service, but will be vacant at close of session.

Among all the grand young womanhood of North Mississippi is there not one who wishes to know her Lord and serve her fellow-beings? If so, no grander opportunity can offer than this free scholarship in the Scarritt Bible and Training School.

It is not necessary that she should become a deaconess or city missionary. Trained workers are needed in the home church to teach in Sunday schools, help with the leagues and home and foreign missionary societies. The sick and strangers in our own church ought to be visited the needy assisted and sinners brought to Christ.

Will not some young woman in North Mississippi take advantage of this opportunity of coming home to serve her Master as a trained worker?

MRS. A. C. YEAGER,
Conf. Supt. of Press.

CONFERENCE TREASURER'S REPORTS.

Copies of quarterly and monthly reports which were sent us for the home mission column in the Advocate have been delayed being forwarded by causes which seemed unavoidable, but in future we hope that all matter intrusted to us can be sent on without delay for the benefit and encouragement as well as instruction of home mission workers.

The following gratifying report from Mrs. W. H. Watkins speaks for itself:

MRS. W. H. WATKINS.

From the letter of same date we take the following:

"We feared and had reason to expect that the stagnation in business caused by fever and quarantine would greatly affect our work this quarter. And it has in some few places. But God has put it into the hearts of our sisters in the more favored districts to work more earnestly and give more liberally than ever before; so that the amount collected this quarter is nearly one hundred dollars in excess of the amount collected during the same quarter last year. This should greatly encourage and inspire us with the desire and determination to do even greater things for our Lord."

Another encouraging report comes from Mrs. B. F. Lewis, who writes that during this quarter there were four new auxiliaries organized—at Whitworth College with 34 members, at Court Street, Hattiesburg, with twenty members, at Red Street, Hattiesburg, and at Lucedale, in the Seashore District.

Our work is, indeed, in a gratifying state, but while success crowns our efforts let us not cease from our labors nor grow less warm in our enthusiasm. This is a great opportunity for home missions, and greater opportunities lie before us.

MRS. E. J. HARRIS,
Supt. Press Work, Miss. Conf.

BENVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell:—Myself and the rest of us arrived here on Jan. 24, and found a roomy parsonage and everything in real good shape.

I had been religiously indignant from the time that I found out that I had to move my hay and potatoes until I found everything so pleasant. Then I said to wife, "this must be a blessing in disguise." I am glad to say at this time that I am feeling real pious. I have made 150 visits to date, planted my garden, and I have also bedded out some potatoes, and if Brisco Carter moves me this fall I will tell his pa. Brother Carter held my first Quarterly Conference on the 3d day of February, and the occasion was one long to be remembered. The Stewards and people are in love with him, and we are anxiously awaiting his return during the second quarter.

My predecessor, Brother H. O. White, has many strong friends here, and the people, one and all, agree in saying that he is one of the best preachers that has been on this circuit for many years.

METHODIST UNION IN JAPAN.

The Commissioners appointed to effect a union of the various Methodist bodies in Japan met in Nashville on the first of March, and again failed to reach an agreement. [illegible] on the question [illegible] Since the United Brethren and the Methodist Protestant Churches have formed a union with the Congregationalists it would seem wise for them to likewise consolidate their forces in Japan, and cease further attempts to effect a union with Episcopal Methodists.

We received the official report of the last meeting of the Commissioners, part of which we reprint as follows:

"Upon adjournment of the Joint Commission at 5 p. m. the Commissioners appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met for conference, when Bishop A. W. Wilson was chosen President, and Dr. A. B. Leonard, Secretary. The following Commissioners were present: Methodist Episcopal Church, A. B. Leonard and C. W. Smith; Methodist Episcopal Church, South, A. W. Wilson, C. B. Galloway, James Atkins and W. R. Lambuth. After due deliberation Bishop Galloway offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, after patient and prayerful consideration the Joint Commission of four Methodist bodies were unable to agree upon a basis of union of the Methodist Churches in Japan.

"Resolved first, That we, the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, respectively, under authority by our General Conferences deem it wise to proceed at once to effect the union of our churches in Japan.

"Resolved second, That Bishops A. W. Wilson and Earl Cranston are hereby appointed a special committee to propose a basis of union to be submitted to this Joint Commission, to be called together at such time as they shall agree upon.

A BROTHER IN DISTRESS.

A good brother somewhat in trouble, renewing his subscription to the Advocate, adds the following: "The Advocate is all we have to look to for help, as our last Conference left us entirely. We are not known as a Church. Can you tell us why a Bishop would thus turn out to grass an organization of the Methodist Church? Thought our Church stock for building up, and preaching out, instead of flopping off? Strange things occur, and this is one of them."

The matter as stated does look strange, but perhaps the Bishop was not to blame. The law requires the Bishop "to see that the districts be formed according to his judgment," and "to divide a circuit, station or mission into two or more, when he judges it necessary." He can form no judgment except upon the information of others—generally the presiding elders. In the case alluded to the presiding elder may have overlooked the appointment or the preacher in charge, in arranging the plan of the circuit for his successor, may have unintentionally dropped

A SURPRISE PARTY.

"I say, girls, if we're going to give a surprise party, let's do some good with it," said Eva Carlton, a bright, frank, fearless girl, whom her comrades called "General."

"Give it to the minister," snggested Ada Campbell.

"The minister don't want it. He has a good salary and it is promptly paid. Besides, he has had the parsonage refurnished, and we should spoil the new carpets; and thirdly and lastly, he don't like surprise parties," said the first speaker. "No; I move that we see who are the most needy of our acquaintances and select some person who won't take it as an insult to be presented with our good things."

"I can only think of Betty Hoyle, who lives in a part of the old Tumble house," said one of the girls.

"The very person! I never thought of Betty, for the reason that I haven't seen her lately."

"She has been sick with a fever," said another voice, "but she is up and about the house now. I saw her to-day at the window, looking very pale and sad."

"We'll try to cheer her, then," said Eva. "Let me see! Her mother has a large family?"

"Five or six little children. Betty is the eldest, and the mother is poor enough these hard times. She washed for mother last week, and I heard her say there were days in which there had been neither fire nor food in the house."

"Awful!" was the response, while a sympathetic chill went round the circle; "and Betty is such a nice, ladylike girl—so womanly."

"She has to be, for there is very little help at home besides hers. It's too bad she has to work so, for she is anxious to get an education. I have seen her cry when she brought excuses for absence, and of course, had to lose her marks."

"Suppose we widen the rill of our benevolence," said Eva, who had been thinking. "Let us get some cheap calico, and make a few aprons—and no doubt we can all find some cast-off clothes that are still good. I know I can. Mamma was saying only yesterday, she wished she knew where to send some good woollen clothes that Jimmy has outgrown; and I am sure there are plenty in my wardrobe that I never wear."

"Can't we manage some coal and wood?"

"I'm afraid not; but perhaps we can make up a little purse, and Mrs. Hoyle can buy what she likes from it."

"I don't s'pose they hardly ever saw pound cake," said little Amy Bonsall, whose wistful blue eyes were full of sympathy.

"No, Puss; I don't believe they hardly ever did," laughed back Eva, "but we will make them a whole one, won't we, girls? And now shall we put it to a vote?" she asked.

The vote was taken, and it was decided by the small society of the "Social Midges," as they formally called themselves, to have a surprise party at the old Tumble-house on the following Tuesday evening at seven o'clock.

On that day the old broken clock in the corner, only relic of better days, was just striking seven, as the Hoyles, big and little, sat down to tea.

I said tea, but there was only a pitcher of water on the table, and a cake made of Indian meal, which, with the aid of a little jug of black molasses, constituted a supper for seven persons. A cheerful fire burned in the open fireplace, for the boys found refuse wood enough during the day to keep them warm.

Betty, pinched-looking and pale, sat up with the rest, but she only tasted a mouthful of the bread.

"I wish I could have got some wheat bread," said her mother. "I should if I hadn't owed 'em at the baker's, but the man there always scowls so if I don't bring the money, that I really hadn't the heart to go."

"Never mind, mother; I'm not very hungry," cried Betty, with the ghost of a smile.

"Bless me! Who is that?" cried the good woman, hurriedly putting away the remnants of their poor meal.

"It's lots of 'em," said little Tom, flattening his nose at the window.

"Yes, it's lots of us!" cried Eva Carlton, as the girls filed in, sprinkled with a goodly number of boys. "Why, Betty, I didn't know you had been sick till a day or two ago. Don't try to find chairs for all of us; we can sit on the floor, in the window-seats—everywhere."

"We brought a few jellies for you, Betty," said Eva, pointing to the baskets, which were soon emptied of their contents, "and a little nice cake. I know how it is; sick people don't relish home-cooking. Now I can tell you, we've come to have a good time."

And they did have a good time. The little Hoyles opened all their little eyes to twice their usual size at sight of the goodies that at a later hour were spread out upon the pine table.

"Dishes, bless you!" said Eva, laughing, "we don't want dishes! This is a picnic!" And they proved that they did not want them.

As for Betty, the shy girl was never so happy in her life. Her schoolmates did not look down upon her because she was poor, and Mrs. Hoyle, who had seen better times, pleased them all by her gentle, ladylike reception.

Eva took the latter aside as they were about going home.

"Please don't be angry with us, Mrs. Hoyle," she said, "but we left some baskest down stairs, which you can empty and send by your boys to father's store, to-morrow."

"Thank you, my dear," said the woman, with tears in her eyes. "You are all so kind! And I am glad you came, for Betty's sake."

They were glad all around. The baskets contained substantial gifts, that took the sting from the fangs of that horrible wolf at the door; and, I think, from the experience of a few of my girl acquaintances, that this kind of a surprise party is the best that can be given.—Selected.

ON DUTY.

Uncle Alex came out on the back piazza with his newspaper, and was just going to seat himself in one of the arm chairs, when a very large spider, weaving its web among the vines, attracted his attention. He went closer to look at it and presently called to Neddie, who was playing in the yard: "Neddie, come and see this huge spider."

"I can't now, Uncle Alex," replied Neddie; "I am on duty."

Uncle Alex came out on the back piazza and looked at Neddie. He had a paper soldier-cap on, and, carrying his toy gun, was gravely pacing up and down before his tent, which was pitched on the grass under the big cherry tree. Will Ramsey and two or three other boys were in the adjoining meadow galloping around on sticks and flourishing wooden swords. There was probably a battle going on, though the cows chewing their cud under the trees didn't seem a bit frightened.

"What are you doing?" asked Uncle Alex.

"I'm a sentinel keeping guard," said Neddie.

"Can't you come over here just a minute if I watch the tent?"

"No, indeed," answered Neddie, decidedly. "Soldiers mustn't go away a second when they're on duty."

"Well, well," said Uncle Alex, seeming quite amused as he sat down to his paper.

Towards the close of the afternoon, when the tent was deserted and the boys were playing something else at the other side of the house, Neddie's mother came out on the porch from the kitchen carrying a small basket. She looked hastily around and then called, "Neddie, Neddie! where are you?"

"Here, mamma!" he shouted, bounding around the corner of the house and up the steps.

"I want you to go over to the store and get me two pounds of sugar and half a pound of raisins," said his mother, adding, as she gave him the basket and some money, "Now don't be gone long. I'm making something good for supper, and want those things as soon as possible."

About ten minutes after Neddie had gone, Uncle Alex started to the post-office. When he reached the little brook which had to be crossed to get to the village, he saw Neddie standing on the bridge throwing pebbles into the water.

"Hello, Neddie!" he said, "I thought you were on duty."

"No, sir," replied the boy, looking up in surprise; "we're not playing soldier any more. Mamma sent me on an errand."

"Did she send you here to throw pebbles in the brook."

"No, sir; she sent me to the store for something."

"I thought I heard her giving you a commission which was to be executed with promptness and dispatch, and knowing you to be such a soldierly fellow, who could not be tempted away from duty a moment, I wonder, rather, to see you standing here," and Uncle Alex stroked his whiskers meditatively and knit his brows as though he was trying to study the matter out.

Neddie, with a puzzled expression, looked steadily in his uncle's face for a moment or two, and then turning toward the village was off like a flash.

Uncle Alex was standing on the post-office steps reading a letter, when he happened to see Neddie come out of the grocery store with his basket and walk rapidly homeward. Some little boys on the other side of the street also spied him, and running over, surrounded him, evidently wanting him to stop with them a little while, but he, though in a very good natured way, declined their invitation, and kept on his way. He realized that he was on duty.—Emma L. Buruet, In Little Wanderer.

Let us not be content with the effort to imitate Christ; let us appropriate Him, as the flowers of Spring and the fruits of Autumn appropriate the properties of the sap and dew and balmy air, and all the glorious forces that lie hid in the sunbeams.—Meyer.

The Christian Life.

WHY NOT SPEAK TO THEM?

A stranger had come to do some work about the building and the thought, "is he a Christian?" occurred to me. I decided to try to find out and soon succeeded in ascertaining he had once known the Lord; but was a backslider. To my surprise I found he knew me, and I have but little doubt, had I manifested no special interest in his spiritual welfare, he would have been disappointed. In the course of conversation he said he had a brother who was unconverted and he wished there was some one to speak to him. He thought he was concerned and needed help, but no one talked to him.

This set me to thinking, and I wondered if all around each of us there were not some unconverted persons who were expecting us to speak to them; and how sadly would some regret that during perhaps several years, when they might have led their friends to Christ, there was nothing said, or at least very little, and at last they passed away leaving no evidence of having become Christians.

Christian reader, what are you doing? Do you keep those whom you directly influence constantly in mind? Do you think of the awful fact that while they are away from Christ they are living a life of sin against God and are every moment in danger of dropping into hell? You may say you are weak. It is true. We are weak; but going forth looking to Jesus the Divine power will go through our weakness to the glory of God. Oh, let us get nearer the Master. Let us get more of this mind which was in the Lord Jesus—he came to seek and to save that which was lost.

Of course, if there is any thought about engaging in this active work, all sorts of suggestions and hindering influences from the great enemy of souls may be expected. We need not be surprised at this. But let us break through. If we are privileged to lead one soul to Christ we shall be amply repaid for the trouble and conflict we may endure in making the effort. What think you, my dear Christian reader?—Christian Companion.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

I have so fixed the habit in my own mind that I never raised a glass of water to my lips without asking God's blessing. I never seal a letter without putting a word of prayer under the seal. I never take a letter from the post without a brief sending of my thoughts heavenward. I never change my classes in the section-room without a minute's petition for the cadets who go out and those who come in.—Stonewall Jackson.

SANCTIFIED.

I heard some time since of an oculist who was very fond of cricket. But he had given it up, much as he enjoyed it, for he found it affected the delicacy of his touch, and for the sake of those whom he sought to relieve he santified himself and set himself apart. That is what we want—that there shall come into our lives a force that prompts us always to be at our best and readiest for service, our fullest and richest to help — a tree that is always in leaf and always in bloom and always laden with its fruit, like the orange tree, where the beauty of the blossom meets with its fragrance the mellow glory of the fruit.—Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

Christ will come unto thee, and show thee His consolation, if thou prepare for Him a worthy abode within thee. All His glory and beauty is from within, and there he delighteth himself. The inward man He often visiteth, and had with him sweet discourse, pleasant solace, much peace, familiarity exceeding wonderful.—Thomas a Kempis.

MRS. E. D. SIMMONS.

After eighty-one years of pilgrimage on this beautiful old earth, there passed, to her eternal abiding place on February 18 one of the oldest members of the Sardis Mississippi Methodist Church, Mrs. Elizabeth D. Simmons.

Truly, one of the most remarkable women it has ever been my pleasure to meet, was this dear departed "mother in Israel." Although advanced in years, she had, until within a short time prior to her demise, retained almost perfect health, and her mental faculties were unimpaired. Those who knew her well never thought of her as an old person, so erect was her carriage, youthful her figure, and so great her interest in the activities of those about her. The eccentricities which generally grow upon people with advancing years were absent in this interesting personality, and up to a few days before the end the aged grandmother lived as distinctly in the present as did her children and grandchildren. A woman of intelligence and of mental culture, she was a charming and appreciative companion for the scholarly. Thoroughly interested in her fellow-creatures, and having a heart that beat in sympathy with all mankind, she was beloved by all who came in touch with her,—the old, the young, the rich and poor, of whatever clime or race.

Hers was above all else a beautiful Christian character, and she influenced for good every life that came in contact with her. She had a child-like faith in God, and it was ever her custom to leave all matters pertaining to her affairs in His hands. In her were fought combined a marvelous gentleness that impressed all who were thrown with her, and made every one realize that she was a woman of wonderful strength. As yielding to the wishes of others as a delicate willow twig when no question of principle was involved, she was at the same time as immovable as Gibraltar when it came to being turned from the right.

Mrs. Simmons had spent over forty-five years of her life in Mississippi, though by birth she was a daughter of the Old Dominion. Being a niece of Dr. H. G. Leigh, the founder of Randolph-Macon College, she spent much time at old Randolph-Macon while a young lady, and among her dear friends there was the lamented Bishop McTyeire. She was converted when a young married woman, and joined the Methodist Church in Weldon, N. C. Thorough was that conversion!

The Gospel of Christ has no stronger advocate than a life like hers; and eternity alone can reveal the extent of its influence for good. A true wife, mother and friend was this godly woman. "An Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile." "Can storied urn or animated bust" say more?

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Railroads in Mississippi have granted delegates from all points attending the Mississippi Conference Epworth League, to be held at McComb City, April 26-29 next, a reduction in their return railroad fare by the routes travelled in going to the meeting according to the rules and regulations shown in their contracts.

Tickets for the return journey will be sold at reduced rates only to persons holding certificates of the standard form, duly signed with ink by the Secretary of the Conference, and vised by C. F. Lanier, special agent at the ticket office of the I. C. R. R.

All interested in this work should remember that unless 50 or more delegates are in attendance the reduced rates will not apply, and therefore it is important that all should begin at once to urge a full attendance.

We would further suggest that all who contemplate attending the Conference should enquire at their ticket office and ascertain if a sufficient number of standard form certificates are on hand. At our Conference last year it was learned that some delegates were unable to procure these certificates, and many suffered on account of the dereliction of one or two ticket agents.

RATES.

Delegates paying full fare going to the Conference, and who hold certificates of the standard form, will be sold tickets for the return journey at one-third fare plus twenty five cents.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1906.

The Bulletin of the University of Mississippi shows that nearly two-thirds of the students belong to some church, including three Hebrews. Nearly one-third express inclination for one church or another. Only twenty-eight are reported as "unclassified." That speaks well for the University—a happy omen for the future of the State.

Grading appointments by preachers according to cash payments looks too much like making gain of godliness. More than a dozen times in recent years we have read in our Northern exchanges advertisements like this: "A pastor desires to exchange a charge in ———, good new church and furnished parsonage, cash salary $1,050, for a charge of equal grade in lower latitude." It is no healthy sign.

* * *

That our Lord was the "Great Teacher" and thoroughly trained the twelve apostles cannot be denied. But theological professors who have succeeded Him are not infallible. Not only so, but some of them are strongly suspected of being out of harmony with the teachings of the Master. It is not strange, therefore, that a degree of opposition to such theological schools as we have occasionally encountered exists. Church editors must not be too hard on opposing brethren.

* * *

The Rev. W. W. Everts, pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church, Boston, hits the critics of the upper class rather hard. He says: "The higher critics are still busily engaged in reconstructing the edifice, putting the upper story on the ground and the foundations up in the air. There is a gaping crowd watching the perilous reconstruction. The absurdity of the whole affair is becoming apparent, and soon the 'higher criticism' will be relegated to the curiosities of literature."

* * *

Brother Tardy tells the readers of the Baptist Chronicle that he has "made certain discoveries." One discovery is that the Baptist ministry is sadly lacking in suitable men. There are, he says, too many "half-and-halfs," men "too finicky for the country and too boorish for the towns." Two-thirds of the country churches in some districts in Louisiana are pastorless for the simple reason that there is not a preacher of sufficient "manliness and horse sense and religion to fill the pulpit." That is about as hard on the schools turning out such material as it is on the preachers.

CHRISTIAN EXAMPLE.

Christian profession amounts to nothing unless it is confirmed by Christian example. To profess one thing and act another, may not always be hypocrisy, but it is inconsistency, and invariably harmful—harmful both to the individual and to the cause which he is supposed to represent.

In some circles very little is required in the way of exact Christian living. One who goes to service on Sunday and engages in the worship, who takes heed to the sacraments, and observes times and seasons, the feasts and fasts, is regarded as in good standing and on a safe moral basis. We have known a man to do all these things, and yet engage in selling liquor by the dram all the week without losing caste in his church. Many women can dance six nights in a week and be very devout on the seventh. Admitting that all such Christians are perfectly sincere, and see no harm in things of this kind, it is nevertheless true that they neither walk close with God, nor do they exercise a wholesome influence over sinners. A liquor-selling Christian could not give a healthy religious experience in a class-meeting or a love feast. He would make poor progress in pointing penitents to Christ. The gay reveler could not comfort a soul in trouble.

But men and women may be innocent of these forms of evil and all the gross sins of the world, and yet fall short of presenting a wholesome Christian example. Too many forget that proper example consists quite as much in governing temper and tongue and in the performance of good deeds as in the exercise of personal piety and in refraining from common sins. In personal piety for purely selfish ends the Pharisees were above reproach, but they were utterly destitute of charity, never hesitating to devour widows' houses, or to do other things at the expense of their neighbors, if thereby they could advance their own interests. Our Lord warns us against such examples of righteousness, and tells us that unless our "righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees we shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The early Christians were beautiful and consistent examples of holy living. "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. * * * and continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people." These early converts caught the spirit of right living from the apostles, who caught it from the Master himself. This spirit was a marvel to the rulers. When Peter and John stirred the people by working a notable miracle, the rulers laid hands on them and thrust them into prison. When next day they were called to answer, Peter's only defense was that he worked in the name of Christ. And he declared Jesus to be the only name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. And they took knowledge of Peter and John "that they had been with Jesus." Aside from their boldness in confessing and declaring Christ there was an indefinable something about them that impressed the rulers that the two men had associated with Jesus and had imbibed His spirit. It will always impress men thus when Christians demean themselves as true disciples.

Our Lord taught His disciples how to act like Christians, having in view the glory of God. He said: "Ye are the light of the world." "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven." So shine! Not parading before men as though intending to shine upon them and force their attention. The modest Christian does not desire to attract attention to himself, but having in him the light, he does not put it under a bushel in the presence of men. He simply lets it shine, and men naturally see, and are turned to God.

Christians, in order to benefit men by their example, must give no countenance to the evil world. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed," was St. Paul's exhortation to the Romans. He told the Corinthians that Christians and worldly men had nothing in common—no sympathy one with another. "Wherefore," said he, "come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing."

St. James, in his intensely practical way, says: "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

Somebody has said, "It is a mighty nice thing to be a Christian." One of our poets expressed the truth when he said, "A Christian is the highest style of man." Every Christian should be a living epistle of Christ.

WHAT A BISHOP SHOULD BE.

Dr. Rankin, of the Texas Advocate, makes the road to the Episcopacy mighty narrow—so narrow that but few men will be found qualified to enter upon it. He names seven things necessary to an acceptable and efficient Bishop. We quote as follows: 1. "A Bishop ought to be a deeply spiritual man; not merely pious and moral, but genuinely religious." 2. "A Bishop ought to be a broad and well cultured man." 3. "He ought to be a man of fine executive ability, for his work is largely of this character." 4. "A Bishop ought to be a great preacher." 5. "A Bishop ought to be a discriminating judge of human nature." 6. "A Bishop ought to be a man of kind heart." 7. "A Bishop ought to have had the varied experiences of an itinerant Methodist preacher." No doubt we have men who possess one or more of these qualifications to a large degree, but the men in whom all seven are centered are not so numerous as to make choice a matter of difficulty. Dr. Rankin thinks "we have members" who measure up to the standard men who "embody" all the qualifications named. He weakens his statement though by adding, "to a reasonable degree." Should we live to cast a ballot, bearing in mind the seven qualifications—every one of which is important—we will be compelled to vote by faith, or trust the word of some brother, so far as two or three of the qualifications are concerned.

The man who testifies that he "cannot keep awake in Church anywhere, except on the back seat," is close kin to the one sitting next to him, who told the preacher that by the time his sermon reached him it was "mighty thin."

PERSONAL.

Rev. R. T. Nolen of the Trenton circuit has sent us seventy-five subscribers. He says he is working for a full hundred. He will get them.

Our church at Jonesboro, La., has sustained a great loss in the death of one of the elect sisters, Mrs. Wilcox. The pastor promises a memoir at the earliest date.

Rev. S. A. Howard, writing from Jonesboro, La., informs us that he is suffering from an attack of bronchitis, and has been prostrated for more than a week.

Rev. C. B. Carter, Presiding Elder of the Arcadia District, is diligent in his work, faithful in looking after its interests and preaching to the delight of the people.

Rev. E. M. Mounger, of Lumberton, was in the city last week, and kindly remembered the Advocate both by his presence and adding materially to our subscription list.

Rev. S. J. Davies is getting along nicely in his charge, Harrisburg and Vaudalia. The year promises to be a fruitful one. We trust his most sanguine hopes may be realized.

Rev. Harry Whitehead, pastor of our church in Algiers, is well pleased with his charge, preaches to good congregations and has hopes of a year of great success. Prospects are good.

Rev. D. W. Cobb, in sending a club of new subscribers, with several renewals, says: "Please remember that we are in the prairie and few in number, and that I have worked hard to get these subscribers. We bear the facts in mind and give the credit."

We thank Brother T. C. King, of Purvis, Miss., a layman, for sending us a new subscriber, and for his very kind and appreciative words accompanying. Brother King himself has not been a reader of the Advocate very long, but he is pleased and interested.

Brother Jaco, at Grenada, is preaching to unusually large congregations. He modestly attributes the increase to the prevailing good weather. We dare say he is giving his hearers good preaching. We are under obligations to him for a list of twenty-three new subscribers.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, in closing the first round on the Aberdeen District, says: "I think the prospects better than I have ever known on a district. The salaries of nearly all the pastors have been increased over last year. Pastors are all hopeful and the people are pleased. We are praying for a revival."

Rev. Geo. Jackson is at his work, book selling and preaching occasionally, but owing to much rain and bad roads is unable to get through the country to any great extent. When the roads get dry so he can travel in a buggy he will visit the interior churches, where we feel sure he will meet a hearty welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Brown of Meridian, Miss., announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Clare, to Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, of the Mississippi Conference. This happy event occurred Thursday morning, March 1, 1900. They are at home at Flora, Miss., where Brother Lipscomb is pastor. May their life be bright and happy.

Rev. R. M. Evans, of the North Mississippi Conference, stationed at Vaiden, was married to Miss Olivia Wright, of Holly Springs, Miss., at the home of her brother, E. M. Wright, Feb. 28, 1900, by Rev. R. H. H. Gladney. We congratulate our brother on his good fortune and wish for him and his all the blessings of this life.

We acknowledge an invitation to the marriage of Miss Mary Vaughan, of Nashville, to Rev. H. B. Carre, which will take place in West End Church, Nashville, Thursday at 7 p. m., March 22. We will not be able to attend the wedding, but we extend our best wishes and pray for them all the blessings of this life and the life to come.

We call special attention to the notice of Rev. Jno. F. Foster in another column of the Sunday school institutes to be held during the next few weeks in different parts of the Louisiana Conference. These institutes mean much to the church and Sunday school superintendents and teachers should arrange to attend them in great numbers.

A note from J. M. Wyatt, of the University Training School, Oxford, Miss., tells us of the well-being of the institution and its prospects, with this kind word added: "Brother Comiss left the church here in an excellent condition, and Brother Spragins is carrying the great work on with marked success. He is a strong preacher, diligent in business and fervent in spirit."

Rev. Burke Culpepper has written us a letter from Jacksonville, Ill., at which place, in connection with his father, Rev. J. B. Culpepper, he is engaged in a great revival. Large congregations attend the services and all the churches of the city are in the movement. On the night of March 7 there were twenty-five conversions, and many added to the churches, the meeting going on with increased interest.

In the mail of Tuesday morning last we received a full, fat envelope, which we dreaded a little to open, thinking it contained a long communication, something we do not particularly need, as we have an abundance of matter on hand. But instead it was a long list of subscribers and renewals from Rev. T. H. King, of Pelahatchie, Miss. There were twenty-nine new subscribers and four renewals, with the money to pay for them. Brother King has our hearty thanks.

Brother J. R. Abels, a liberal-hearted layman, has donated two lots in the town of Ponchatoula for a superannuate home. Ponchatoula is a good place for such a home. It is in the "ozone" region of Louisiana. The community is intelligent and well-to-do, and we have in the town a strong, active and growing church. We hope the appeal of Brother R. W. Vaughan in this issue of the Advocate will be carefully read. Every Methodist in the State ought to co-operate in the work of furnishing homes for our worn-out preachers.

Rev. J. D. Ellis, editor of the Habana Christian Advocate, while actively engaged in his work on the afternoon of March 1 was suddenly stricken, and died almost instantly. He had been editor less than five months, but in that period he displayed an aptitude for the work and showed himself to be a courageous defender of what he knew to be right. He was in the prime of life, having been born in 1866, and apparently in perfect health. How true it is that "in the midst of life we are in death." A good man of great promise has fallen.

BISHOP MORRISON'S ENDORSEMENT OF LEAGUE WORK.

I have belonged to every temperance organization known in my day, but I have more confidence in the success of the Anti-Saloon League than in any temperance movement I have ever known. It is the kite-tail to no party, but takes in all parties and individuals who will fight the saloon, uniting all churches and all right-thinking men outside the churches. Success is not only possible, but certain.

What we need in this work and what is most needed today in official positions in church and State, is moral spinality—men with moral backbone, who will stand by the right, and if need be, die by the right.

My advice to young ministers in battle against the rum traffic is, when the cry is raised against "preachers going into politics," if fighting rum is going into politics, then go into politics and stay in politics until you have freed the Republic from the greatest curse known in its history. Think of a minister being intimidated by the cry of "politics," when your name and your family are subject to ruin from this fiendish business! Pray for its downfall! Preach for its downfall! Then be sure you vote as you pray and preach.

I wish to indorse every word uttered by the speaker (Dr. Baker) who has addressed you, and to urge your co-operation in driving the evil from our fair land.

H. C. MORRISON.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

HEBRON CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: While reading the editorial of Feb. 22 in the Epworth Era, I was a little impressed with that clause that read thus: "Think twice before you speak, and three times before you write." I believe I try as hard to think twice before speaking once as most people do, but have never gotten as well up in that virtue as the little boy whose father had always taught him that axiom. On a certain occasion the father was standing by a very hot fire, warming himself, when his coat-tail became ignited, and his boy began to say slowly, "I t-h-i-n-k, I t-h-i-n-k—" "Well, what do you think, Sonnie?" "Why, I think, Dad, your coat-tail is burning." The father realized his burning condition before Sonnie told him of his dilemma. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways; and as to thinking three times before you write—well, having rode horseback over 300 miles within two months' time, and being only 60 years young and 5 years old, I think I might venture to write:

My First Quarterly Conference has gone into the history of the past. It was held February 27, our dear beloved in the chair. It was pleasant, indeed, to all present, both lay and official members. My work this year is the same as it was last, with the addition of two other appointments in the adjoining county to this. It takes in one corner of Smith and a strip nearly through Jones, somewhat like unto a back band, long and narrow. I was able to report eight months of my Conference collections in cash and bona fide subscriptions by my First Quarterly Conference; other reports fair to good. In some respects this is a hard work, but I like and enjoy it much. I am making a hard and a long pull to get two new churches ready for occupation by August next, and with the help of the Lord, I expect to win.

I will say, by way of benediction to my letter, that I like Brother J. A. Parker's definition of the power imparted to the apostles at Pentecost better than any. Good-by; God bless you. F. A. LANE.

Christ will come unto thee, and show thee his consolations, if thou prepare for him a worthy mansion within thee.—Thomas a Kempis.

A SOFT ANSWER.

An English tramp steamer had just been moored to a wharf in Boston. From her dingy hold there leaped upon the dock a man who was evidently a stoker. He was black with grime, reckless of face, eager for release from an almost unbearable confinement and ready for any animal gratification for which he could find opportunity.

As he emerged upon the main street, looking probably for the nearest saloon, he saw a colored woman walking sedately toward him, carrying a basket of apples. Full of mischief, the stoker stumbled against her, upset the basket upon the pavement, and then stood aside to laugh at the invectives which he supposed his trick would bring forth.

But the old colored woman did not even look at her tormenter. She bent and quietly picked up her apples. There was not even an expression of resentment upon her face. She bent here and stooped there, and when she had recovered her last apple she turned upon the astonished man with a pathetic dignity that forced respect, and said, in tones of simple kindness:

"God forgive you, my son, as I do."

The rudeness that had counted on a bitter berating was softened in an instant. The man's coarse lips parted, his hard eyes fell, he tried to speak, then he thrust his hands into his pockets and pulled out all the silver he had. This he forced upon the silent woman.

"Take it," he said, and then added, as she looked at him in astonishment, "God bless you, mother! I'll never do it again!"

That which is probably one of the hardest saying of Christ to accept, one that has received the ridicule of centuries, is illustrated by this incident. The principle involved in the command to turn the other cheek to the smiter is utterly antagonistic to natural human impulse. "A soft answer turneth away wrath," is a form of presentation of the same principle, that in theory, at least, is somewhat readily acknowledged; and its truth was never more emphatically verified than in the incident we have described.—Youth's Companion.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

A GOOD WORD FROM MONROE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am sure you will be glad to hear a few words of good news from the Methodists of Monroe. Indeed, we have nothing but good news to report from this pastoral charge. Our new pastor, Dr. Winkinson, reached Monroe the second week in January, and already, by his genial manners and earnest and eloquent preaching, has won the love and, therefore, the co-operation of the people of this city—not the Methodists, but all.

On the first Friday night after the arrival of the pastor, a reception was tendered the pastor and his family in the Sunday school room. Nearly all of the membership of the Church and many others were there, and in this way the wheel of prosperity was started rolling, and has gained speed and momentum with the passing of the weeks.

Our mid-week prayer meetings are fairly well attended; our Epworth League is weekly taking on new life and gaining strength and developing latent powers heretofore dormant. Our Sabbath school, under the wise and earnest superintendency of Brother Reily, merits the admiration of the Church; and our large and handsome church is filled to overflowing twice every Sabbath with earnest worshipers, who come to hear the Word of God. All of the different societies of the Church have the grace and regularity of a new timepiece. Religious labor has almost become the paramount business of many of our people, and joining the Church is common. Truly, we have much for which to be thankful in Monroe for what has already been accomplished, but we believe this only the prophecy of what the year holds in store for this Church.

Yesterday was a great day for us here. Dr. Murrah, our beloved and capable President of Millsaps College, was with us. He came for the special purpose of speaking to the Y. M. C. A. of this city. He addressed a large audience of men at the First Methodist Church at 3:30 in the afternoon, and filled the same pulpit for the pastor at night. In spite of a very severe cold, Dr. Murrah preached two powerful and deeply spiritual sermons, that will be long remembered and treasured by the people of this city. Dr. Murrah's visit to Monroe was of peculiar pleasure both to the pastor of our Church and to the writer of this letter—a friend of years' standing with the former, a friend, teacher and ideal of the latter. Monroe is benefited and edified because of his visit, and begs that the honor shall again be conferred.

We are glad to be able to give such a cheerful report of our Church work here, and to be so sanguine about the developments of the future.

M. S. PITTMAN.

LELAND, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am in charge of the newly-made station of Leland; and, this being the first year of its history, I must say we are starting off very well, considering the poor excuse of a pastor that they have for this year. We have a fine Sunday school of sixty scholars, and they are doing a great work for the Master and our Church. Then we have a weekly prayer meeting, which is nothing less than a weekly revival, and, in addition to this, we have an old-time class-meeting, conducted by the class-leader, Dr. W. A. Scruggs, and it seems to have the old-time effect. We have several members who pray in public—some young men and some old. Taking all things in consideration, the outlook is fine for Leland.

We are to entertain the District Conference at this place for the Greenville District. It will convene April 15, and, while we are proud to know that Bishop Hoss will preside over our Conference, we would like very much to have Dr. Boswell's smiles among us also.

Our new Presiding Elder is getting off on his right foot, and is doing a great work for this district.

Yours in the work,

LUTHER A. McKEOWN.

SHAW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We landed in Shaw on Dec. 20, 1905, at 10:30 p.m. We were shown to the parsonage, where we found warm fires, supper and good beds awaiting us. Several of the good women visited the parsonage early the next morning, and have done all that could be done to make us comfortable.

Shaw is a wide-awake, progressive Delta town, and our Church keeps pace with every other interest of the town. We have one of the best Sunday schools in the Conference, larger now than ever, and growing in interest and numbers each week. We have W. F. M. and H. M. Societies, a Juvenile Mission Society with twenty-nine members, and all enthusiastic.

We are putting about $500 worth of repairs on our church and parsonage.

Duncan and Alligator, each has a good Sunday school, growing in interest throughout the charge.

Brother R. A. Meek, our efficient P. E., was with us Feb. 11 and 12; preached two excellent sermons, and made many friends.

We are planning and praying for a great year. We are well and happy. Pray that we may be useful.

W. D. McCULLOUGH, P. C.

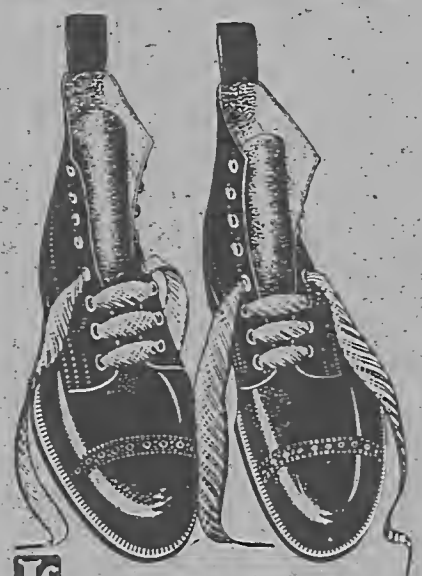
ASTOUNDING FACTS.

Mr. Nelson, the most distinguished of English actuaries, after long and careful investigations, and comparisons, ascertained by actual experience the following astonishing facts:

Between the ages of fifteen and twenty, where ten total abstainers die, eighteen moderate drinkers die.

Between the ages of twenty and thirty, where ten total abstainers die, thirty-one moderate drinkers die.

Between the ages of thirty and forty, where ten total abstainers die, forty moderate drinkers die.



Or, expressing the fact in another form, he says:

A total abstainer twenty years old has the chance of living forty-four years longer, or until sixty-four years old.

A moderate drinker has the chance of living fifteen and one-half years longer, or until thirty-five and one-half years old.

A total abstainer forty years old has the chance of living twenty-eight and one-fourth years longer, or until sixty-eight and one-half years old.

A moderate drinker forty years old has the chance of living eleven and two-thirds years longer, or until fifty-one and one-half years old.—Unidentified.

Dr. J. Newton Hathaway, the South's Most Expert Specialist, Has Issued a Number of Books on Different Diseases, Each Separate, Which He Will Send Free to Every Sufferer. Write for One or More at Once.

Dr. J. Newton Hathaway of Atlanta, Ga., who is recognized throughout the South as the most expert specialist, in his line of treatment—chronic diseases—has issued a number of very interesting and valuable books on the different diseases he treats, each separate, which he will send to every afflicted person writing him and without one cent of charge. Write for one or more, giving the title.

"Diseases of the Urinary Tract"
"Manliness, Vigor, Health"
"Varicocele"
"Stricture"
"Health"
"Specific Blood Poison"
"Diseases of the Throat and Lungs"
"Women's Diseases"
"Catarrh"
"Skin, Rectal, Rhenmatism"
"Gleet."
"Nervous Exhaustion" (lost vitality).

The last named book should be in the hands of every person, whether sick or well. It is very interesting and in language every person can readily understand. It is the most complete published in recent years.

These books are sent entirely free, but if you wish one you had better send for it at once. Only a limited number printed.

If you wish competent medical advice on any disease, Dr. Hathaway will take pleasure in advising you—advice based on 25 years' experience and without charge. Have no hesitancy whatever in writing him. Everything strictly confidential. Address Dr. Hathaway & Co., 57 Inman Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

SOMETHING FROM MEADVILLE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Having been busy and silent these winter months, we will now continue the first-named and break the silence. We have about recovered our former selves from the "yellow jack" scare, and are proceeding to do the work before us in the Lord's vineyard very hopefully. While confessing that our spiritual state is not what it ought to be, we at the same time rejoice that the Church is awakening to a sense of the need of more active personal work, reenforced by a deep consecration of all to God. Would it not be delightful and inspiring if the Church membership should in its consecration, like the Jews of old, bring something in its hand? This would be in word and in deed, which that faith, "that worketh by love," shall always indorse.

It is becoming more that way here and elsewhere. We see that with others, as with ourselves; the people are planning greater things in the various departments of church work. This is perfectly in keeping with the progress of other things in all departments of active life, but the Church should not, in itself, stoop to these things as an incentive to greater work, but should use them as contributers to the work of God. This; we hope to do when the railroad reaches us in the near future, and brings us new people and gives us new and greater facilities.

Meadville has a daily mail, a telephone system, two newspapers that are clean in their work; generous and progressive business men, that are a compliment to any community; a well-watered, fertile territory, that will bring great wealth to this section as soon as properly developed. Many other good things are in this country, notwithstanding the contrary opinion.

Our Methodism is alert to every opportunity for good, and is preparing herself for the larger advantages that are coming, so as not only to hold her own, but also to lend a helping hand.

We are delighted that Dr. B. F. Jones is to serve us another year as Presiding Elder. He was with us the 3d and 4th of March, at which time he held our First Quarterly Conference. We had a full Board of Stewards, except one who could not be with us. The Board did its part nobly this quarter, which, together with the splendid preaching of Dr. Jones, blessed of the Holy Spirit, and the presentation of an adult person for membership, make us resolve, by God's help, to work and pray more earnestly for the spread of pure and undefiled religion among the children of men.

There are other things we would like to speak of, but as this is already lengthy, will close by wishing you great success with the Advocate, and asking the prayers of the faithful.

W. W. PERRY.

May we not only be delivered from the outward act or word that grieves Thee, but may the very springs of our nature be purified!—F. B. Meyer.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. J. and Mrs. R. E. Willis, Veto, Miss., on Jan. 25, 1906, and plucked therefrom a beautiful flower, little Beatrice, who was 2 yedrs, 10 months and 2 weeks old. She was a lovely child, and carried sunshine wherever she went. It was with grief that we gave her up, and we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family. They knew not that she was very sick until she was dying. Mrs. Willis called to her husband, and before he could reach her to lay her on the bed she had gone to her heavenly home. May the Lord bless the loved ones left behind and bring them all to a better world. God knew what was best, and said: "It is enough, come up higher."

CORA L. STROUD.

Mrs. SALLIE A. DONOHOO was born March 17, 1851, and died Feb. 23, 1906. She joined the M. E. Church, South at Vienna, when a child. She was happily married to Capt. Wm. M. Donohoo, who preceded her to the grave one year. They had born to them two girls and two boys, three of whom are still living. Their youngest son, Will, was caught by a moving train and crushed to death in 1900. Sister Donohoo was a zealous and faithful Christian, and, though "a child of affliction," her faith never faltered, and we feel assured that our loss is her eternal gain. "I know it is hard to give up 'mother,' the dearest name on earth, but when we remember that death is but the setting free of the spirit and the opening of the door to that celestial city whose maker and builder is God, we can but say, 'the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord.'"

J. L. MOORE.

Mrs. T. C. ROBERTS, after a short illness, departed this life July 11, 1906, at her home at Thomasville, Miss. I do not know just how long Sister Roberts had been a Christian. She professed faith in Chirst early in life, and joined the Presbyterian Church. But there was no church of this faith at Thomasville when she moved there, so she joined the Methodist Church July 4, 1886, and lived a faithful, consistent member until the day of her death. While her husband died nearly fifteen years ago, still she leaves, besides many friends and acquaintances, three daughters and a son to mourn their great loss. Sister Roberts leaves a good name and a spotless Christian character. She was a warm friend, a good neighbor, and we all miss her sweet association among us. Death, it is true, has made a vacant chair in the home that cannot be filled. May the Lord comfort her devoted children, and may they so live in this world that some day they may meet her in heaven to spend an endless eternity with her and the angels.

BOLIN GILBERT GREER was born in Columbus, Ga., March 10, 1828; came to Claiborne Parish, La., in 1845, and settled near Colquitt Church, where he peacefully fell asleep Jan. 3, 1906. He was converted to God and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1850. He was a charter member of Colquitt Class, and was lovingly identified with all her interests through all her varied history. His first marriage was to Miss Fannie Daniel. To them were born five children, most of whom are honored members of the Church where they were reared; and one, Crawford, is one of its leading officials and one of the best friends Methodist preachers ever had. There is a large number of grandchildren who call him blest. His second marriage was to Miss Sallie Christian, in 1887, and a true helpmeet she was to him to the end of his life. His home, his heart, his pocket-book were ever open to his pastor, and even when his hearing became so defective that he could not keep track of sermon or song, yet was he always in his place at the regular service of his Church, unless hindered by sickness. He was one of God's noble men, true and "faithful even unto death." May all we who cherish his memory emulate his virtues and meet him at the great white throne. Amen.

J. M. WEEMS.

CHARLES HUNTER MITCHELL was born Jan. 25, 1855, and died at Crenshaw, Miss., Feb. 11, 1906, of pneumonia after a brief illness. His parents were Charles and Mary Mitchell, of precious memory, in De Soto and Panola Counties, Miss. He was the youngest of a family of thirteen children and the last surviving member on earth. The next last one was the wife of the writer, having preceded him to the heavenly rest just one month. He was married to Miss Floyd Jan. 20, 1885, with whom he lived until her death at Longtown, Miss., in July, 1903. There were born unto them six children, five of whom—two sons and three daughters—are yet living to spend their future days on earth as orphans. But if they will be true to their father's God, and follow their father's godly teachings and example, they shall not want for friends or any good thing in this world, and shall join in the family reunion in heaven. Brother Mitchell was always noted as a good man, but for reasons known to himself, he never made an open profession of religion until he was about 33 years of age, when he joined the M. E. Church, South—the Church of his parents—and was ever afterward a loyal supporter of her doctrines, rules and institutions, and much of the time an office-bearer in the same. In all relations and business of life he was a man of integrity of character, affable manners and kindly disposition. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

G. W. BACHMAN.

EDNA WILLIAMS was born Aug. 29, 1892; joined the M. E. Church, South in her 11th year, and was baptized by Brother T. L. Mellen. She died Feb. 1, 1906. Sister Edna was afflicted almost from her earliest infancy to the time of her death, which was quite sudden. She was taken very ill Monday night prior to her death. So severe was her malady that it was seldom that she could speak so as to be understood. No one knew what she suffered during her sickness. While she could not speak, instead of making signs of complaint, almost to the dissolution of her precious soul from its tenement of clay, she was ever humming some favorite song. There were three that she hummed almost constantly when awake: "My name is written there," "We'll work till Jesus comes," and "Walk in the Sunlight." I believe that Sister Edna's name was written in the book of life. She did all the work she could till Jesus came, and was every day walking in the sunlight of her Savior's glory. Sister Edna left a father, mother, several sisters and two brothers to mourn her loss. Let us not weep, loved ones; sweet little Edna has ere this seen with eyes immortal the book of life, where her name is recorded, and is beholding the everlasting sunlight of glory in the sweet by and by, where she will no doubt be waiting and watching at the beautiful gate for loved ones as they are called home one by one. May the Lord help each one of the loved ones to so live that she will not be disappointed or look in vain for their coming, is the prayer of her pastor.

F. A. LANE.

FRED K. UNDERWOOD, of Jeanerette, La., died in Kansas City, Mo., on Feb. 5, 1906. He was the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Underwood. When the telegram bearing the news of the sudden death of Brother Underwood reached here, not only did it bring sorrow to a devoted family, but the whole community was bowed in grief. Mr. and Mrs. Underwood moved to Jeanerette when Fred was a little boy and have made this their home ever since. As a child he possessed a remarkably bright mind, and as he grew from youth into manhood his loving disposition, his thoughtfulness of others, his sweet, gentle ways made for him friends wherever he went. He was always an affectionate, dutiful son, a loving brother and a true and faithful friend. The few who were fortunate enough to be his intimate friends knew that Fred was always interested in the things that concerned them most, though they may seem small to others. He joined the Church when a mere lad, and his place in the Sunday school, prayer meeting, Epworth League and choir was never vacant, when it was possible for him to be there. For a number of years the choir was not complete without his deep, rich bass voice. Not only did those who attended Church and choir practice enjoy hearing him sing, but there are homes here where he loved to go and spend his evenings in sacred music and song, in which there has been left a vacancy that never can be filled. A little less than two years ago he left home and went to Kansas City, where he has been employed as express agent in one of the depots there. About eight months ago he resigned this position to accept a better and more responsible one in the large packing-house of Swift & Co., where he was accidentally struck by an elevator, and almost instantly killed. His remains reached Jeanerette Thursday, the 8th of February, where he was buried that evening at 4:30 o'clock. Letters to his mother from friends in Kansas City show that he was held in the very highest esteem by those who knew him there. Truly it can be said he was loved by all who knew him. He was a young man of fine physique and possessed a very brilliant nature. God called him to be with him on his birthday. He was only lent to us twenty-eight years. Brother Underwood leaves a broken-hearted mother and father and two grief-stricken brothers, with a host of friends, to mourn their loss.

Farewell, dear Fred; thou hast only gone before,
To await our coming to that bright, celestial shore.

we want our pay

But NOT UNTIL YOU SAY, "Here is the dollar; you deserve it," not until we HAVE EARNED IT, not until you are WILLING to send it to us, not until you want to send it to us, not until you are SATISFIED to pay it, not until we HAVE PROVEN TO YOU that we have what we claim, not until VITÆ-ORE HAS DONE FOR YOU WHAT YOU WANT IT TO DO FOR YOU. Until then, you pay us NOTHING. After that, you will be willing to pay, GLAD TO PAY, as hundreds of the readers of this paper, yea even thousands, have been willing and glad to pay. YOU ARE TO BE THE JUDGE. We leave it to you entirely for you to decide.

If you can say that we and Vitae-Ore have earned the dollar, we want our pay, as we say at the top, but not otherwise.

How can you refuse to give this most remarkable of all remarkable remedies—a natural curing and healing mineral ore—a trial on the terms of such a LIBERAL OFFER? If you need medicinal treatment of any kind, if you are sick and ailing, if anyone in your family is ailing, poorly, worn-out, sickly, it is actually a sin and a shame if you do not send for Vitæ-Ore upon the terms of this thirty-day trial offer. Read the offer! Read it again and again! Send for the medicine! Do it today! Each day lost makes a case older, more obstinate, harder, hurts you more, pains you more. YOU DON'T PAY A CENT UNLESS IT BENEFITS YOU!

You are to be the Judge

Read This Liberal Thirty-Day Trial Offer

If You Are Sick we want to send you a $1.00 package of Vitæ-Ore, the great healer from the earth's veins, enough for 30 days' use, postpaid, and we want to send it to you on 30 days' trial. We don't want a penny—we just want you to try it, just want a letter from you asking for it, and will be glad to send it to you. We take absolutely all the risk—we take all chances. You don't risk a penny! All we ask is that you use V.-O. for 30 days and pay us $1.00 if it has helped you, if you are satisfied that it has done you more than $1.00 worth of positive, actual, visible good. Otherwise you pay nothing, we ask nothing, we want nothing. Can you not spare 100 minutes during the next 30 days to try it? Can you not give 5 minutes to write for it, 5 minutes to properly prepare it upon its arrival, and 3 minutes each day for 30 days to use it. That is all it takes. Cannot you give 100 minutes to insure for you new health, new strength, new blood, new force, new energy, vigor, life and happiness? You are to be the judge. We are satisfied with your decision, are perfectly willing to trust to your honor, to your judgment, as to whether or not V.-O. has benefited you. Read what Vitæ-Ore is, and write today for a dollar package on this most liberal trial offer.

From the Earth's Veins to Your Veins.

Vitæ-Ore is an ore-substance—a combination of minerals—mined from the ground, from the Earth's veins. It contains iron, sulphur and magnesium, three properties most essential for the retention of health in the human system, and one package of the ORE, mixed with a quart of water, equals in medicinal strength and curative value nearly 800 gallons of the powerful mineral waters of the globe, drank fresh at the springs. The mineral properties which give to the waters of the world's noted healing springs their curative virtue, come from the rock or MINERAL ORE through which water forces its way to its outlet, only a very small proportion of the medicinal power in the ORE being absorbed by the liquid. Vitæ-Ore is a combination of these medicine-bearing minerals, powdered and pulverized, requiring only the addition of water to make a most remarkable healing and curing draught. Thousands have pronounced it the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Anæmia, Dropsy, Catarrh of Any Part, Liver, Kidney & Bladder Troubles, Stomach & Female Disorders, Nervous Prostration, General Debility.

IF you are sick or suffering from any of the above named disorders, in all of which V.-O. is of special value, don't let another day go by before you send for a trial package.

It Is Different

from anything ever before offered, from other treatments you have used, as is pure milk from chalk and water or the brilliant sunlight from a tallow candle. It flows like life through your veins, pure as it came from the veins of the earth, and acts in a different manner, cures in a different way. It is different from all others and can be differently offered to those in need—on trial, the user to be the judge—a way sellers of medicine dare not duplicate or copy. Send for a dollar package today and test it at our risk. Do not delay, but do it today.

Had Lost the Use of His Limbs.

Bright's Disease and Liver Trouble Completely Cured at Age of 65.

I had Bright's Disease and Liver Trouble and was so weak I could not stand on my feet. I had really entirely lost the use of my limbs. I had already tried every remedy I could hear of and had consulted and treated with all of the best doctors hereabouts, to no avail, so that I had become resigned to what I considered the inevitable, giving up all hopes of a cure. One day a friend advised me to try Vitæ-Ore, calling my attention to the manner in which it was offered on trial. I contended that it would be like all of the rest and do me no good, but this good friend so insisted that I finally sent for a package on trial. The trial package showed a remarkable improvement and I sent for two more making three packages altogether that I have used. This was over one year ago, and although I am now sixty-five years of age, I can truthfully say that I feel as good and healthy, and in fact as young as I did twenty years ago. I can eat anything I want; my kidneys do not trouble me; my liver is acting as it should. My neighbors all ask me what I have been doing to make me look so well and active, and I tell them all the credit belongs to Vitæ-Ore. FRED CURTIS, Swanton, Ohio.

V.-O. WILL DO AS MUCH FOR YOU

as it has done for hundreds of readers of this paper if you will give it a trial. Send for a $1.00 package at our risk. You have nothing to lose but the stamp to answer this advertisement. We want no one's money whom Vitæ-Ore cannot benefit. You are to be the judge! Can anything be more fair? What sensible person, who desires a cure and is willing to pay for it, can hesitate to try Vitæ-Ore on this liberal offer? One package is usually sufficient to cure ordinary cases, two or three for chronic, obstinate cases. We mean just what we say—do just as we agree. Write today for a package at our risk and expense, giving your age and ailments, and mention this paper.

Three in a Family Cured By V.-O.

Read the Following Letter—It Shows Why Vitæ-Ore Can Be Sent Out to Everyone on Our "No Benefit, No Pay" Plan—V.-O. Does the Work—That's Why.

We owe much to Vitæ-Ore, my husband, my brother and myself, and in recommending it to our friends and neighbors we try only to repay a small part of the debt. For many years I suffered with a sore back; it hurt me to bend it, to pick up something from the floor; at times the pain would be so bad I could hardly move. Then Sciatica developed and the misery I suffered was indeed something terrible. I tried every medicine and treatment which I thought would do me any good, but got very little benefit. I was almost without hope of relief when I saw the Vitæ-Ore advertisement, and I procured a trial package only as a last resort. It was offered so fairly that I thought there might be some good in it, and I knew I did not have to pay for it if it did not do some good for me. By the time I had used half of the package I felt that at last I had found the right remedy, and I continued with it until I was sure the benefit was lasting. This was three years ago and I am still cured today. My husband, who has been afflicted with Stomach Trouble, began its use upon seeing what it accomplished in my case, and it produced the same beneficial results for him, doing him more good than all of the medicines he had taken.

I was then so impressed with its wonderful powers that I sent a package to my brother in Manitoba, who had been given up as incurable with Rheumatism and Dropsy, and who, also, had a very bad running sore or ulcer on his leg. Before he had taken the entire package I had sent him, the sore was almost entirely healed and his health began to return. He had not been able to work for years, but after using altogether three packages, his health was so remarkably improved that he was able to return to his regular work. His wife writes me: "We cannot say too much in praise of Vitæ-Ore. It has made a new man of George."

I send my husband's and my own photograph, and am glad to add our testimonials to the long list who say, "Vitæ-Ore has cured me." MRS. EDW. GALBRAITH, Gorrie, Ont., Canada.

A petition has been presented to Congress by the citizens of Lawrence county, Missouri, asking the removal of the seat of government to the Ozarks in Southwest Missouri. The petition is based on "sanitary, economic and other reasons." The other reasons are that much of the alleged crookedness, including "graft," and inefficiency of Congressmen and officials is due to the malarial atmosphere of the District of Columbia. This reminds us of what Brownlow said when he caught his first view of Washington: "I felt like stealing something immediately." Whether the atmosphere of Washington produces that effect or not, the citizens of Missouri ask for the Capital saying: "The people who make the laws and carry into effect the same should be men of clear brain and healthy bodies; and whereas the malarial conditions of the atmosphere at Washington, D. C., are such that the Government officials find it necessary to abandon the Capital several months of the year to avoid the malarial condition; is not a great deal of inefficiency and crookedness of officials at Washington attributable to the malarial condition of the atmosphere at Washington? If so, the seat of government should be removed to a more healthful location, and the Ozarks of southwest Missouri is, beyond a doubt, the most healthy country in all the world."

Much has been said in recent years about the evils of divorce. Too much can not be said, provided the talk results in a plan that will put a stop to the constant grinding of the divorce mill. There is not a court of competent jurisdiction in the whole country, where divorce is allowed at all, that is not more or less burdened at every term with cases of husbands and wives seeking separation. The matter is getting to be a national shame. Good men and women are aroused, and recently an Inter-State Divorce Congress was held in Washington, composed of representatives from forty-three States. The object is to get the people to work in harmony, and secure, as far as possible, uniform divorce laws in all the States. Many are of the opinion that a Federal statute would be better than State laws, but the matter is of such character as the States only can deal with, hence the importance of getting the States to act as a unit. Something should be done at once. Divorces are too easily obtained—the causes for action are too numerous. As the laws now are, if a divorce cannot be obtained in one State, it can in another. A short residence in some States suffices to open the way for separation—often for no other real reason than for the man or woman to marry some one else, though some other cause may be named.

The recent disclosures, as given out by the Investigating Committee of the Legislature of Mississippi, of mismanagement of the penitentiary system, were, doubtless, surprises to the good people of the State, who were resting quietly in the belief that everything was all right. The report embraced the results of investigation of only one of the State farms. What may come to light when the doings at other farms are investigated, no one knows. The particular farm investigated was the hospital farm. To this farm is brought the sick from other State farms for treatment. Generally there are many sick convicts. The Committee found that one of the officers in charge for two years used many of the convicts on his own farm, and from the labor of these sick convicts made large crops of cotton, the proceeds of which he appropriated to his own use. Other irregularities were discovered by which the State has been losing money. The Committee also found that while the inmates of the prison had no complaints to make of personal treatment they were quartered in "mere shacks," uncomfortable, and wholly unfit for human habitation. The Committee's report was a great surprise and created a sensation.

We are in no position to pass judgment on the recent engagement in the Philippines, wherein some six or eight hundred Moros, including men, women and children, were killed, and also about eighteen United States soldiers. That these Moros, semi-savages, composed a band of marauders, that defied all laws for their government, is true, but that this justified the attack, we undertake not to say. As marauders, they robbed their own people as well as set at naught the government of the United States, and something was necessary to put an end to their thieving excursions. An investigation will doubtless be made and all the facts bearing on the case will come to light, and be given to the public. In the meantime let us suspend judgment. When there is such a wide difference of opinion on the matter, we can afford to wait, even on the slow progress of a Congressional investigation, if by waiting we can get at the truth, and arrive at a just conclusion.

Missionaries in China are receiving just now more than usual attention, and advice from certain quarters to mission boards is given freely and without price. It has been discovered suddenly that missionaries in China are at the bottom of the present trouble in that country. And the statement is so made as to make it appear that all the missionaries, without exception, are to blame. One writer, evidently an enemy to the missionary principle and policy, roundly asserts that such is the reverence of the Chinese for their religion that they cannot tolerate a missionary whose purpose it is to turn them from the religion of their fathers, and hence their hatred. In the opinion of this man, missionary work is an insult to an intelligent Chinaman. Now, it may be that a missionary will occasionally forget himself and act indiscreetly in local affairs. If reports are true, such is the case. As to the recent outbreak, during which several missionaries lost their lives, it is said that "a Chinese magistrate, disputing a point of property possession with some Catholic priests, became so incensed at their demands and aggressiveness that he committed suicide (not an unusual mode of expressing dissent or disapprobation), whereupon six French priests and two English missionaries were killed." The London Times says: "It is impossible to deny that the intervention of missionaries in Chinese local politics and their protection of native converts is one of the chief causes of the anti-foreign attitude of the Chinese officials. Under existing conditions the present case inevitably will increase the hostility to foreigners." If it is true that missionaries interfere in local politics, and protect their converts when arrested for supposed misdoing, it is but natural that the Chinese resent it. But when the enemies of the missionaries are so sure that the missionaries are the sole cause of trouble, and take special delight in telling it, they should be honest enough to specify what missionaries cause the trouble in any given locality. Missionaries have operated long enough in China to establish the reputation of being quiet, orderly and peace-loving, and lovers of men. It is too late to charge all outbreaks in China to the missionaries. When the recent trouble began, it showed itself in the boycott of American goods. That which instigated the boycott was the Chinese Exclusion Act of our government. The Chinese were greatly excited and naturally showed their hatred of all white people.

ARE INFANTS BORN IN SUCH STATE AS TO NEED REDEMPTION?

Much appeared in the Advocate some time ago on the state of infants. Some positions were taken and some explanations of Scripture given that seemed to me to be erroneous.

As to infants being in a justified state, or innocent, I reckon most Methodists are agreed. But the question for us to consider is, Are they depraved? Do they need regeneration?

These are not questions of small importance. The paucity and character of conversions among us may be attributed perhaps to errors in this part of our theology. Without attempting to review systematically the writers whose articles have appeared in the Advocate, (not having the copies in which they were published at hand) I will briefly give some reasons for answering the question raised affirmatively. That children are born in a depraved state we have a very strong presumptive proof, in that the doctrine has been taught almost universally by the church from the earliest period of its existence down to the present time.

We have another proof of the inhuman depravity of the race in its universal corruption evidenced by profane history, and by the Scriptures. Paul tells us that he had proved both Jews and Gentiles to be under sin. "For we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles that they are all under sin." "They are all gone out of the way." (Rom. 3:9-12.) If we were born in such state as is brought about by regeneration, why should there be such universal apostasy, as is indicated by the above quotations? Let us collate with these Scriptures another utterance of Paul's, as we will find it exegetical somewhat of the language already quoted. "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners. (Rom. 5:19.) Several of the writers referred to at the beginning of this article defined sin as the "willful transgression of law" (I quote from memory.) I regard this definition as sound, but I should certainly be glad to see from the writers referred to, or from anyone else who rejects the doctrine of inherent depravity, an explanation of the last Scripture cited, in the light of the above definition of sin. Certainly Adam's posterity did not wilfully transgress when Adam transgressed. The idea that Adam's transgression is the willful transgression of men to-day is to my mind full of absurdity. Could a man wilfully transgress a law thousands of years before he had an existence? I can see very easily how Adam corrupted his own nature by sin, and this corruption by Divine sentence became hereditary; but I cannot see how men can sin in Adam. If it is true that man does no inherit depravity from Adam, then in no sense can it be said that by the disobedience of one many were made sinners. If the Gospel so operates as to do away with all the moral effect of the disobedience of Adam, so far as his posterity is concerned, then the language of the Apostle is not true; for, according to that theory no one is, or can be, made a sinner by the disobedience of Adam.

David, in his confession, said: "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity and in sin did my mother conceive me." (Ps. 51:5.) If he was simply confessing his mother's wickedness, it is difficult to conceive of the motive that prompted him to make such confession. Depravity, not being hereditary either from his mother or Adam, could not have been plead in extenuation of his guilt. I do not remember any precept or example in God's Word requiring us to confess the sins of a parent unless such confession be made in the interests of justice. Certainly David's mother was not on trial, and an irrelevant confession of her wickedness is, to my mind, hardly compatible with one of the Ten Commandments, which says: "Honor thy father and thy mother." (Ex. 20:12.)

But, accepting the doctrine of inherent depravity, the explanation of David's confession, with quite a number of parallel Scriptures, becomes easy. David was pleading the corruption and depravity of his nature in extenuation of his sin, and that this corruption might be removed by the operation of the Holy Spirit. (See verse 10.)

Again, in speaking of the new birth, why did our Lord use language so comprehensive as the following: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (John 3:3.)

If it be said that our Lord's language is only applicable to adults who have corrupted themselves by the volition of their own wills, it may be asked, in reply, why is it that all adults have thus corrupted themselves? If infants are in the same state in which regeneration places adults, why the universal apostasy, in all times and places, making the requirement universal?

But our Lord does not attribute the necessity of the new birth to apostasy, but to the state in which the natural birth places us: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." The word "flesh" as used by Paul evidently means either the unrenewed or natural condition of man, or certain powers belonging to the physical man. Perhaps it would be more correct to say certain attributes of the physical man, which are not eradicated or changed by regeneration. In the first sense he said: "They that are in the flesh cannot please God." (Rom. 8:8.) "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." (Rom. 7:8.) In the second sense he says: "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." (Rom. 8:13.)

Our Lord must have used the word as used by Paul in the first sense given above, for as used in the second sense it does not indicate a condition making regeneration necessary, as this condition is common to all God's people in this world and is referred to by Paul when he says: "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection." (I Cor. 9:27.)

Then the word "flesh" as used by our Lord, according to the Pauline usage, means a state in which it is impossible to please God, and as used by Christ to Nicodemus indicates a state that necessitates regeneration in order to a conscious entrance into the kingdom of God.

I have heard it urged that this doctrine is Calvinistic. I think that is a mistake, as it cannot be charged with any objectionable feature of Calvinism. Calvinism makes God a respecter of persons. The doctrine of inherent depravity does not. All are depraved by the sin of one. All are provided for by the death of one. No partiality in this. No one need be lost. Some would have us believe that our Lord's teachings (Matt. 18:3, 10, 13; Mark 10:14, and Luke 18:16) are against the doctrine for which I have been contending. A fair interpretation of these Scriptures will show that this is not so.

Circumstances under which our Lord taught should be considered. His disciples had very false conceptions concerning his kingdom. They were thinking about places of honor and power for themselves in this kingdom, and supposed themselves fitted for such places. It was against these erroneous conceptions that these teachings were mainly leveled. The disciples were wanting in humility: "Verily I say unto you whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in nowise enter therein." Luke 18:17. The idea here is that one must be so much like a little child as to be humble and teachable in order to gain entrance into the kingdom of God. The new birth brings one into this kingdom. It is the doorway, but humility is one of the conditions precedent to entering this door.

Our Lord used children to illustrate this condition; not to illustrate the cleansing work of regeneration.

THE MOTION SECONDED.

In a recent issue of this Advocate, Mr. John H. Sherard suggested a memorial to the ensuing General Conference. This suggested memorial was so full of sound wisdom, strong horse sense, and practical church statesmanship, that, after waiting a little while to give others a chance to speak, I feel moved to raise my humble voice in approval.

Several problems are now confronting and vexing our Church which arise solely from hasty and ill-advised efforts in establishing much-needed institutions. Small institutions are multiplied. Resources are divided. Forces are scattered. Patronage is spread thinly over a number of small, struggling institutions. What might be accomplishing a great deal concentrated in a few strong centers is not accomplishing so much, by a great deal, by the present system. But the institutions have become crystallized, and to attempt concentration now might be fraught with more danger to the cause than to keep up the struggle to support a number of small institutions in a territory that is adapted to the support of one good, strong one.

Some time ago a gentleman at the head of such an institution said in conversation with the writer, "If instead of two or three such institutions as this, Methodism, in the same territory, were concentrating her strength in one strong plant, centrally located, and commanding the whole territory now parceled out among several small institutions, we would have an institution that no denomination in the same territory could compete with."

How much stronger is our educational work for young men, centered in Millsaps College, than it would be if it were divided between colleges established in each of the Mississippi Conferences?

In the very nature of things a hospital demands on a larger territory for support than does a college. It is doubtful if a hospital located anywhere in Mississippi and supported by the Methodists of this State alone, as a hospital located in Mississippi must needs be, could grow and develop in many years into a representative institution, such as a hospital established for the same territory in Memphis or New Orleans might easily become in a short time. Steps are being taken in Memphis to establish a hospital there, and a distinctly Mississippi hospital would serve very little purpose except to weaken the hospital in that city. The great hospitals now established in Memphis depend on Mississippi as well as on Tennessee and Arkansas, for support. A canvass of the wards of St. Joseph's hospital will show how very true this is. A hospital established by any denomination in the same field ought to be located so as to command the same patronage.

There is much argument in consideration of the questions relating to the securing of professional skill. While our local physicians are a body of men of which any State or section would be proud, no one will deny that a hospital located in a large center can command the best obtainable medical skill. Specialists in any line are to be sought in the centers—men whose reputation would lend prestige to any institution for which their services were secured.

Southern Methodism can establish a chain of five or six great hospitals that will be creditable to our Church, and able to do the greatest good for humanity. When we have done this, if institutions more localized are needed, let them be established as branches of the parent institutions. Let us not make the mistake of attempting to enterprise provincial institutions that will set a precedent which will tie us down to a great many little struggling hospitals in territories that would adequately support a great and worthy enterprise.

WALTER G. HARBIN.

A LONG TIME, OR FORTY YEARS AGO.

It was in 1866, in the month of September, when, assisted by Rev. W. W. Hurst and a local preacher by the name of John Williams, one of the best men I ever knew, I held a meeting of several days at Santee Church, in Covington county, Miss., ten miles west of Williamsburg. The membership of the church at that time was quite small, only 22 names on the church roll. Extensive preparations had been made, much earnest praying had been done on the part of a few elect women and others. Among the faithful church workers were Sisters Wm. Blount, H. A. McLeod, Henry Bullock, Jessee Dun and a grand old man by the name of William Worthy. If ever a man was justly entitled to such a name, William Worthy was. He was worthy to be called a child of God. It was a treat to hear him pray for penitent sinners, who were earnestly seeking God in the forgiveness of sins. How often have I listened with intent interest and responded with hearty "amen," while he, with a heart overflowing with love to God and man, grasped the precious promises of God, held on with faith that takes no denial, until the saving power of God came down, and souls were saved. What a help he was to his pastor. He lived to a good old age, then went home to rest.

The meeting alluded to above lasted ten days, and was largely attended from first to last. Nearly one hundred souls were saved and added to the church. Among the members saved, or reclaimed, was one John P. Laughlin, who was a man of fifty years or more. He had been a local Methodist preacher in his younger days, but in an unguarded moment yielded to temptation, fell into sin, was subsequently expelled from the church. For ten years he lived in sin, during which time he could not be prevailed upon to go to church. For nearly two years I had been his pastor. I found him to be a noble, big-hearted man, but in a fearfully backslidden state. I tried to prevail upon him to go to church, but failed. He was unhappy—restless—miserable.

"What peaceful hours I once enjoyed,
How sweet their memories still;
But they have left an aching void
The world can never fill."

So said the poet. So it is. He said to me on one occasion, "You don't know anything about the misery of a backslider." On the third day of the meeting, to the great joy of many of us, Mr. Laughlin made his way to the church, listened attentively to the Word, but would leave the house when penitents were called for. On one occasion the power of God came down so overwhelmingly, the excitement was so great, the house was packed with people, which made it difficult for him to reach the door, and he was so intent on getting away, he leaped out through a window and ran for the woods.

At the close of the morning service the sixth day of the meeting I stated, as we had a class of 25 to baptize and receive, we would not have preaching that afternoon, but would hold an altar service after receiving the new members. After dinner I took my usual walk for prayer and meditation. On my return I was met by my friend, Mr. Laughlin, who seemed anxious about something. He said to me, "Parson, I know you know your business. You are managing this meeting well. I just want to suggest, you invite the Christians to give the young converts the hand of fellowship when you receive them." I told him such was my custom, and I would be delighted to extend to him the hand of fellowship. He wept, dropped his head and said, "you have my hand now if you want it." I grasped his hand; we wept and rejoiced together. "The dead was alive, the lost was found." My prayer was answered. How my poor heart leaped with joy within me. From that time until the Lord took him up higher, Brother Laughlin was one of the best, most useful members of the old Santee Church. A better friend I seldom, if ever, have had than I had in the person of J. P. Laughlin. When I get to heaven I expect to strike hands with this good brother, and think and speak of the time when God used me as an humble instrument in his hand in bringing one of his wandering sheep back to the fold of Christ. While my heart yearns over dying men in general, I deeply feel for those who have lost their hold on God on account of sin, and are now drifting, drifting God only knows where. A good woman, some ten or twelve years ago, who had lost her hold on God, said to my good wife, "Sister Lewis, I feel like I am just drifting, drifting, drifting. I want you to kneel down and pray for me." The same day in a prayer meeting held in her home, conducted by me, she got very happy, and shouted aloud the praises of God. Let us look carefully, prayerfully and earnestly after wanderers from God.

H. P. LEWIS.

Vicksburg, Miss.

A QUESTION.

Are large presiding elders' districts best to develop the Church and save souls?

We think not. There is but one condition that justifies a large number of appointments in a presiding elder's district, and that is, compactness. Where a district is connected with a city of a dozen or more pastoral charges, as Atlanta, Ga., which has in its limits sixteen or seventeen, it may be that a presiding elder can sustain himself as a preacher and maintain his office by close touch with the pastors and their people. But I don't believe it is best in a Conference like ours—made up of towns, villages and country charges. We scarcely have a charge in our bounds that does not need all that a presiding elder stands for as a preacher, outside of his work as an overseer. The pastor himself needs whatever of inspiration can come from his sermons; also he needs his backing up in the various church enterprises.

The people are anxious to have a Sabbath connected with their quarterly meeting. Then they think both the quarterly meeting and the presiding elder stands for something. If the Sabbath is not connected with their quarterly meeting, they are disappointed, and a general setback in their expectation follows.

A district ought to have just as few mid-week appointments as possible, for, as a rule, they are failures, as far as inspiring and building up the church is concerned. I have been a pastor since 1874 and taken my ratio of mid-week quarterly meetings, and not half a dozen of them were satisfactory. Why? because of their untimeliness and the few who attended. The people who needed the services most were not there, and most of the time the presiding elder preached as if under pressure from the meagerness of his congregation. Of course, we went through the routine of conference business, and returned wishing a Sabbath had been included.

I believe I speak the experience of half the preachers in this Conference when I say they are struck with a sense of sadness and regret when they see their quarterly meetings announced for mid-week, especially if they have their work on their hearts (and I take it that they do), and the same is felt by their people, because they feel that the occasion will be almost nil.

I think we made a step backward at our last Conference by absorbing the Holly Springs District. Brother Countiss says "the historic Holly Springs District was absorbed and the Conference is short one beloved." If we were short one more we should only have the greater love for the remaining seven. I suppose that love would be predicated upon a commercial principle. The scarcer certain articles of merchandise are the more valuable they are. But our love for the men who are filling the stations of our Church, which are absolutely necessary to her perpetuity and success, is not measured by the few in number, but is boundless to all men who are co-workers with us in saving souls.

I am not in sympathy with Brother Countiss' idea of seven districts for our Conference, but ten districts more would look more like intensive work. The three districts which absorbed the Holly Springs District now stand in charges 18, 18 and 24—a plenty for four districts, and, ordinarily, have eight charges to spare, unless it is intended to eliminate preaching as an important part of the city. [illegible] presiding elders I have been under said to [illegible] district was cut from eighteen [illegible] appointments, his opportunity for [illegible] the district would be so increased that in a short time his support would be just as good as from the eighteen appointments, and that other interests of the Church would go up in like ratio. Then a Sabbath could be included in each quarterly meeting.

But someone says that the salaries of the presiding elders were too small before, and that was the reason for doing away with the district. Certainly not. That would come with poor grace in the face of the fact that half of the pastors on those districts did not receive more than half as much in support as their respective presiding elders, their families averaging with the families of their elders. I know our presiding elders must be paid more than the average pastor, because their expenses in traveling are greater, and I am anxious for them to be well supported, but we should not let that be a reason for breaking up a district.

If merging is the plan for success, we had better try it on some of our poor circuits. But that will not work; our people have some appreciation of values for services rendered, and when we give one of our churches a week-day appointment, instead of a Sabbath, as heretofore, they will reduce the support, and other interests of the Church will decline likewise.

But give a church two Sundays in a month which has been having but one, and she will improve in the support, and also improve in all other interests of the church proportionately. Why? Because they have their pastor's time and encouragement more, and are brought under greater obligations to him, and so do the people feel towards their presiding elders, who give them the full time of a quarterly meeting, with a Sabbath included.

If intensive work commends itself anywhere, it certainly does in church work. Take the Corinth District, with twenty-four appointments. At least forty-five quarterly meetings have to be held in mid-week, or without a full Sabbath. No presiding elder can accomplish at these forty-five appointments the amount of good he could if a Sabbath was connected. He feels it, and regrets it, but he cannot help himself; these appointments are given him, and he has to mince out his time as the circumstances demand. We do not find fault with them; they cannot do better, unless they could be at two places at the same time.

It does seem to me, if there ever was a time to swallow up the Holly Springs District, that time has passed, since an unparalleled wave of prosperity is upon our country, every town and village reviving, new business enterprises of all kinds being established, more banks set up in the last three years in our Conference bounds than in fifteen before; all outlying lands are being brought under cultivation again, and the tide of emigration, that once moved West, has stopped, and the people are settling down on the land of their birth, and others are coming in. Certainly, the time looks propitious for building up the "historic Holly Springs District."

Finally, it is not always best to change the affinity of a people. Many times it leaves a parsonage vacant, which has cost much anxiety, sacrifice and labor of a church-loving people, and its vacation is taken as poor proof of appreciation. I know of affinities disturbed which, I fear, will not be gotten over during this generation. Much caution and forethought should be exercised before radical changes are made.

This has been written in the interest of the Church, as I conceive it, and that the presiding eldership may be maintained in the hearts of the people who make up our great Church. No man approves of the presiding eldership more than I do, or loves presiding elders more, as men, than I do.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Wesson, Miss., March 14, 1906.

We, the Board of Stewards of the Wesson M. E. Church, South, are surprised and grieved to learn that there is an idea among some of the preachers and laymen of our Church that does great injustice to the character and standing of the Rev. I. L. Peebles, who so ably and faithfully served us as pastor for four years. In justice to him and his nice family, we desire to make statements through the Advocate, expressing our high appreciation of him as a pastor, as a true servant of God, and as an untiring worker in his cause. We have never seen his equal as a pastor, or as a friend of and minister to the poor. He is an able scholar, and has few equals as a teacher of God's Word. Should the Bishop be inspired to send him back to us, we would be glad to have him. We consider any church or people exceedingly fortunate who are blessed with his services. All who follow his teachings and example are sure to be in the footsteps of our blessed Jesus, for every step he takes is with an intense desire to be more like Him, and to be with Him, and to take everybody with him to heaven. He does his whole duty with an eye single to the glory of God and the salvation of souls. To know him better is to love him more, and be led closer to God.

We cordially commend him to the Church, and hope for him the fullest co-operation, sympathy and love of our ministry.

McComb City, Miss., March 15, 1906.

This is to certify that I know Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, who at one time was pastor of McComb City M. E. Church, South. I look upon him as one of the best men I ever knew, and can say unhesitatingly that he was loved by the members of the Church, as well as the citizens generally. He was attentive to the sick and distressed, and showed every kindness to all persons. He is a very hard worker in the Lord's vineyard, and I feel sure that his character is above reproach and is unstained. Cheerfully and spiritually given.

CORINTH DISTRICT.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I was not able to attend the Annual Conference session at Grenada. Notwithstanding the fact that I was at the time sick with a stubborn case of pleuro-pneumonia, Bishop Hoss saw fit to continue me on the Corinth District. This was a great kindness to me, for any move at that time would have been a hard one on myself and family. Of the twenty-four Quarterly Conference appointments, I have been able to fill fifteen, other brethren kindly filling the remaining nine. I have been regularly at work for some time, though I have not yet fully regained my strength. I have had some difficulty in finding pastors for the four charges left to be supplied. All are filled now, except one, and arrangements are made for that after April 1. Besides filling these, some other changes had to be made. The appointments, which are not indicated in the published minutes, are as follows: Burnsville Mission, W. W. Edge; Iuka Mission, A. C. Anderson; Blue Springs Mission, J. D. Boggs; Bethel Mission, Luther Brown; Burnt Mills Mission, L. H. White; Wheeler Circuit, M. Y. Burns; Mooresville and Saltillo, O. W. Bradley. Brother Bradley will take charge April 1. Reports at First Quarterly Conferences indicate a good spirit among preachers and people. This year's work ought to be an improvement over any year in the past. With the blessings of God upon us, I believe it shall be so.

IF I WERE A GIRL.

If I were a girl I would have an aim in life. I would set my mark high, and would not fall short of it. The adage, "Where there's a will there's a way," is as true as steel. I would keep good company or none at all. I would read good books, such as would enlarge my mind and fit me for a higher life. I would be truthful in my actions as well as in my words. I would keep a diary, for it might be useful, as well as pleasure in later years. I would show people that being a girl did not keep me from possessing good common sense and a sound mind. I would never let one of the opposite sex overreach me in climbing the "Hill of Science." I would learn the law of kindness. I would continually seek the companionship of the three graces: Perseverance, Forbearance and Endurance, until I became familiar with each of them, for a woman having these for armour is well equipped for the battle of life. I would wear the dress of modesty with a neat fitting cap of discretion. I would lace shoes of caution upon my feet, so I might walk the "imperial highway" with a womanly dignity. I would encase my hands in gloves of good works, sewed with threads of deftness. Over these I would throw a wrap of fatherly protection.—Selected.

A METHODIST HOSPITAL.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I hope the memorial published by you in the Advocate a few weeks ago meets with your approval and that you will use your influence at the General Conference to get it endorsed. We are much in need of a first-class hospital in North Mississippi or at some convenient point. Our people all go to Memphis for treatment and have to patronize a hospital of another church. Methodism ought to care for her own poor and suffering.

I believe a hospital located at Memphis and supported by the Arkansas Conference, Memphis and North Mississippi will meet with great approval.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society has been agitating the subject all the year. We want to create a sentiment in favor of hospital work, and our women are much interested and will gladly do all they can to help in this enterprise.

Our Annual Meeting will convene at Kosciusko, May 19-23. We could plan the work for the hospital course so much more intelligently if we knew the decision of the General Conference.

If this matter can be pushed by the new delegates from this Conference and a decision made by that time it will be a great favor to us.

I want to thank you for the kindness shown our Home Mission Society by publishing the articles of the Press Superintendent. We will certainly appreciate a continuation of this kindness in the future. There are often matters of importance we wish brought to the attention of the Church and can best reach the people through your columns. Very sincerely,

MRS. C. L. WRENN,
Pres. N. Miss. H. M. Society.
Gunnison, Miss.

The Woman's Board of Home Missions of the M. E. Church, South, will hold its eighth annual meeting in Central Church, Asheville, N. C., April 26-May 2. The opening service of the session will be held on Thursday Evening, April 26.

The names of all members of the Board and of the visitors to this meeting should be sent promptly to Mrs. W. W. Barnard, 137 Chestnut street, Asheville, N. C. Visitors coming to attend the session of the Board will be cordially entertained by the ladies of Asheville.

Reduced railroad rates will, if possible, be secured from all points, and the terms of reduction announced later.

MISS BELLE H. BENNETT, Pres.

CHILDREN'S DAY PROGRAMMES.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Please give notice that I have ordered 100 Children's Day programmes and 20 supplements sent to each pastor in the Mississippi Conference. I don't know how soon these programmes will be ready for distribution, but have asked the Publishing House to send them out at the earliest practicable moment. There has been some complaint in years past because the programmes were sent out so late. I am unable to locate the blame, as it is in Nashville, but will try to get them into the hands of the pastors and superintendents as soon as possible.

If any pastor thinks he can use more than 100 programmes, I will be glad if they would notify me at once.

SOME SCRIPTURE MEDITATIONS.

In these days of policy, general averaging and worldly conformity, it may be well to stop awhile, and inquire as to their ability to stand the first test: I Cor. 3:13: "And the fire shall try even man's work of what sort it is." Opinions, creeds, theories, are not without value, even when erroneous, as they provoke controversy, and the possible discovery of truth.

Gold in the rough, often requires powerful crushing of a quartz mill, the corroding action of acids, the white heat of the furnace before the Government can stamp it as the coin of the realm. Pilate's question, "What is truth?" yet reverberates against the mountain crags of earth. And the Nazarine's answer, "I am the truth," alone satisfies.

In late searchings of God's love letter, the Bible, a number of texts have impressed my mind as worthy of meditation, incorporation and assimilation, in order to become partakers of the Divine nature to that degree that enemies must confess that we possess Christ's spirit and likeness. Turn to II Chronicles, 15th chapter, 2d verse, and you will read:

"The Lord is with you, while ye be with Him; and if ye seek Him, He will be found of you; but if ye forsake Him, He will forsake you."

Does not the Scripture plainly teach "the free moral agency of man?" That a retention of the Divine presence hinges upon our loyalty to Him, that acceptable service must be actuated more by love than fear? There can be no doubt of the fact, that the Methodism of the Wesleys was a potent factor in the redemption of souls, and the purifying of religious worship, (operating upon a small capital of men and money), and contributed greatly to the Reformation and establishment of England as a world-power. But twentieth century Methodism will do well not to trust in our goodly heritage for the Divine blessing, unless our record of numbers, wealth, culture, education, consecration and sanctification produces results of righteousness commensurate with the talents imparted.

The ark of God, famous for its wonderful deliverances when possessed by a Holy Israel, became the property of Philistines, in the hands of the backslidden priests, Hophin and Phinehas, who tried to force God's blessing upon Israel by the use of a casket emptied of its jewels.

The Israel of Christ's day smiled when the homeless, despised Nazarene stood upon the mount, with face turned towards the Holy City, and said: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."

Did not the golden-capped dome of the temple glisten in the next few days' sun as bright as the day it was unveiled? See the smoking sacrificial fires, the waving of incense, the prostrate forms of adoring multitudes. But, hark! the same voice is heard—now upon Mount Calvary: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "And, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost," and behold "the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom." Henceforth Israel's banners must have stamped upon them the single word, "Ichabod," God is with us while we are with him. If we seek him, he will be found of us. If we forsake him, he will forsake us.

Turn, now, to verses 7, 8 and 9 of the same chapter—II Chronicles, xv: "For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth, to show himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him." Here God's personal supervision of each soul is taught, with a blessing, when the heart is found perfect toward him.

Many thousands of adult men and women followed Moses in Israel's migration from Egypt; but only two of that number, Caleb and Joshua, were rewarded with inheritance in Canaan.

Several times it is recorded of Caleb, "He wholly followed the Lord." They possessed the undivided heart. In them was enthroned the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The majority report of the ten spies, the rage of the incensed multitude threatening death by stoning, failed to intimidate or change Caleb and Joshua in their minority report, but affirmed, "If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this land and give it to us." They had heard Moses' command, "Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God."

Jeremiah affirmed the same precept when he wrote, "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully" (marginal reading is negligently.)

Do you shrink from the word "perfect," as from an impossibility? Then accept the form in which Christ puts it: "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thine heart, soul, mind, strength, and thy neighbor as thyself." Our righteousness is not to equal, but exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees. God's eye does not see and bless the Church as a whole until the individual members have hearts perfect before him. Brother, sister, "is thy heart right with God?"

The Prophet Joel, 2d chapter, 15th and 16th verses, sends forth this trumpet blast, that if heeded will send some nervous preachers to the sanitarium: "Blow, ye, the trumpet in Zion; sanctify a fast; call a solemn assembly; gather the people; sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, (and listen) "and those that suck the breast," etc. What a rebuke this is to the worshiping congregations of the present era! Where are the children of Methodists, much less nursing infants, when God's minister reads and expounds God's Word?

I have serious doubts about the propriety of kitchens and feasting-rooms for adults "in the up-to-date church" edifice, but I honestly believe that the nursery annex would be filled with Jesus and the angels every time it was occupied by the babies of our tired, lonely, soul-starved mothers, who for months and years of their lives are kept by fashion's edict at home.

Did I hear some one say, "Pshaw! Joel belonged to a former dispensation; we live in the Gospel dispensation, and God demands of worshippers an exercise of faith."

Well, let me ask, Did Christ rebuke Joel for his concern about the baby auditors in his memorable audience given to some Hebrew mothers? "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In this matter of religious education the idolators of China put us to shame, if what I have been told is true. As soon after the birth of a child, and it is possible for the mother to walk to an idol temple, she takes with her the new babe; its knees are bared and bent; an incense stick is placed within the tiny hand, then lighted, and, by mother's help, lifted up and rigidly held until the stick is consumed. Such infants make adults, exceedingly difficult to accept a new faith and mode of worship.

Joel knew what he was talking about, and when you erect your new church edifice don't fail to provide for "those that suck the breast."

R. B. DOWNER.

IN THE "BORDER LAND."

Dear Brother Boswell: I am in the "border land," where multitudinous religious creeds and fine mules thrive. Indeed, the "Missouri mule" is famous over the world, having done military service in the Transvaal and other foreign countries. Brother Hill, the Presiding Elder of this district (Carthage), says "the land just north of here grows the finest mules in the world." The large white population of this State is divided and subdivided into many religious beliefs. The Southwest Missouri Conference, with a membership of 32,147, represents two or three times the white population as that represented by the 44,568 (figures for 1904) members of the Mississippi Conference. The reader will understand, however, that the figures given do not, by a great number, represent all the Methodists in this border land, where, in some places, the M. E. Church is as strong as the M. E. Church, South.

I hear the question of federation discussed more here than elsewhere—perhaps because the people here feel more sensibly the need of it. But what about federation? Will there ever be a union, fraternal or organic? Not until sectional clamor shall cease.

I conceive of a course of action open to some of our brethren, especially those of the North, that will be expeditious in bringing about this great desideratum, i.e., let those brethren abide by the deliberations of the Cape May Commission, which ratified the virtual agreement of the General Conference of 1844 to a mutual division, and cease to cry "secession," "come back to the old church," etc.

The M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, are neither one the "old church," but are both branches of the old church—one the Northern and the other the Southern branch, regardless of any appellation that may be acknowledged or withheld.

There must be a mutual coming together as brother to brother, with such a sense of the glory of godly union that will throw all sectional differences into deep oblivion. Then will the "meddlers with strife" cease, and the billows of joy and glory roll over Zion's bosom, so long marred by the chaffing seas of contention. There is no question but that a genuine, heart-felt union or federation would result in the return of much old-time evangelical power and glory.

God only knows how much has been lost by sectional strife. Let us, as Methodists, "dwell together in unity" that God may "command the blessing upon us forevermore."

"THUMBS!"

"Sorry, my lad, but you won't suit!"

Philip Dalton, with an air of reluctance, left the desk of the venerable merchant to make way for the next of a number of applicants, all of whom were eager for the coveted position.

"Won't suit!" he echoed, as, in passing out through the general office, he was confronted by a large mirror. "A bit of a farce, too," he muttered, as he recollected one clause of the advertisement: "Applicants must be of respectable appearance."

The bump of self-esteem was by no means undeveloped in Phil Dalton, and he drew himself up to his full height as he chuckled: "'Respectable appearance,' eh?" at the same time taking in a full survey of his dignified form, which, from the carefully parted hair to the highly-polished footwear, proclaimed him every inch a gentleman.

"My appearance is not at fault, certainly; What's the trouble, then?" Mr. MacKinnon complimented my fine penmanship, so that I passed muster in that line."

Just then he heard the words, "You'll suit!" and gave a quick glance in the direction of the private office. "Humph! Old Mac's evidently easily pleased, after all. That chap looks about as green as they grow—there's country stamped all over him. He'd be better employed, seems to me, in a cabbage patch than as invoice clerk here," and with a sullen expression and dejected air he walked out of the office.

Philip Dalton had set his heart upon the situation in question, and his disappointment did not in any way mellow his temper. In fact, his good humor diminished to such a degree that his friends scarcely recognized him as he strolled homeward, so curt were his replies to their greetings.

He was half-way home when Dr. Seymour's buggy drew up, and a cheerful voice said: "That you, Phil? Jump in, my lad! I'm just bound in your direction." Phil reluctantly accepted the offer, then regretted it when he perceived that the doctor was making a careful diagnosis of his mental state.

"Phil, my boy, what's up? You've evidently been in Dumpsland today."

Phil tried in vain to bluff the question; but, noticing the doctor's face wore an expression of the kindest interest and sympathy, he told his trouble. Then he looked the doctor full in the face:

"See here, Doc, do you see anything wrong with me, that would prejudice that old fellow against me? I want the truth, mind—point blank."

"And won't be offended to hear it?" asked the doctor, earnestly.

"Not a bit! He's a sort of old woman with lots of whims, I fancy."

Dr. Seymour paid no attention to the last utterance of his companion, but said, abstractedly, as if to himself: "Thumbs!"

"Thumbs?" repeated Phil in a bewildered tone.

"Yes, thumbs. See here," and the doctor took Phil's right hand as an illustration of the little sermon he was about to deliver.

"Do you think, Phil, that Mr. McKinnon, or any other man of common sense, would prefer to employ a young man who is addicted to the cigarette habit? All the polished manners and good clothes in the world would not make up for lack of moral force. See that thumb? It's positively brown! The left is not quite so bad, but bad enough. That's what nicotine does, my dear fellow, and if you don't stop the habit, it will stop you. I know what I am talking about. You know that a watch that is not properly cared for wears out before one that is treated well. No man, if he has a grain of sense, wants a clerk whose brains are clouded with cigarette smoking. Only last week I was called in to see a young fellow, about your age, who was a victim to the habit, in the last stages. I could do nothing for him—he died from the poison. That's what you're coming to. It's plain speaking, but I'm in duty-bound to tell you."

"What!" gasped Philip. "Is that the brilliant future you predict for me?"

"It certainly is, if you keep on at this rate, young man. Better make a right-about-turn now, before it is too late."

Dr. Seymour's concern for his young friend was so great that he drove fully a mile further than necessary in order for time to administer this ample dose of advice and to secure Phil's promise to make a start in the right direction.

It was a very different Philip Dalton who entered Mr. McKinnon's office a year later and expressed a wish to see that gentleman. He was soon ushered into his presence.

"It seems to me I recollect your face," said Mr. McKinnon, rising.

"You certainly should do so," replied Philip, pleasantly. "You gave me a start in life."

"Gave you a start in life?"

"Yes, sir, when you sent me about my business a year ago."

"How's that? I have no recollection."

"Don't you remember? I'm the first young fellow you refused, when you were receiving applications for an invoice clerk."

"Well, to be sure! But I fail to see why you are indebted to me since I didn't employ you."

"If you had employed me," remonstrated Philip, "I might not be here now. I would probably have kept along in the same old way and succumbed to bad habits. Tell me, sir, did my thumbs prejudice you against me?"

"They did. Why?" asked the merchant, in a tone of agreeable surprise.

Then Phillip related the whole story of his disappointment, his chat with the doctor, and his resolution.

"And you have kept it?" said the merchant in a pleased tone.

"Indeed I have, sir! I swore off the habit there and then."

"What are you doing now, if I may ask?"

"I received a good position a month or so ago with the Imperial Banking Company."

"Indeed! I am delighted to hear it," said the merchant, as he gave the young man's hand a warm grasp, "and I wish you every success."

"Thank you, sir! Thank you! I'll never forget that I owe you a debt of gratitude for giving me a start in life—you and Dr. Seymour."

A few years later, surprise was expressed by some persons that Philip Dalton had been appointed by the wealthy Geoffrey McKinnon as an executor of his large estate. "They were not very intimate were they?" was the general question asked by the business men of the city.

Phil Dalton himself was somewhat surprised, but rejoiced in the assurance that his venerable friend had read him aright, knowing that the young man who has the force of character to abstain from an evil habit can be held responsible to fill any position of trust. Edith M. Russel in Zion's Herald.

THE WORST OF IT.

"Do you want to buy any berries to-day?" said a poor boy to me one afternoon. I looked at the little fellow, and saw that he was very shabbily clothed; gray pantaloons, very much patched, an old cotton shirt, and a miserable felt hat, made up the whole of his dress.

His feet were bare and travel-stained. In both hands he held up a tin pail full of ripe, dewy raspberries, which were pretty, peeping out from amid the bright green leaves that lay lightly over them.

I told him I would like some; so taking the pail from him, I stepped into the house. He did not follow, but remained behind whistling to my canaries as they hung in their cage on the porch. He was so engrossed with my pretty pets, that the berries seemed forgotten.

"Why did you not come in and see if I measured your berries right?" said I. "How do you know that I would not cheat you, and take more than the three quarts I had agreed to take?" The boy looked up archly at me and smiled.

"I am not afraid," said he, "for you would get the worst of it, ma'am."

"Get the worst of it?" I said. "What do you mean?"

"Why, ma'am, I should only lose my berries, and you would be stealing; don't you think you would get the worst of it?"—Selected.

Yes, things are hard, sometimes. And we must live on and bear God's will. Because He makes a plan for us, and there will be always something coming, we cannot tell, day by day, what may be, only He never forgets us or leaves anything out.—Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

Brother Bailey says: "The official figures for the Baptist and Methodist denominations in the State (Mississippi) are: Baptists 109,236 and Methodists 84,457." According to the official figures of the published minutes of the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences for 1905 the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the State number as follows: In Mississippi Conference, 91 local preachers, 167 traveling preachers, and 46,194 lay members. In North Mississippi Conference, local preachers 83; traveling preachers 169; lay members, 45,172; making a total of white Southern Methodists 91,876. These figures put the Baptists ahead of us only 7,360, instead of 24,779, as Brother Bailey has it in his Record of March 1.

THE PERFECT MAN.

St. James, intensely practical in all he says, declares that "in many things we offend all." If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." The expression was primarily addressed to persons who assumed the role of teachers, or "masters," the Apostle having in mind the Christian congregation, in which every man was allowed to speak, a practice well adapted to bring out conceited and self-appointed speakers, with crude notions and heresies, and to provoke disputes and unseemly quarrels.

The ground of James' statement is that we all offend. This is one of a number of misread passages. Too many understand the Apostle as saying that we offend everybody in many things, using the word "offend" in the sense of insulting speech. This cannot be true, for such a thing is out of reason, if not impossible. And it is scarcely less true that all of us offend somebody occasionally. All confusion on the subject vanishes when we attach to the word its literal meaning, viz, to "stumble." In this sense Jesus used the word: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." James' idea, then, is, "In many things we all stumble"—that is, we make intellectual mistakes and blunders, which lead us into wrong-doing. If all Christians recognized this, and kept in mind their fallibility and liableness to mistakes in judgment and to do wrong, they would always be charitable towards the weak and erring, and before expressing an opinion, and condemning and withdrawing fellowship and confidence, they would weigh carefully, taking into consideration not only the action to be judged, but the motive and all the surroundings of the individual. If this was always done, we would doubtless find, in many instances, a good motive behind a questionable act, and often a bad motive behind a good act.

It is a proverb: "Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones." The moral is, if you are wrong, and do wrong, be quiet about the wrong-doings of others. Altogether, inconsistent are those persons who, guilty of gross sins themselves, express indignation and disgust at the sins of others. Jesus had a word for such: "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye, and behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

But says James: "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man"—that is, if any man is sufficiently wise and prudent, and learned in the things of God, as not to stumble, and thereby cause others to stumble, he is a perfect man. We do not understand the Apostle as teaching that any man can attain a full understanding of the Gospel, and become an infallible teacher. That degree of proficiency, or, rather, endowment, belongs only to a chosen few, and the day for such has passed away. But he does mean to say that it is possible for one so far to inform himself as to become so proficient in the word as to give no occasion for dispute or stumbling, and to that extent be a perfect man.

It is likely that if the ancient custom of asking questions during service were allowed now, or men assumed the right to speak on all occasions, or to question the truth of what they hear in our pulpits, we would frequently have wrangling in our congregations, growing out of crude and false teachings; for, with all our learning, we are often compelled to put up with indifferent and fanatical teaching. More than once in recent years have we felt much disposed publicly to deny and controvert doctrine contrary to the Word of God, and harmful in its effects. Such stumbling, or offending in word, as we have heard on the part of would-be leaders, in this day of enlightenment, is a shame.

But "a perfect man" means more than such intellectual attainment as will enable one to maintain "soundness of speech that cannot be condemned." He is "able also to bridle the whole body," for one whose speech is right, and rightly directed, is more than apt to be right in his actions, for the whole man is well-rounded in character and conduct. A little word at the wrong time, and spoken in the wrong manner, may create a blaze and a conflagration. "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

> "A little shaft at random sent > Finds a mark the archer little meant;
> A little word at random spoken
> May wound or soothe a heart that's broken."

"A word in season, how good it is." "A soft answer turneth away wrath." Gentle speech will keep down contention and preserve the peace. Sound speech will instruct and edify the Church and stop the mouths of gainsayers.

How hard it is to tame and control the tongue! With unaided strength, it is impossible. "Every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind, but the tongue can no man tame." Only God, through grace, can do the work. Considering the mischief of which the tongue is capable, it is no wonder James says: "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

WHAT SOME FOLKS BELIEVE.

We take the following paragraph from one of our exchanges, which credits it to Index. It is strange reading, at least part of it is:

"John immersed his disciples in water, put them completely under it. This water was not a living thing. It had no power. It could not remove a stain of sin. It could not give life to a soul that was dead. It was all symbolical—even as baptism is today. But see! Jesus immerses every believer in Himself, in the Holy Spirit, the living God, the life-giving God, the sanctifying God. In Him is the living power. Here is the real as over against the symbolical baptism. Immersed in God! Saint, you ought to walk in newness of life. Sinner, you ought not to rest until you receive this immersion."

It may be that Index is right. But according to our reading if Jesus immerses every believer in the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit is immersed in every believer. Jesus said to his disciples, speaking of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter, "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." And on another occasion he said: "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me, and I in him." Our Baptist brethren perform baptism by dipping. The mode is practicable, and the action readily performed, but to talk of dipping a soul in God, or God dipping Himself, or being dipped in a soul, is impracticable. It cannot be symbolized.

PERSONAL

Rev. S. J. Davies holds forth at Vidalia, La., not at Vandalia, as the types made us say last week. His post office is Sicily Island, La.

Rev. R. R. Jones began a series of meetings on Sunday last with Rev. A. P. Craddock, of Felicity Street Church. What the prospect is for a revival it is too early to say.

A note from Rev. James Porter says he has not been in the best of health for some time past; otherwise he is doing very well—looking after his charge and securing subscribers for the Advocate.

Rev. M. L. Burton, presiding elder of the Seashore District, is working earnestly and faithfully, and the preachers of the District are in full accord with him—praying for a year of great success.

Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Vicksburg, is among the active friends of the Advocate, and has brought us under obligation for a club of twenty subscribers. We now have a fine list of readers in the Hill City of Mississippi.

Rev. W. H. Eckles, one of our old and efficient preachers, long resident in the bounds of the Sardis District, has recently taken charge of the Cockrum Circuit, and says he is "supplying the work" as "best" he can. He is no new hand at the work.

A note from Rev. Paul M. Brown, dated Bunkie, La., March 19, brings news of the death of Sister Florence Watson, wife of Brother J. M. Watson, of our Bunkie Church, which took place at her home, in Bunkie, Sunday afternoon. An obituary will follow later.

Rev. D. M. Dean is getting along splendidly on the Randolph Mission, North Mississippi Conference. He has filled all appointments to date, and done much pastoral work. He has also done some work for the Advocate. His people are moving up along all lines.

Rev. Marvin Langley has made a good start at Austin and Dundee, in the Greenville District. The charge is missionary territory, but he will soon have a church organized, and also a Sunday school in a settlement where there is no church at all. His heart is set on having a good year.

Rev. R. B. Downer, we are sorry to learn, has so far lost hearing as to be unable to understand any ordinary conversation. Even public worship, so far as hearing is concerned, is a blank. But he is resigned, and says: "I can yet talk, write and feel, and, when I get a chance, can preach."

Rev. E. W. Cain serves a liberal and willing people at Ita Dena, Miss., and the Church is doing a fine work in almost every department. The Conference for the Winona District will be held in the charge in April, and the preacher is expecting a delightful session. We thank him for a pressing invitation to attend.

A note from Rev. M. L. White, of Walnut Grove, Miss., informs us that Rev. Irvin Miller, whose sickness we recently reported, gets no better. He also tells us of the afflictions of Rev. Murdock McDonald, another aged and faithful local preacher. May these suffering saints have sustaining grace. We are indebted to Brother White for twenty-three subscribers to the Advocate.

Many words of congratulation and commendation are coming to us in regard to the Advocate. Rev. W. H. Huntley, Presiding Elder of the Vicksburg District, says: "I certainly congratulate you and Brother Chalmers upon the general and special felicitous body and spirit of the Advocate. The issue of last week was measuring all along high water mark. I am sending a letter to our pastors calling for a club from every charge. Thank you, Brother Huntley."

GRENADA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Grenada District Conference will be held at Oxford, Miss., April 20-22—not May 20-22, as was printed in our last issue.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Made from Pure Grape Cream of Tartar

In baking powder Royal is the standard, the powder of highest reputation; found by the United States Government tests of greatest strength and purity.

It renders the food more healthful and palatable and is most economical in practical use.

Housekeepers are sometimes importuned to buy alum powders because they are "cheap." Yet some of the cheapest made powders are sold to consumers at the highest price.

Housekeepers should stop and think. Is it not better to buy the Royal and take no chances—the powder whose goodness and honesty are never questioned?

Is it economy to spoil your digestion by an alum-phosphate or other adulterated powder to save a few pennies?

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

AN URGENT CALL FOR HELP.

Our brother, Rev. Nelson F. Hoffpauir, of the Louisiana Conference, whose charge for the present year embraces well-nigh all of the larger parishes, sounds a note that should attract the attention of every Southern Methodist in the State. In one of these parishes there are five thousand white people, without a single resident Methodist preacher, and with but four or five preaching places. He preaches in the parish as often as he can, and is always greeted by large congregations of eager hearers—hungry for the Gospel. From his statement, it is evidently a field worthy of cultivation.

Brother Hoffpauir asks: "Why is it that all of our stirring evangelists pass us by?" The answer is readily made: "Our evangelists do not go into uncultivated fields. They do not belong to the pioneer corps. They fell no trees, clear up no ground, break no sod. They reap where others have gone and sown and cultivated. They would doubtless go into these wilderness lands if they could. But as a rule these places are far from the railroads, have no organized and working churches. Our brother must offer the evangelist some inducement, else he must call to his neighbor-preachers, as Simon called on his partners to come and help.

We have heard before of these destitute places in Louisiana, and have heard also that a large proportion of the population is hard to reach. It may be that Brother Hoffpauir's charge contains many people of this kind. But if they are waking up, and manifest a desire to hear the Word, they should have attention.

The whole country is alive and stirring, and improving. Louisiana is destined to have an immense population. The Church must keep pace with the country. And Southern Methodism must not be in the rear.

ONE OF THE SORT.

"It takes all sorts of folks to make a world." One sort lives in North Mississippi in the person of a brother who subscribed for the Advocate with the understanding that if he did not like it the preacher would make it right with the publisher by paying the price out of his own pocket. He received one copy and forthwith wrote the preacher a note holding him to the contract, saying: "We don't feel like paying that much money to help New Orleans to advertise her goods." That brother would probably pay half a dollar for a ten-cent Jew's harp were it properly advertised in a patent newspaper from down East.

PLEASE NOTICE.

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference will convene in Alexandria, April 19-22. We can secure reduced rates if we have fifty in attendance, provided each person present has a certificate that full fare has been paid going. Delegates and visitors will please send their names at once, or as soon as possible, to Mrs. Wm. Hill, Alexandria, La., also to Mrs. F. A. Dicks, 4523 Prytania street, New Orleans.

MRS. S. A. MONTGOMERY, Pres.

MRS F. A. DICKS, Cor. Sec't'y.

JONESVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Advocate—"Silence is golden" so said, for I have waited so long without sending any news of my whereabouts, till I feel I am compelled to speak. Since coming back from Conference we have been all over our work and have been received with every kindness, and full houses have greeted us each Sunday. As best I know how I have presented the message of truth to these hungry hearts. With the exception of one appointment, I am the only preacher of any denomination on the ground. I have started four Sunday schools on the work and one prayer meeting. My people are hungry for a revival. And to see how sin holds this fair country under makes my heart sad. We are taking our collections and are succeeding splendidly. We are toning that this year be the most fruitful and the best of all our life up to now.

s is a field we Methodists cannot afford to let grow up untilled. Northern capitalists are putting great sums of money in real estate, and we will soon have two railroads. Just think, the whole parish of Concordia with 5,000 white population and not a resident Methodist preacher in it, and only four or five preaching places. This forms a part of my work. There are thousands of white people up and down these beautiful rivers who would be glad of a preacher.

How I wish that some of the great energy that is now being spent on "gospel-hardened towns" would be directed to this ripe, waiting field. Why is it that all of our stirring evangelists pass us by? The church needs this great country. Will not Brother Bass or R. R. Jones help in this great country? Any one who will battle for souls we will join hand in hand.

With heart longing for the salvation of this large circuit, Catahoula and Concordia, I beg that my brethren pray that I may, with meekness and humility, point this people to Christ and His Church.

Yours in Christ,
NELSON F. HOFFPAUIR.

McCOOL, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell—If you will give a little space in the Advocate, I would like to speak of our work of McCool Circuit. Suffice it to say we arrived here in due time. Have not missed an appointment since I came on the work. Found everything in very good shape, in a spiritual sense, due to my predecesor, Rev. U. C. Curtis, who is spoken of in the highest terms; and I find it a great pleasure to follow such men. We are moving up on all lines; one church ceiled since Conference; have insured our church in McCool for $1,000. Raised $100 for improving the parsonage, which is now being done. The Sunday school interest is growing rapidly; congregation large and increasing every service. We have two good prayer meetings. The one at McCool has the largest attendance of young people that I ever saw in town. While we are blessed in many ways, we are confronted by many evils, especially C. O. D. whisky. To stand on the streets of our town, and to see the young men that reel as they walk, it is alarming. To know that men who are sending out their death-dealing stuff to his fellow-men, and knowing at the same time that they are wrecking the lives and character of thousands of precious young men whose end is eternal death—for them then to stand before the great Judge and ask to be admitted into the everlasting Kingdom! I don't believe he will be saved. (I aimed to have said, I did not believe he could be saved) because he is a murderer. We have a noble people to serve on this work; they have been very kind to me ever since we came to the work. We are working and praying for a great revival. If it had been left with me to have selected my own appointment I could not have pleased myself better than I am being sent to McCool.

Yours truly, J. A. GOAD.

COALVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell—The First Quarterly Conference for Coalville Circuit for this year has gone to record. Our Presiding Elder, Rev. M. L. Burton, was on hand according to appointment. After preaching a very able, practical sermon, and administering the sacrament of the Lord's supper, a bountiful dinner was spread. "Ye" scribe cannot say whether the "beloved" partook of the dinner in proportion to his corporeity or not; he was too busily engaged himself.

Conference was called to order soon after dinner. The attendance was the largest I have seen in this circuit. Brother Burton presided with ease and dignity, being gentle and kind, yet firm and resolute. He made many friends during his short stay among us. I have never seen a better spirit prevail in a Quarterly Conference throughout. Our finances are pretty well in hand to date; seven have been added to the church. The assessment for the P. C. was increased over last year. The prospects are bright for a very successful year.

May God bless you and the dear old Advocate. Your Brother,

R. A. SIBLEY, JR.

Wool Market, Miss.

HORNBECK, LA.

I reached my destination immediately after Conference. I had the advantage, or rather disadvantage, of many of the brethren in this respect—since I had no household goods to look after. Not even a wife.

The Hornbeck Circuit covers a territory fifty miles in length, but every point is accessible by railway.

This is my first year in the ministry and I count it a blessing that my lot was cast among this good people, whose sympathy I believe I have in this, the criterion of my life.

OSCAR J. RAINEY.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MACON, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell—I write to call attention to the fact that Macon claims the privilege of entertaining the 1907 session of the North Mississippi Conference. It will be remembered that we extended an invitation last year for the approaching session, but withdrew in favor of Corinth. At our First Quarterly Conference this year the invitation is renewed, and this time we confidently expect you to come.

We are now almost beginning the actual work of the complete overhauling of the inside of our church building. We are going to put in a beautiful and artistic metal ceiling, re-kalsomine the walls, carpet the floor, and put in new electroliers.

Since Conference we have dismissed four members, and have received nine, financial interests in better condition than at the same time last year, and there seems to be harmony throughout the entire membership of the church. Brother Lipscomb, our new Presiding Elder, preached for us once, and the people are much pleased both with his preaching and with the manner in which he conducts the business of the Quarterly Conference.

Fraternally,
WM. L. DUREN.

POPLARVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell:—Our Presiding Elder, Brother Burton, has just made his second visit to us. We find him a delightful companion in the parsonage. The congregations were pleased with both sermons yesterday. I have never served a kinder people. When we first came here our larder was well filled with substantial things. Last Monday, I suppose Prof. Thames and his good wife thought that we had about disposed of the first gifts, so they sent us in three dozen quarts of nice fruits, about a peck of eggs and a nice ham, etc.

The Church here has sent in the full assessment for foreign missions, paid the Presiding Elder one-half of his claim on the work, and the first of the month they handed the pastor a check for his month's salary. I called attention to the claims of the Advocate in Church Conference the other day, and hope to see some results of my speech. We shall be glad to have you spend a Sunday with us when you can do so. Yours, etc.,

D. P. BRADFORD.

TEMPERANCE.

The Scripture from which this lesson is taken is the Book of Proverbs, and there is no more appropriate passage in the whole Bible.

What an experience must have had King Solomon to be able to write so much to the point on subjects that interest and instruct us of today as much as those to whom the instruction was directly given?

Whatever may have been the extent of the evil of intemperance in ancient days, we know that all that has been said and written is brought in use now, because the evil has grown to such an alarming extent. A drunkard himself could not have given utterance to thoughts so to the point. Let the drunkard answer. Who hath woe? I have because I am a slave to that which has robbed me of my manliness and given me cowardliness in return.

Who hath sorrow? I have because I have caused so much sorrow in the hearts of others. I meet only sad faces now, and they are accusing faces in their very sadness. I am filled with sorrow because I cannot hide my shame; because my very shame drives me to seek companions among those who are as equally guilty as I. Who hath contentions? I have because I have lost the good nature and affable mind which once was mine. I take offense at even the most friendly advances. I imagine the world is arrayed against me. Who hath wounds without cause? I have because I have given so many wounds without cause.

His poor mother was dying of a broken heart, outlasting father, because the mother's love is the strongest and can stand more. Brothers, sisters, companions and friends, I wounded them all without cause. When they would have helped me, I spurned them from me. Who hath redness of eyes? I have because the rosy flush of health that was once upon my face has given way to the fluffy, sickly look that drink has painted. Redness of eyes, yes and an unnatural brightness, a ghastly glare where there was a bold and confident look. What have I gained in exchange for all that I have given up? Or for all that drink has taken from me? Nothing; no, worse than nothing, only an appetite that I am ready to barter my immortal soul to appease. You ask how I can get drink when all is gone but the appetite? A drink of whisky is easier to get than a loaf of bread, although it costs twice as much. Why is this, you ask? I have explained to no one why it is, as satisfactorily as to myself. The devil will allow nothing to prevent my utter ruin, for even the lack of money. I have all these because I have tarried so long at the wine that, for fear it will lose its effect I resort to mixing it with whatever else intoxicates.

You kindly read to me from God's word: "Look not upon the wine when it is red." Ah, I have learned to love to look upon it. I love to see the flaming advertisements on the boards alongside of some other business cards. I take some comfort, vain comfort, in thinking there is some dignity left in the stuff yet. Look not upon it! O that I could turn my eyes away from it! But when I see it, I see in it surcease from sorrow and remorse, only for a time it is true, but it is precious while it lasts. I know that at last it bites like an adder, because it has bitten me, and it has stung me like a serpent, and there is no hope. My heart hath uttered perverse things, because I have made excuses for myself and for others. I have given false hopes to myself and to others. Now I am as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea, and the waters roll over and around me, and there is nothing to keep me from going down with the tide; I have left far behind me all that could have helped me, for they have beaten me and I felt it not; my sense of feeling gone, my manhood gone, all gone, and now when I awake I will seek it yet again.

Is he lost now? Is he utterly beyond every help? No, thank God, not for many a time has the grace of God, the wondrous love of Christ saved the almost lost ones, and angels in heaven rejoice over the sinner that repenteth. Those pictures are painful to look upon, but God helps us to keep from turning away. There is a time in the life of a slave to drink when a kind word will save him. There is a time when he is gazing on every face he meets for one look of pitying sympathy. Let us never be harsh or unkind to the drunkard, for he condemns himself more strongly than you could condemn him. There is more power in kind actions and services than all the tracts and lectures you could carry in a basket. That is why we must go to save them; go among them. Jesus went among them and was ridiculed by the Scribes and Pharisees. The first work for a drunkard is to convince him that you are not his enemy, and you cannot do this at long range. We must be in the world but not of the world, and you will be surprised to see how soon the worldly will know that, although you are among them, you are not of them. You can be among them and work among them and they will respect and esteem you, because the love of Christ will shine out of your very face if you will let it, and they in time will glorify your Father in Heaven.

A temperance lesson to a Sunday school is a lesson to be learned how to save from intemperance, for safety from loss comes in being busy keeping others from the danger that might come to yourself. When the members of the life-saving service lend aid to the shipwrecked they have life buoys on their own bodies. So we will go forth to this work leaving on the whole armor of God. In this work more than in any other, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers of the darkness of this world," and against the desire in a liquid form. So while we work to save the fallen let us remember St. Paul's admonition to himself in 1st Cor. ix. 27. "Lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." There is only one way of saving a drunkard, and well did Francis E. Willard know it when she called it the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and that one way is the way of Jesus Christ and his blessed religion. "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess, but be ye filled with the spirit." It does not take many drinks, however small, to drive the spirit out of the heart, and "if ye have not the spirit of Christ ye are none of his." So when we work with kindness to keep him from drinking, we will work with religion to make him abstain entirely.

May God make us all strong if this temptation assails us, and give us the tender, loving heart of our Lord toward the very lowest—he left the ninety and nine, and went far over the mountain for the weak one that had strayed away, and found the one that was lost.

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 23rd, 1906.

Mr. A. P. Girardeau, Savannah, Ga.:

Dear Sir: After having used Johnson's Chill and Fever Tonic for over fifteen years in my family, with unvarying good results, I feel that I owe you this voluntary testimonial.

Having just broken up a case of Fever and threatened Pneumonia in one of my and threatened Pneumonia in one of my little girls, with yours remedy, without using other medicines or calling a physician, this seems to me a good time to express my appreciation of "Johnson's."

If will cool fevers or to put it a little stronger, you can't have fever if you take it.

If you could alter the taste of the Tonic without impairing its virtues, your greatest problem would be how to supply the demand. Refer to me about JOHNSON'S.

Yours very truly,

W. E. Wyre, Engr. L. & N. R.R.

F. O. B. YOUNG'S ISLAND, S. C. My Special Express Rate on Plants is Very Low.

Guarantee I guarantee Plants to give purchaser satisfaction, or will refund the purchase price to any customer who is dissatisfied at end of season. These plants are grown in the open field, on Seacoast of South Carolina, in a climate that is just suited to growing the hardiest plants that can be grown in the United States. These plants can be reset in the Interior of the Southern States during the months of January, February, and March. They will stand severe cold without being injured, and will mature a head of Cabbage Two to Three weeks sooner than if you grew your own plants in hot beds and cold frames.

My Largest Customers are the Market Gardeners near the Interior towns and cities of the South. Their profit depends upon them having Early Cabbage; for that reason they purchase my plants for their crops.

I also grow a full line of other Plants and Fruit Trees, such as Strawberry, Sweet Potato, Tomato, Egg Plant and Pepper Plants; Apple, Peach, Pear, Plum, Cherry and Apricot Trees, Fig Bushes and Grape Vines.

Special terms to persons who make up club orders. Write for illustrated catalogue.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTION.

The Fifth International Convention of the student volunteer movement for foreign missions closed its session in this city Sunday night. It was the largest gathering of Christian students ever held, the attendance being nearly double that of the former convention held four years ago in Toronto. And Nashville deserves commendation for having entertained so satisfactorily such a large delegation, surpassing by nearly 2,000 the number she was first asked to entertain. Many delegates from various parts of North America expressed their delight at the true Southern hospitality shown them by the city.

It would take so much time and space to speak of the many excellent and truly inspiring addresses made during the sessions of the Convention, and of the many outside meetings held in the various churches, to discuss the different fields. We will only call attention to some of the larger impressions made by the Convention as a whole.

One would first be impressed by the magnitude of it and the scope of its work. There were over 4,000 delegates present, representing 700 colleges and universities of the U. S. and Canada, and about 30 different lands. Included in this number were 144 missionaries, and over 90 missionary agencies were represented. The great Ryman Auditorium was filled to overflowing at every session; the heavy rain on Friday during the Convention not even checking the crowds.

The scope of the movement was fully expressed by the words contained on a banner stretching over the entire length of the large platform: "The evangelization of the world in this generation," and the possibilities of such a gigantic undertaking seemed very reasonable when one heard the reports of the wonderful amount of work done in the foreign fields in recent years, and saw the great force of well-trained young men and women who are soon to go out to all parts of the world.

The personnel of the speakers on the stage during the Convention would probably be the next thing of note. Some of the religious leaders and speakers of not only this country but of foreign lands made addresses. Such were Dr. George Robson, ex-moderator of the Free Church, Scotland; Dr. Donald G. Frasier, also of Scotland; Dr. Karl Fries, of Sweden, Chairman of the World's Christian Student Federation; Dr. Lancaster, of London; J. A. McDonald, of Canada, and others worthy of note, while from this country were such men as Harlan P. Beach, of Yale University; Bishop Thos. F. Gailor, of Tennessee; Robt. E. Speer, of New York City; Dr. J. D. Vance, of New Jersey, and Bishops Thoburn and McDowell, of the Methodist Church. These men are among the foremost along educational and religious lines. The Convention was also favored in having among its speakers laymen of international prominence, as Sir Mortimer Durand, British Ambassador to the U. S., ex-Secretary of State General John W. Foster, Hon. H. F. B. McFarland, President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Hon. Samuel B. Capen, of Boston. The foregoing are only a part of the speakers who addressed the Convention. A number of returned missionaries spoke at the different sessions, among them being Miss Ellen M. Stone, of Turkey; Sweymer, of Arabia; Helen, of Japan, and many more worthy of mention, but which space forbids. A more interesting and instructive programme of speakers could hardly have been arranged.

But by far the most noteworthy feature of this Convention was the spirit of earnestness and devotion which pervaded it all. It was pitched at a high key in the very opening session by the address of John R. Mott, the Chairman, and Robt. E. Speer, of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions—two young men who are such mighty forces for good in this country—and the rest of the meetings were kept up to this key. Indeed, so deeply spiritual was this Convention and such large visions of Christ and his work were had, as a result of it, that one felt, when it was over, that he had been on a mount of transfiguration. We felt that "God himself was moving within this very hall."

Christ never seemed nearer, nor Christianity such a powerful reality, as when thousands sat within that great building and listened so intently to the cheering messages of those earnest laborers from all parts of God's great vineyard—the world. The question raised in our minds was not the practicability of foreign missions, but rather, How soon will the Gospel be carried to all nations, and what part may I have in this great undertaking?

No service was marked by half-heartedness or lack of interest and enthusiasm, but every speaker was fired with such a zeal and with such a profound sense of the presence of Christ that we all felt that truly the most momentous question of all ages was now being discussed. Never will those who were so fortunate as to be present forget it. Never, probably, will Nashville have such mighty spiritual forces set loose within her bounds—forces which will be felt on the most distant shores, and which will hasten the crowning of our Lord—as were released during this Fifth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions.

"Every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord."

Mrs. ROBERTA (ROGERS) PORTER was born near Dorsey, Itawamba County, Miss., June 23, 1861, and died at her home west of Fulton on Nov. 28, 1905. She was converted in early childhood, during the ministry of J. E. McElhannon, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Friendship, now of Mantachie Charge, in which she lived an exemplary Christian life until the day of her death. Her religion was practical, as well as theoretical, and enjoyed daily. She was married Dec. 16, 1881, to Chas. A. Porter, who afterward became a local preacher, to whom the beauties of her holy life were an encouragement as the vicissitudes of life were encountered. Her home was the home of her pastors, for whose necessities she delighted to provide. When the summons came she was ready. Sister Porter endured her suffering with patience and Christian fortitude, during which she frequently repeated the 103d Psalm and praised the Lord until she triumphantly entered the haven of eternal rest. One daughter (Mrs. Carrie Davis), one sister (Mrs. M. L. Ward) and two brothers (E. G. and Dunbar Rogers), with the devoted husband, are left to await the reunion of the saints. To God be the praised for the life she lived. WALTER W. JONES, P. C.

Mrs. MARTHA ANN S. KUYKENDOL was born in South Carolina on Oct. 19, 1831, and fell asleep in Jesus Feb. 18, 1906. Sister Kuykendol was the daughter of Theophilus and Mary Williams, was reared in Christian atmosphere and became a believer of the Lord Jesus Christ in childhood, joining the M. E. Church, South, about the age of 16 years. Her father was a local Methodist preacher. She leaves one brother, three sons, one daughter and many relatives and friends to mourn her death. Her stay here on earth was such that she gained the affectionate love of those who knew her. Too much cannot be said in praise of her as a parent, for upon her fell the responsibility of making a support for herself and several children, who were very young, and for more than twenty years she has been engaged in training her dear children by precept and example—not only how to labor honestly for the comforts of this life, but for that bread that perisheth not—and we feel sure, when we look at the lives of her children, that her labors have not been in vain. We have every reason to feel sure she is now at rest with her Lord. P. C.

LEROY McCURLEY was born in Georgia Nov. 22, 1821, and moved to Wilkinson County, Miss., while a boy where he died Jan. 20, 1906. He was married twice—first to Lucinda J. Tillery Feb. 6, 1845, who died Aug. 4, 1863. On June 6, 1865, he married Eliza Aswell. There were borne to him sixteen children, eight by each wife. He has been the honored recipient of fifty-eight grand children and quite a number of great-grandchildren. He lived to see his children to the third generation. He joined the Methodist Church while a boy to which he ever remained a true and loyal member. For a long time he was one of the leading members of Hopewell Church, serving in the capacity of Steward. He was a man who knew and loved the doctrines of the Church. He was modest and humble, never pushing himself in the front, but never shirking a known duty. He was his pastor's friend. He leaves quite a host to mourn his death.

W. W. MURRAY, P. C.

GILES W. KENT was born in East Feliciana Parish, La., Sept. 22, 1828. In 1852 he was married to Miss Asenath Warner, daughter of Dudley Warner, and died at the home of his son, Willie, in New Orleans, March 6, 1906. He was an active member of the Methodist Church for over thirty years. He loved his Church and stood ever ready to do any service she asked of him. He was a kind and tender husband and an affectionate father. He leaves a heart-broken widow, four sons and three daughters to mourn their loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Brother Kent left every evidence of his readiness and willingness to go. Every one who knew him speaks in high terms of his fidelity as a Christian. In his death the Church at Slaughter, La., has lost a valued and faithful member. May God sustain and comfort the loved ones left behind, all of whom are following their father's example. His Pastor, R. O. WIER.

CLIFFORD, son of Rollie and Lavinney Mathis, was born near Wilkinson, Miss., April 25, 1904, and died Jan. 25, 1906, after an illness of five days. Though only 21 months old, he could talk well and showed intelligence beyond one of his age. He was a loving and obedient child. Loving hands and medical skill did all they could to keep him here, but God took him to make heaven more home-like with the smiles and childish voice of one more little one.

WHOLE NO. 5288. "PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD." VOL. 53—NO. 13.

Glances at the World.

The failure of justice is just now a subject of frequent discussion. It is too glaring to pass unnoticed. More than once in recent months, not to say years, have we seen utter failure to properly punish evil-doers, and in numbers of instances have we noticed that the steps of justice were all too slow for the public good. We have never felt, however, that it was our province to criticise the doings of our courts. It is scarcely less wholesome to intimidate judges and attorneys, and juries by criticisms, which are sometimes nothing more than public ridicule, than it is to inadequately punish a criminal. It is evident to all lovers of their country, and respecters of society, that something should be done or said to quicken the public conscience and urge administrators of the law to do their duty. And it is well that the initiative should be taken by law administrators themselves. Judge Cochran, of Mississippi, has spoken none too soon. In a capital offence tried before him, the jury found the prisoner guilty, but fixed the penalty at imprisonment for life. Judge Cochran's sense of justice, taking into consideration the crime of the man in murdering his wife by administering poison, evidently for the purpose of marrying another woman, was outraged, and when the verdict was announced he spoke to the jury as follows: "You have rendered the most merciful verdict you could possibly have rendered under the evidence in this case. The defendant is guilty as charged in the indictment, and ought to have been hanged by the neck until dead. The very truth is, the administration of criminal justice in this State is a farce and a humbug. Criminal lawyers representing defendants have ingrafted technical shelter and protection in the criminal jurisprudence of the State of Mississippi until the enforcement of the criminal law, if not impossible, is rendered difficult beyond all reason and common sense." The Bench and the Bar will bear witness that the burden of the administration of the criminal law in this State is not to enforce the law, but to shield and protect the defendant when charged with a serious crime. The Bar has convinced the people of its intellectual honesty, but has failed to convince them that it has a conscience. The great body of the people believe that when it comes to enforcing the criminal law the Bar is without a conscience. The wisest thinkers in the Tenth District tell me that while they sympathize with me in my effort to enforce the law, I will fail unless the conscience of the Bar is aroused." The Daily Picayune, commenting on this deliverance of Judge Cochran, says: "This is a terrible arraignment, but who can dispute its general truth? It is a fact that the machinery of justice does not give to society the protection it ought. The administration of the criminal law is no longer a terror to evil-doers, and the result is that criminals no longer fear, and good citizens have to a large extent ceased to rely on the courts, and the result is that popular justice, commonly known as lynch law, is resorted to in all aggravated cases. When the people, impatient at interminable delays of the law, and fearing that in some way justice will be cheated and atrocious criminals escape merited punishment, take the law into their own violent hands, there should be nothing surprising. The cause of it all is the grievous failure of official justice. Any remedy, to be efficacious, must be applied at the top; not at the bottom, for there it would be useless."

There is no telling to what sort of devices people will resort, or what risks they will take, for the carrying out of a scheme for personal ends or for some supposed benefit to accrue to others. A remarkable illustration of this has come to light through the telegraph dispatches from Russia. A woman conceived the idea of assasinating the Governor General of Moscow. She was elegantly gowned and wore rich furs. She represented herself as on a mission of mercy, and on this pretext gained admission into the presence of the Governor. The guard who admitted her discovered that she was greatly excited and followed her into the room. When the General entered the room to hear her story she began an impassioned appeal, and attempted to throw herself at his feet on the marble floor. The guard who was close by caught her and kept her from falling. The woman's hair was arranged in the pompadour style, and, in the attempt to fall, became disarranged and disclosed an object which had been concealed. It was a nitro-glycerine bomb. Her purpose was to explode the bomb by striking it violently on the floor. Had she succeeded the palace would have been wrecked, and she would have perished with her victim. There was no clew to the identity of the woman.

As an evidence of the general prosperity of the country, the records of the Treasury Department at Washington show that the expenses of the government, which have ranged from nearly four millions of dollars to nearly twenty-nine millions per month above receipts for the last sixteen months, show for the month of February an excess of receipts above expenses reaching considerably beyond one million dollars, this, too, in face of the fact that the expenses of the government considerably increased over three millions of dollars. If the revenue continues to swell at the present rate, by the close of the fiscal year, June 30, the surplus will reach nearly ten millions of dollars. Naturally enough the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw, attributes this happy state of things to tariff protection. Of course, it cannot be denied that revenue from imports largely swell the receipts of the Treasury; at the same time, exports on which the people pay no duty to the government largely exceed imports, which indicates a surplus of goods of all kinds, thus showing that the prosperity of the Treasury is directly traceable to the product of the soil and the manufacturing industries of the country. If the people had nothing to export they would not be able to import, especially that class of goods which Mr. Shaw classes as luxuries.

A TRACT SOCIETY.

For months past the subject of a tract society has been agitated by brethren in some sections of the Church. If we mistake not, the Texas Conferences, one or all, took action, and the matter will be fully presented to the General Conference.

There is no doubt that such a society, if not greatly needed, will accomplish much good. We are told that in some places cheap literature, or literature for free distribution is a necessity, made so by the free and wide circulation of leaflets and pamphlets which contain "erroneous and strange doctrines," not only in opposition to the truth, but poisonous to the minds, especially of the young and uninformed. This method of propagating error can be met only by instituting and putting in operation a like method by our own people. The subject deserves the fullest consideration.

We have received a lengthy and well-written communication advocating the establishment of such a society, which we would gladly print, but it comes to us in pencil, and that bars it.

That form of "Christianity which has 'sprung in a purely natural way from the instincts of the human heart'" does not bear the stamp of Jesus of Nazareth.

OPTIMISM AND PESSIMISM MISUSED.

Much is said of late about the words optimism and pessimism; or, rather, they are frequently used, and we are forced to say they are misused.

Optimism came into existence and use about the first half of the eighteenth century. It was employed to denote the doctrine taught by Leibnitz and others, that everything in the universe is in its proper place, and is good, and, therefore, there is really no evil—that God has made things as they are, and, therefore, since he is infinitely good, everything must be for the best.

Pessimism, as a word, came into existence and use in the nineteenth century. It was employed to designate the doctrines of Schopenhauer and others, that the world is evil, and the worst of evils, and that all is for the worst, etc.

These words, optimism and pessimism, have been coined by our leading writers and lexicographers to express another meaning—optimism as meaning a hopeful view of matters in general, and also the belief that the world is growing better; pessimism, that everything is growing worse, that everything tends to the worst, a gloomy view of matters and events.

The misuse of these words nowadays appears when optimism is used for a good state of things that does not exist, and pessimism is used for the bad state of things really found. In other words, all is either optimism, or all is pessimism, irrespective of the possibility in a sense of a real basis for the use of the one or the other. One must believe that all will be good, because some are good, in order to be an optimist, and that all evil will be good, irrespective of conditions, or he becomes the unfortunate pessimist. In the minutest analysis of things this may be denied, but when it comes to the reckless use of these words, it cannot truthfully be denied. One is not a pessimist who sees evil and denounces it, whether it is in high or low places; neither is he an optimist (in the true sense) who does not want to see an evil as an evil and correct it. What he denominates optimism is in reality gross and inexcusable deception—a deception, too, to say the least of it, that helps to make pessimism possible.

There is but one species of true optimism in this life with reference to the life to come, and that one is founded on the sins of an individual pardoned and his soul changed by the Holy Ghost, and then remains in this condition by doing the best he knows and can. In addition, he must do his best to know and to increase his ability to do what God requires. His optimism with reference to other Christians must be thus founded, or he will likely lose his abhorrance for sin and courage to denounce it, and, besides, become derelict in duties generally. One is not a pessimist who opens his eyes and sees and denounces the disrespect members of the Church of God have for their solemn vows; neither is he one when he declares intentional faithlessness on the part of Church officials to be disloyalty to the Church. It is not pessimism to see scheming in the ministry for good appointments when it does exist, and also scheming in the same for preferments, and then oppose such a practice most vigorously. These things are gross sins, and, therefore, those who indulge them should be made to feel that they are such, and, too, that such practices not only are grounds for hearty repentance, but that they destroy the worthiness of one who is guilty of them. A minister who would dare to scheme for good appointments, and especially for preferments over his brethren, has in him the spirit to rob God of his throne and make him his subject.

Just think of a minister scheming to go to the General Conference, not only specially for the honor in it, but to make laws for the Church of God! He can grow pale when the first vote fails to bring him out victorious, and the second not a success, his heart nearly fails and finds a relief when the final vote gives him his coveted prize—but, oh, that conscience! What inexpressible strainings! What burnings, till all of its sensitiveness is nearly, if not wholly gone! It is not pessimism, neither is it opposition to optimism to discourage such evils, or even to denounce them.

BROTHER PARKER'S INTERPRETATION

Is Brother Parker right in his interpretation of "Pentecost," or that the enduement was a mere physical demonstration?

It seems that in avoiding one hypothesis he gets into an error greater than the one he attempts to avoid; for, if his theory is correct, it seems to me that there is no need of a baptism of the Holy Ghost, and it is using "vain repetitions" to ask for the same. Why do I need to be baptized with fire and speak with "other tongues?" My hearers would not understand. Does not every minister feel his need of power from above? It is not physical power which we need, but spiritual. "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature * * * and lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." Let us notice "the facts in the case," regardless of theory or whose "playhouse" it may demolish.

"And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" before they "began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts ii, 4.) Here the physical demonstration was on the apostles.

There was another outpouring of the Holy Ghost at Cæsarea on the household of Cornelius. "While Peter yet spake these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word" (Acts x, 44), and they of the circumcision were astonished, because the gift of the Holy Ghost was poured out on the Gentiles.

Here the physical demonstration, or gift of tongues, was on them who heard, "For they," of the circumcision, "heard them speak with other tongues and magnify God." Here is a baptism of the Holy Ghost with like results, except as already stated. Surely this was not for preaching the Gospel to all nations, for there were only in the house Cornelius, "kinsmen and near friends."

Another case: after the healing of the lame man by Peter and John, and after the threatening by "the rulers of Israel," Peter and John "went to their own company and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them;" and they said, among other things, "And now Lord behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word." "And when they had prayed the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled"—some of them the second time—with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness." Acts iv, 29-31. Here is another outpouring, and the physical demonstration is not speaking with other tongues, but a shaking of the place where they were. The prayer was for boldness and it was answered. See Acts iv, 31.

"Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." (Eph. v, 18.)

There seems to be a connection between this passage and the day of Pentecost. After the baptism some said that "These men are full of new wine." But Peter, standing up with the eleven, said, "These are not drunk as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel, And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." (Acts ii, 14-17). And after an exposition of Scripture and history, he said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off." (Acts ii, 38-39.)

The apostles, in a sense, forsook Christ, and Peter denied him with curses, but at Pentecost, when they were "filled with the Spirit, he preached Jesus and him crucified with all boldness, and there were added unto the Church about three thousand souls—such as were being saved."

The gift of tongues gave the people opportunity to "hear" the Gospel. The result we know: Thousands now "hear" the Gospel preached every Lord's Day, and we know its result. The difference is not in hearing, but in power.

Some times, when a person gets out of the ruts, he can go no farther. The shadow went back ten steps on the steps of Ahaz. Would it not be well for us to go back a few steps in some things and ask for the old paths, the good way, and walk therein? I refrain from drawing conclusions.

Read Brother Parker's article in the Advocate of March 1, and make your own conclusions.

J. R. WILSON.

Nettleton, Miss.

Why is it that, as a rule, we think tenderly only of severed attachments? What a lesson there is for the irritable, the quarrelsome, the unfilial, the incontinent, the disloyal, in this reflection. We never quite know the burden of sorrow which others carry, and the call to us all is imperative to be gentle with the care-worn heart. The invalids and the aged are the special charge of the strong and youthful.—Exchange.

NOTES FROM MISSISSIPPI ITINERANT.

Dear Advocate: A few notes from a Mississippi itinerant may interest your readers.

I was in a revival meeting recently in our Central Church in Kansas City. Brother Paul H. Lynn, P. C., Evangelists Brown and Curry were conducting the services, the latter directing the music. The old Methodist plan seemed to be in order in this meeting—i.e., the faithful denunciation of sin, the presentation of a mighty Savior from sin. The penitents came in the old-fashioned way to the altar to pray through and definitely settle the question. We had frequently several conversions at a single service. While working in the altar at a night service, I observed a little girl in the congregation, who seemed to be under conviction. I went to her immediately and invited her to the altar, and she finally came, after the second invitation, and was converted. After the service, while on my way to my room, I was hailed by this self-same little girl, who came running across the street, saying, "Howdy, Brother Phillips!" I said, "Who are you?" She extended her hand, saying, with a face all aglow, "You took me into the Church."

A new sense of God's love flashed over me. I went away feeling intensely a love and sympathy for the children whom I should meet. "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

At the request of Brother Z. M. Williams, Presiding Elder of the Kansas City District, I preached Sunday at 11 o'clock in Cleveland Avenue Church for the Pastor, Rev. L. P. Norfleet, who was sick. The congregation responded in a genuine, hearty way to the sermon. These Missouri Methodists are "whole-souled" people—like gold that is tried in the fire.

I took a peep in the Scarritt Bible and Training School, and was kindly shown through the building by that excellent woman, Sister Hargrove. Her deep spirituality and strong personality makes its impress on the girls of this institution. Here I met some bright Mississippi girls.

I found about 130 bright girls in attendance at our Central College at Lexington. Here I had a pleasant and profitable conference with Miss Belle Greene, daughter of Rev. Jesse Greene, of pioneer fame.

I looked in on our college at Morrisville, Mo., which is an excellent co-educational institution, in a clean college town. Here I met "Aunt Clementine" Cook, an aunt of Brothers W. H. and G. B. Winton. She is 86 years of age, her father's home being the stopping-place of many of Asbury's preachers. She was present at a camp meeting when the following incident occurred: James Axley had preached, and, in consequence of a drought, he prayed for rain. He had no sooner concluded his prayer, than a physician present mounted his horse and started for home, full speed. En route, he was hailed by an acquaintance, who said: "Hello, Doctor! Are you going to see a patient?" He answered, "No; I have no patients. Nobody sick these days. Axley has prayed for rain, and my hay is all down, and I am afraid I will lose it."

So, on he went. But he was too late, the rain having come and washed his hay down against his fence.

May God send us a revival this year!

ROBERT L. PHILLIPS.

HONEST FIGURES.

It is said that "figures cannot lie," but it is possible to produce a remarkably good imitation of a lie. The columns of statistics published each year can have but two legitimate objects, to give glory to our Lord, and to furnish information for the guidance of the Church. If they do not tell the truth, the whole truth, the sole truth, and nothing but the truth, they can neither glorify the Christ, nor help man.

By the very suggestive heading to this article it is not intended to impugn the motives of those who have failed to report correct figures, but to suggest the only criterion by which our figures must be judged, and the motives that must impel, if satisfactory figures are obtained. To-day, men are careless, indifferent, and sometimes misinformed as to facts that figures should cover. But whatever the reason, if the figures that we send forth to the world are not correct, they are not honest figures. No matter whose the fault, the Church at large is placed in the attitude of the business firm, that, by misrepresentation, secures to itself an undue credit in the business world. Before the world, the Christ and his people are one.

Many tirades have been written on church statistics. Can our woes be remedied? They can be, and should be. We can reach practical accuracy, the accuracy of banks and business houses. We have all heard of sleepless nights and weary days spent in the search for one cent. As a matter of fact, "Uncle Sam" is the only one who strives after such accuracy, even to the issuing of a voucher for one cent to close the account of Grover Cleveland, when he ceased to be President. When it is dependent upon so many brains to remember, and so many hands to write, there are bound to be times when every column will not balance like the set of books under one man's hand.

To attain the end desired, lofty motives must be called into play. If it is not for the glory of God that we report figures, let us cease to manufacture statistics. If it is for His glory, then let us raise the cry of "honest figures, for the glory of Christ."

With this as a starting point, our campaign needs to touch at several points.

1st. Presume we should be brought to bear on those who represent us in the General Conference to cut out all fads and fancies and to simplify the statistics as far as possible. Directions should be printed in the book of pastor's reports, stating how to fill each blank that is made up of diverse elements.

2d. The next important point, and in some ways one of the most important, is the statistical secretary. He is made the scapegoat for the sins of the whole Conference. Instead, he needs your help. But it is a matter of supreme importance in the campaign for honest statistics as to the viewpoint of the secretary. Some of the ablest and best men of the Church, who have sat at the statistical table, have been satisfied to transcribe carefully the reports, and if aught was wrong to let the blame fall back on the offender.

This is not sufficient. Your secretary needs to feel that the honor of his brethren and the glory of his Lord calls for "honest reports." He should have an ample corps of assistants, so that he may have time to study the detail of reports as they pass under his hand. He needs to study the Conference in detail and be quick to detect inconsistencies. He should consult with every pastor whose report awakens a doubt. I see some over-worked and much-abused statistical secretary throw up his hands in despair. But such pains are being taken in all sorts of business enterprises, and such work is being done in some of the Annual Conferences to-day.

An auditing board can be a great help, but it cannot carry all the burdens of the statistical secretary. When he does not have such help, he should check all his financial tables with the treasurers of the different boards.

3d. The presiding elder should be, to a large extent, a traveling auditor of his district, as well as the spiritual overseer. When the presiding elders work for "honest figures," both by sending copies of all assessments to the statistical secretary and by keeping an eye on the individual pastors, they can work wonders. A large element in the success of some presiding elders lies in their ability to make their districts tell the whole truth as to what is being done, thus encouraging pastors and people to enlarged efforts.

4th. Finally, if the pastor fails to gather the information that the Church needs and to put it into consistent shape, the hand of every other man on this problem is only a makeshift. As a man of God, intrusted with interests that far outweigh the apparent results of a few figures, he is still bound to be honest in them. No matter what excuse he may give, if his figures do not tell the truth, they are not honest, and they misrepresent pastor, people and Master to the world at large.

If the statistics are aught but a snare and a delusion, if they serve any purpose at all, they can only serve that purpose by common business honesty. The day should come, in an Annual Conference, when every man was so careful of his reports that, if his successor in the pastoral office cast doubts upon last year's figures, a committee of investigation would be called for.

Every suggestion of this paper has been put to practical test at some time, with varying success. We can have "honest figures" and results practically as accurate as those upon which every large business house of the land depends.

H. WHITEHEAD.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

FROM REV. J. W. CUNNINGHAM.

Yesterday, Sunday, February 25, was without sunshine, but was of pleasant temperature. This morning's paper said "this day will be clear and pleasant." But at nine o'clock the housetops and sidewalks were white with snow. At two o'clock a carriage called for me to go to a funeral service for which I was engaged last evening. I found that the snow in five hours had become so deep on the streets over which I was driven as to make carriage running slow and laborious to the horses in their three miles journey through the city. As I approached the house of mourning the stone steps from the sidewalk to the yard above were being cleared of snow by a laborer with his shovel and brooms. As I descended the same steps an hour later they were deeply covered with snow. I slipped and fell full length, my back coming down across the steps. Strong men lifted me to my feet. I found I was not hurt. The snow so deeply covered the steps as to make my fall an easy one.

[illegible] three miles [illegible] there were [illegible] along the [illegible] Some times we [illegible] track and the [illegible] so deep as to make [illegible] Snow plows were here and there [illegible] snow obstruction for [illegible] passenger cars.

Finally we turned [illegible] the long street with its car lines and went [illegible] through the deep snow over which the wheels had rolled for hours. After a few [illegible] yards of snowy space had been crossed, we [illegible] a couple of houses on an elevation. [illegible] a large city building for the insane near the point we had traveled along the car tracks. In an opposite direction, westward, was the City Poor house. Southward were market gardens and the small homes of the laborers connected with them.

The hearse we had been following with the encoffined dead halted within fifty feet of one of the two houses on the elevation. The house was built of brick, of a church-like appearance. Its very wide door of entrance was reached by a dozen long stone steps, from which the snow had just been swept. Up those steps, and through the wide doorway, six pallbearers bore the coffin of a man who had died at the age of 53 years, leaving a widow, but no children. Within two minutes I and the balance of the funeral party ascended the steps and entered the room. The coffin had disappeared. It had been placed in a hearse-like receptacle of black, resting on the floor. Through a doorway in front, the coffin had passed and the outer door was closed upon it. On chairs around that inclosure of the dead all of the funeral party seated themselves, while I ascended by several steps to a large platform in the rear. There was a pulpit for ministerial use when a sermon is preached. A lady sat at the organ, and, at my request, played a funeral hymn. I had conducted a service in the house of mourning, and closed this final service with the Lord's prayer and benediction, and all the people retired from the house, except two men, who went down a narrow stairway, near the platform, to an apartment below. They went as witnesses, to be able to testify as to the disposition of the body, which had descended by machinery to the room below.

On a previous occasion I went down that stairway, and saw the body of a woman taken from a coffin, that had reached the lower room by the process I have described. It was laid on an iron couch, covered with a white cloth, saturated with alumn water. The door of a furnace was opened, and in it I saw a steady light, like that of the finest coal-oil lamp or gas flame. The iron couch, with its body of death was passed in, the door was closed and the process of cremation commenced.

"Cremate" is defined: "To burn and reduce to the smallest possible quantity of ashes a dead human body." That was the disposition made of the body I followed into the crematory. The gas used is manufactured from wood. It requires but a few hours to make ashes of the body of a man or woman. The ashes gathered from the iron couch may be inclosed in a small glass [illegible] casket, the [illegible] weighing only [illegible] a hundred feet of the crematory is a larger and more imposing building than the [illegible] of cremation. In it are the ashes of many [illegible] citizens, so arranged that surviving [illegible] can go directly to them.

I have known of a lady who received a telegram announcing the death of an amiable daughter in a distant state. The next day a telegram announcing that the daughter would be cremated that day. Before announcing that fact to the mother her husband asked his wife: "What do you think of cremation?" She replied: "I think it is terrible. They are not going to cremate our daughter, are they?" The husband replied: "Yes; here is a telegram announcing the fact." Then she said: "Don't tell me the time. I do not want to know when it will occur. It is terrible."

That night she said to her husband: "A great change has come over me as to cremation—so great that I will always think of our daughter as if she has ascended to heaven. I will never associate her with the grave."

JOTTINGS FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, always in labors abundant, has just concluded a good meeting in Meridian, and is now in Memphis on a similar mission.

Rev. S. L. Pope recently paid a brief visit to his mother, who resides in Tuskeegee, Ala. She would be proud, indeed, of her boy, if she knew what his Brooksville people thought of him.

Pastor Clark is soon to begin a meeting at Second Church, Columbus, in which he will be assisted by his brother-in-law, Rev. T. B. Clifford, who was a business man in that city before beginning his ministerial career.

Brother John Thomas believes in revivals, prays for them and works for them himself and does even better than that, for he induces his members to do likewise. For some time before he began his meeting, now just closing, he held in person, or by proxy, numerous cottage prayer meetings all over West Point. At these the burden of the petition was always for a great revival of religion. Needless to say the prayers helped to answer themselves, for all who joined in this work—and there were many—were revived and refreshed in their own lives and set more earnestly to work. Safe to say that the Church was built up, and the pastor's heart gladdened by the birth of many souls—work which will abide because securely founded.

Ripley and New Albany. Such used to be the name of one of the most desirable charges in the northern part of the State. But the latter has grown wonderfully in recent years, and the people called Methodists thought the time was ripe for them to set up for themselves, and now we have two good charges instead of one. At Ripley the pilgrim had the good fortune to be domiciled with that sturdy Christian veteran, Dr. Murry, whence the contact with that home life sent him home a better man, thankful that such hallowed spots exist in this world of sinful indifference and ambitious greed. A night spent under the parsonage roof added to the pleasure of his visit, and brought him under extended obligation to a preacher who had already been so clever as a man need ever be. Burks is a noble fellow; studious, thoughtful, modest, guileless, and people qualified to judge say he preaches capitally. We shall hear much from him some of these days.

Brother Campbell, of Edwards, and Brother Mollard, of Morton, were so exceedingly kind to me that I can not fail to mention them in grateful acknowledge of their courtesies. Each blessed with a good wife and the quality of hospitality these good women dispense is calculated to gladden the guest fortunate enough to encumber it and cheer his heart for days to come. These are compact charges with cultured constituencies, and both pastors seem to be laboring zealously and planning wisely for the advancement of the cause committed to them. They are both clever men and deserve their success. Passing on to Hickory, Professor Hopkins was found to be making a success of his Sunday school, bringing into it the efficient management and teaching ability which has made a successful educator in public school work. One people need to realize that the same children are in both schools and that the general principles of teaching are identical, the main difference being in the vastly greater importance of the knowledge which is sought to be imparted in the Sunday school and the painfully inferior opportunity and equipment with which it must work. Since we can have the children but an insignificant part of their time, do we not owe it to them and to God that we utilize these precious moments at least as systematically and as intelligently as is done in the school to which they go so much more? It should be the ambition of every Sunday school to do as thorough work in its sphere as the day school of its community does in its own field, and to this end every good plan and method used there should be adapted and adopted, if at all practicable.

THE FREE KINDERGARTEN.

Many of our criminals date their downfall from the time when, as idle children of the city streets, they became corrupted by evil associations and grew familiar with vice in its many forms.

The free kindergarten is a wonderful agency in the prevention of just such conditions as these. Where it exists life is projected upon a higher plane and there are no police recruits from its ranks. Judge N. B. Feagan says that out of 3000 children who have attended the kindergartens in Birmingham, Ala., in the five years they have been opened, not one has ever been arraigned in the police courts.

The free kindergarten takes the idle child and puts him to work in a way that interests and entertains him, while it instructs and develops. It trains ignorance into intelligence, clumsy fingers into skilful hands, wayward natures into souls ennobled, and transforms threatened burdens into social helpers.

GATHERING THE FRAGMENTS.

Two Indian women in Oklahoma gathered up a cart load of old bones, drove sixty miles to a railroad station, where they sold their load for $300. They returned and gave the whole amount to the church.

The Tacoma smelter is making a fortune by saving precious metals that have hitherto been carried away in smoke from its furnaces. Since this discovered a way to collect these particles the result has been a harvest of gold, copper, and silver.

In Louisiana they have learned to use the bagasse, or refuse, from the sugar-houses, to make a most excellent quality of paper.

Are there not many fragments that home mission workers can gather up? Fragments of time, of wasted opportunities, of talents, of persistent endeavor and achievements? These carefully garnered can be transmuted into treasures incorruptible that fade not away.

PERSONALS.

As a tribute of their affection and in appreciation for the faithful service she has given the society for many years, the members of the Rayne Memorial Auxiliary bestowed a certificate of life membership upon their President, Mrs. F. E. Russ.

It will be good news for all our members to hear that Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, Conference Corresponding Secretary, has recovered from her recent illness and expects to attend the meeting of the Board of Home Missions in Asheville, April 26. Her daughter, Mrs. C. Girard will accompany her.

The address of our new Treasurer of the City Mission Board, Mrs. F. H. Hobbs, is 1432 Felicity St. Please send all money for the missionary's salary or city mission work to her.

A SILVER WEDDING.

On the evening of March 2 Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Carnes, of Kosciusko, Miss., celebrated their silver wedding. Quite a large crowd was in attendance to enjoy the pleasant occasion. Dr. Carnes has for many years been a faithful and efficient steward in the Methodist Church. He has been the preacher's friend and adviser, and is at this time one of the stanchest supporters of the Kosciusko Methodist Church. His wide acquaintance, both in the Mississippi Conference and his own, gives to this pleasant incident more than a passing interest to many of the readers of the Advocate.

The palatial home had been tastefully decorated for the occasion, and many handsome and valuable presents attested the popularity of the "silver" bride and groom. At the appointed hour one of the daughters played the familiar strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, and the happy couple, preceded by their pastor, marched into the parlor, where, under a huge silver bell, they faced the audience while the preacher pronounced the following ceremony:

"Dear friends, we have gathered here this evening in accordance with an invitation previously sent out to join in celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Carnes. The Good Book tells us that marriage is an honorable estate, instituted by God in the time of man's innocency, signifying unto us the mystical union which is between Christ and his Church; which holy estate Christ ordained and beautified with his presence and first miracle which he wrought in Cana of Galilee, and is spoken of by the apostle as being honorable among all men. Both the Church and the State have given their sanction to marriage, and have invested it with all the romance of sentiment and all the beauty and fragrance of spring time. In the home where man is master and woman queen, our civilization finds its highest illustration and our religion its most congenial clime.

"We are glad to be permitted to join in the happy celebration of this silver wedding. Twenty-five years of married life! Twenty-five years of joyous and hallowed companionship, sharing each other's sorrows and doubling each other's joys. Along the cool, sequestered vale of life, you have kept the noiseless tenor of your way. You have now come to middle life. God has been good to you. Your friends gather this evening to congratulate you on attaining unto this half-way station in the journey of life, and we indulge the hope that the last half of your voyage over the sea of life shall be made under still more pleasant skies, with all the tides gentle and all the breezes soft. May your children gladden, with their songs of praise and words of gratitude and lives of usefulness, every step of the remaining journey, and may earth's richest and rarest flowers spring up to greet you day by day as you pass on toward the golden gate of life. With gratitude to God for his abundant mercies through twenty-five years, you now have the earnest wish of all your friends, that many, many more years shall be allotted to you in which to serve your day and generation, ere the silver cord shall be loosed or the golden bowl be broken.

"I congratulate you both, and pray heaven's richest blessings upon you."

Congratulations and refreshments followed. Rev. Eugene Johnson was present, and prayed an appropriate prayer at the table. After another hour of music and social enjoyment, the friends bade the happy couple "good-night," wishing for them a long life.

Why don't people take more time in this busy world to make glad with their friends? Life would be much richer and sweeter, heaven would be brought nearer, and life itself become one "grand, sweet song."

Let the silver and golden weddings multiply!

OUR DEPARTED BISHOP.

Dear Doctor: At Ocean Springs, Miss., the summer home of our late Senior Bishop, the First Quarterly Conference, moved with deep regret by the death of Bishop Keener, and sincere sympathy for his bereaved family, appointed Dr. Shannon and myself to express their sentiments in suitable resolutions. These have been somewhat delayed by the continued illness of the doctor.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our beloved Senior Bishop, J. C. Keener, ripe in years, rich in good works, honored and beloved, has in the providence of God, been removed from his beautiful summer home in our community, to his home in the Father's house; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Quarterly Conference of Ocean Springs, deeply deplore his loss—not only as does the Church at large—but as faithful friend and substantial helper of our local church and community.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family of Bishop Keener; that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to them; a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and that they be spread upon the Journal of the Conference.

DR. HARVEY SHANNON,
H. R. SINGLETON.

THE ADVOCATE AND ELSE.

Dear Advocate: Your face shines, your editorials sparkle, your columns full of valuable reading, and you are growing more and more in favor with the people. I am glad to furnish you with a large list of new readers from Itta Bena. Your coming helps my people, helps me. You help all the pastors wherever you go. Here's to you for continued success.

You may say to your thousands of interested readers that Itta Bena Station is "O. K." The salaries more than paid up to date, the hard cash coming in on the Conference collections, some new fencing done on the parsonage, and a nice little sum of money raised for the poor of the Church. Fine congregations, lots of enthusiasm; twelve new members; a large Junior Epworth League organized; the Sunday school and various societies of the church doing well. In fact, lots of our Delta people really enjoy the "old time religion." A mighty good people they are.

LEONARD W. CAIN.

Troubles will come which look as if they would never pass away. The night and the storm look as if they would last forever, but the calm and the morning cannot be stayed; the storm, in its very nature, is transient. The efforts of nature, as that of the human heart, ever is to return to its repose, for God is peace.—G. McDonald.

CONFERENCE AT ITTA BENA.

The Winona District Conference is to be held at Itta Bena, April 17-19, and will be entertained by our good people with hearty hospitality. The doors of our homes will be thrown back on their hinges, the keys thrown over, and the Conference given the right of way to the best we have. A full attendance is desired, and those who come will be well cared for.

Let the pastors who intend bringing their wives, and any who may be coming by private conveyance, please notify me at the very earliest date possible, and oblige,

LEONARD W. CAIN, Pastor.

WHERE WOMAN IS SUPREME.

I care not what a woman's rank in this world may be, there is one place that will always be subject to her sway, wise or foolish, competent or confused, and that place is the home. Here she must set the tone and make the rules, and guide the flow of daily life, else all must run haphazard, discordant and astray.

I remember a passage in Goethe's Wilhelm Meister in which the household supremacy of woman is well described. "The man," says he, "must busy himself with outside relations, he must get together the property and take care of it, he must sometimes participate in public affairs; and always he finds himself dependent upon circumstances, he does not really rule even the things which he fancies are under his control. He has to be polite where he would like to be reasonable, cautious where he would like to be frank—sometimes it seems as if he were forced to be untrue where he would like to be perfectly honest. For the sake of some end, which often he fails to reach, he has to sacrifice the fairest thing of all—harmony with himself. Meantime the sensible and reasonable woman really rules within the house, and makes every activity and every satisfaction possible for the whole family. What regular and serene action is needed to carry through the ever-recurring movements of the household, in an unbroken and living order of succession from day to day, how much is it given her to move from its orbit and to rule by the day and the hour! When a woman does comprehend and cherish her inner rulership she is dependent on no one, and she confers upon her husband [illegible] which is [illegible]."

But the wisdom, the tact and firmness which are needed for a right and gentle sovereignty are not to be picked up in the street, or acquired by the hasty reading of a Hand-book of Household Economy which some thoughtful friend has slipped in among wedding presents. They must be gained, it seems to me, in a place like that in which they are one day to be exercised. And if none are fit to rule but those who have first learned to obey, then the girl who is ever to be worthy of the rulership of a household is best educated in the obedience of a home.

No other element in her education has a value quite equal to this. If she misses the gentle daily restraint which is imposed upon all by the necessities of a peaceful and well-balanced home life, if she is never taught to submit her impulse and caprice to the simple rules that maintain the common order of the household, if she gets no personal experience of the value of such plain and homely virtues as punctuality and obligingness, if she does not learn that the affection and gratitude of those who are the nearest to her are worth more than the admiration of strangers or the applause of the crowd, if she grows up ignorant or careless of the true meaning of a mother's approval and a father's pride—she suffers the one great loss which will be more difficult than all others to make up. I do not say that it will be impossible. I do not deny that there are some fine and noble women whose girlhood has been deprived, through misfortune or through the sin of others, of the true influence of a home, but who have happily retrieved the loss. Nor do I ignore the fact that there are a few old-fashioned schools whose honor it is that they do something to correct the faults which run wild in the daughters of a loveless and orderless home. But the teachers of those schools will tell you that it is hard work. And this I say without hesitation: eliminate training of a real home from the life of the average girl, and you make it far less likely that she will find or follow the way of true womanhood.

But if she comes from the purity and joy of such a home, cherishing its traditions, remembering with gratitude its lessons and its pleasures, it will be strange if she does not bring with her the secret of its charm and the power to perpetuate its dominion. Wherever she goes it will go with her, this gentle sovereignty won through obedience and self-surrender, like a shimmering aureole, half saintly and half queenly. The fine observances of courtesy will follow her footsteps, and the strength of honest manhood will be ready to protect her from all insult and harm. She may hold her court in a cabin, and no one will enter it without feeling the beauty of her sway. Her fireside hearth may be lit beneath the roof of stars, and the canopy of her rest may be the green boughs of a forest tree, but the comfort of her presence will be the light of the camp, and the kindness of her heart will encircle it with peace. No change of outward circumstance can estrange or bewilder her, no threatening storm or darkness of night can break in upon the sense of security that surrounds her. [illegible] her quiet [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1906.

The law requiring men to love God also requires them to love each other. The law likewise declares, "If a man say, I love God, and does not love his brother, he is a liar." Words can be no plainer.

* * *

It sounds like irony to talk about creating "a tolerant and Christian spirit among Christians." Or, is it true that Christians are so bitter and intolerant towards each other that it really requires federation to keep down ill-will and strife?

* * *

Christians cannot be too careful of temper and tongue in the midst of gainsayers and faultfinders, not one of whom is charitable or discriminating in judgment. In their eyes one Christian is simply the duplicate of another, and the misconduct of one leads them to misjudge all. Hence the importance of walking in wisdom towards men on the outside.

* * *

The successful efforts at Church federation made by various bodies of Christians has opened the eyes of some Roman Catholics to the possibilities of the movement. At least one has gone so far as to say that "our twentieth century may witness the reunion of Christendom." That is a broader view than even the most ardent federationist has ventured to suggest.

* * *

Young converts need the counsel and help of older Christians. They do not always yield to temptation through desire to go back to the world. Satan takes advantage of the weakness of the flesh when the desire is to continue in the right. St. Paul's exhortation to the strong was, "ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted."

* * *

If ever men needed caution on the subject of getting and using money, they need it now. The methods successfully employed by men of easy conscience, and the use to which they are putting their gains we fear will weaken the moral sense of those who heretofore have been content with the old ways, and the slow but sure returns for their labor. Too many already see no harm in risking a few dollars where there is a chance of making many. The underlying principle of "getting something for nothing," which is wrong, is forgotten.

WORK FOR THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Comparatively few suggestions are being made as to what the approaching General Conference should do. As far as we have seen, nearly everything proposed has been proposed before, and voted down. The things are pet schemes, and those who foster them seem to feel duty-bound to keep them before the Church. Nobody feels uneasy. Those who have plans know the Church will not go to pieces if they fail again, and those who oppose feel sure that they cannot pass. But nobody feels indifferent.

The suggestion most frequently made is as to the desirability of abolishing the time-limit of the pastorate. No new arguments have been advanced, but one old one is being made to do duty for all it is worth. Those who favor the abolition are centering their strength around the "down-town church," as if no other churches in the connection were worthy of consideration. They would make believe that if a down-town church has a pastor with the work well in hand, or important enterprises just inaugurated, it is almost death to make a change. But when we look about for the lifeless remains of such churches as have had a change of pastors we fail to find them. The churches live on, and quite as often as otherwise, under a new pastor—notwithstanding he is a stranger—they take on new life. All such talk is about as reasonable as to talk about the Government going to pieces because we change Presidents at the end of a time limit. The most ardent admirer of Mr. Roosevelt would have no fear for the safety of the Government, if to-morrow Mr. Fairbanks were called to take his place. The Government is not so weak as all that. Nor is the Church weak.

Do away with the time limit, or make an exception of down-town churches, we would soon have more down-town churches than we could well handle. They would become very popular, and we would have among us a class of preachers, both in fact and in name. But they would not be itinerants. It is true that to abolish the time limit would not violate any principle of our economy, but the rule is working well, and there is no widespread demand for a change—not even in the cities.

There are a few among us who would like to see the presiding eldership abolished. Some would like to see the office mangled to death by making the presiding elder merely the president of the Quarterly Conference, and at the same time appoint him to a charge and let him look to the charge for support. This is so manifestly incongruous, not to say absurd, that it finds little favor. Others would minify the office by enlarging the districts to fifty or sixty appointments, thus giving him so little time at a given place that he would never be felt. Still others would change the law so as not to allow a man to serve longer than four or eight years in succession in the office. It is safe to say that none of these changes will be made.

There are some among us who desire a modification of the Episcopacy. They would elect Bishops for four years only, thus ignoring and destroying the original idea of our Episcopacy. They would also largely curtail Episcopal authority, under the guise of relieving the Bishops of responsibility. This they would do by giving the Annual Conference power to elect the presiding elders, and making them the Bishop's legal advisers—no appointment to be made except by a majority vote of the cabinet. Those who make these suggestions seem not to know that the battle over them was fought three generations ago, and that they cannot be legalized without first changing our Third Restrictive Rule, which forbids the General Conference to "change or alter any part or rule of our government, so as to do away with the Episcopacy, or destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency." We may, therefore, rest quietly over these suggestions.

Such are the principal suggestions as to changes in our economy. Other interests of the Church will be looked after—our mission enterprises, Sunday school and general educational work, publishing interests, etc. Changes may be made for the better, but there will probably be no radical departure from present plans, except perhaps in the matter of our newspapers, in reference to which the idea of centralization is popular. Something looking in this direction will be proposed.

Many brethren have thoughts as to what Israel ought to do in other departments. They are making no suggestions. When the time comes they will bring them forth—some wise, and some otherwise. Some will be accepted, but the great majority will find a quietus in the committee-room.

DECLINE OF THE RELIGIOUS LIFE OF THE HOME.

It has been affirmed that the religious life of the home for the past twenty-five years has distinctly declined. This means, if it means anything, that the personal religion of parents is not as conspicuous and as influential in the household to-day as in former years. Of course, we do not mean as offensively conspicuous as was the religion of the Scribes and Pharisees. That never was the case among genuine Christians. We mean so conspicuous in the government of tongue and temper, and in the observance of religious duties as to be observed by every member of the family. In this sense our Lord justifies a full exhibition of one's religion. A Christian is fatally recreant to duty who does not at all times and everywhere, at home as well as abroad, exemplify the doctrines of the Gospel.

The decline of family religion means that there has been a failure to instruct the children. No duty of parents is more clearly commanded than this. The time was, and not very far back, when this was the rule in Methodist households. In many families the children were gathered together, especially in the evening, and all engaged in worship. Nothing was better adapted to impress youthful minds and hearts. The Sabbath was a day for general instruction—if not by catechising, it was by reading the Scriptures and singing. Books adapted to young people were largely read. The "Dairyman's Daughter," "Peep of Day," "Precept Upon Precept," "Pilgrim's Progress," and others that might be named, were popular and useful. They are out of date, but have been superseded by others—perhaps as good, but not better. If they are not put into the children's hands, "sin lieth at the door."

If there has been a decline in family religion—let every father answer for himself—how shall we account for it. Shall we attribute it to a decline in personal piety? This is not affirmed. Christian parents are perhaps as consistent now as at former periods. In some things there has been improvement. Do we miss the mark when we say, parents attaching importance to the Sunday school, and turning over to it the instruction of their children, have not felt the importance of home training, as did their fathers, before the Sunday school afforded such help as this? This, whether it accounts for the decline or not, is a fatal mistake.

If fathers and mothers are not as actively religious at home as they should be, and do not diligently instruct their children in the knowledge of God, how will they answer at the bar of final judgment?

PERSONAL

Rev. A. J. Townsley, of Second Church, Baton Rouge, preached Sunday morning last for the Carrollton Avenue congregation, in New Orleans.

We are under obligation to Rev. J. F. Cunningham, our excellent pastor at Aberdeen, for a fine list of new subscribers to the Advocate. His work in behalf of the paper is highly appreciated.

A note from Rev. J. M. Morse, Presiding Elder of the Forest District, informs us that Rev. J. R. Hayes has been appointed to Harperville Circuit, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Rev. Irvin Miller.

Our Church at Centreville, Miss., under the pastoral care of Rev. W. H. Saunders, is prosperous. Matters are in fine shape, and Brother Saunders is in a fine humor. We trust he may have an abundant harvest.

Rev. Irvin Miller, a faithful local preacher, in charge of Harperville Circuit, who has been sick a long time, passed to his reward on the 20th of this month. A good man has left us. Rev. M. L. White promises a suitable memoir, some time in the future.

We acknowledge an invitation to a reception to be given by Mrs. W. W. Carre, to meet Rev. and Mrs. Henry Beach Carre, on Friday evening, the 30th inst. Brother Carre was married to Miss Mary Vaughan, of Nashville, Tenn., on the 20th May; a long life, with the blessings of grace and Providence, be theirs!

Rev. W. W. Holmes, of Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, will begin a series of meetings on the evening of March 28, to be continued until the opening of the District Conference in his Church the following Wednesday. Brother S. J. Parrish, Pastor of Parker Memorial Church, will do the preaching.

Rev. T. H. Clifford, at Columbia, Miss., is successful in his work. He has raised in full assessments for Bishops, conference claimants, foreign missions and American Bible Society, and has made partial payment on domestic missions assessment. He hopes to have the deck fully cleared by the time of his Second Quarterly Conference.

It has been announced that Andrew Carnegie has given $15,000 for the building at Millsaps College of a handsome library, and that Major R. W. Millsaps has made an endowment of $15,000 towards its support, and the news was received with much joy. A committee has been appointed to convey to these gentlemen the grateful appreciation felt by the College for the gift.

The meeting at Felicity Street Church, New Orleans, now going on, under the preaching of Rev. R. R. Jones, has developed in interest and promises great good. We read appreciative notices of the work in the daily papers, but nothing of the number of converts, or the number added to the Church. The pastor, Rev. L. P. Craddock, will favor us with the information at the close of the services.

A telegram from Rev. J. A. Bowen, Winona, Miss., informs us of the death of Sister Ritchey, wife of Rev. John Ritchey, of the North Mississippi Conference. This sad event occurred on Sunday, at 9 p.m., March 24. Our bereaved brother, true and faithful, will have the sympathy of his many friends, and the consolation of that religion he so confidently presents to others. A memoir of our departed sister we trust will be sent to the Advocate.

We rejoice in the great success of Dr. W. C. Black in his important charge, Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss. Writing under date of March 10, he says: "We have had fifty-nine accessions at Court Street since Conference. There have been one or more accessions every Sabbath since the beginning of the year. Our Sunday School is remarkably flourishing. The attendance has steadily increased week by week, until it is now about 50 per cent greater than ever before."

Dr. Edward L. McGehee, Jr., who has been engaged in the practice of medicine with his father in New Orleans, has recently moved to Hammond, a thriving town on the Illinois Central Railroad, where a fine opening is presented to him for his chosen work. It is probable that, in addition to the practice of medicine, he will establish a large sanitarium. Hammond is in the ozone region of Louisiana, a good place to establish a home for invalids. No family is more widely or better known than the McGehee family, and the young doctor, we dare say, will maintain the character and reputation of his fathers. We trust he may meet with abundant success in his new home.

The first of a series of Sunday School Institutes inaugurated by the Sunday School Board of the Louisiana Conference was held in Rayne Memorial Church March 23-25, for the special benefit of workers in the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts. The Institute was conducted by Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Hamill. To those who know these excellent specialists in Sunday school work it is needless to say anything by way of commendation. Being out of the city during the time, except the last service, it was not our privilege to attend. The short, but appreciative reports of the work given by the daily papers afford but little idea of what was done. We expect a competent hand to give us a full report in due time.

The following notice of the death of an elect lady is furnished us by the Pastor, Rev. Jno. C. Sligh: "The pastor and members of the Louisiana Avenue Church feel deeply the loss of a saintly and useful member in the death of Miss Mary Keen, who departed this life on March 15, and was laid to rest from her residence at 1247 Laurel Street the following day. Her father, Richard Keen, years ago, organized the Sunday School out of which Louisiana Avenue Church was developed, and raised the greater part of the money for the wooden building which is now used as a Sunday School room. Miss Mary Keen was born in 1830, and has been a member of the Church since childhood. She took a Sunday School class at an early age, and was always a helpful member of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, and a worker for city missions. Her sweet serenity and uncomplaining spirit were marked characteristics, especially during the last ten years of invalidism. She hath done what she could.' And, although she leaves sorrowing loved ones and friends, she has gone to a happy reunion with dear ones in the better world."

ROYAL Baking Powder

Absolutely Pure

A GRAPE CREAM OF TARTAR BAKING POWDER

It makes the most delicious and healthful hot breads, biscuit and cake

FREE FROM ALUM, LIME OR PHOSPHATIC ACID

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Alum baking powders are unhealthful. Do not use them for raising food under any circumstances. So detrimental are alum baking powders considered, that in most foreign countries their sale is prohibited. In many States in this country the law compels alum powders to be branded to show that they contain this dangerous acid, while in the District of Columbia, Congress has prohibited the sale of all food that contains alum.

Alum baking powders are sold to consumers at from 10 cents a pound to 25 ounces for 25 cents, or 25 cents a pound, and when not branded may generally be distinguished by their price.

BOONEVILLE STATION.

If one wants to reach the garden spot of the earth let him transfer to the M. & O. at some of its junction points and invest in a ticket to Booneville.

Booneville has a Methodist Church of close to three hundren members, and a working force second to none in the State. When I reached here this winter the Presiding Elder said: "You have a very plucky congregation." I found his statements true to the letter. "We will follow, lead on," is the attitude of nearly all the membership. With such a membership a pastor deserves little or no credit for accomplishments. If some remarkable things have been accomplished here since Conference it should be understood that this is a congregation that will accomplish things, preacher or no preacher.

Before I left of our work I must mention my predecessor, our beloved physician and brother, Dr. Wier. The influence of his gentle, sweet spirit remains in the hearts of the people, an impression that enters with subtle and penetrative force into all their thoughts. Dr. Wier is one of the best of preachers to follow. Flowers in the front yard, strawberry beds and turnips in the garden, and fruit trees all around establish his right to the reputation he has won as one of the best care-takers a parsonage ever had.

One of the first things that needed attention was a debt of nearly a thousand dollars on the parsonage. Over two thousand had been paid on the church the year before. Bishop Galloway came and spent a Sunday with us. He preached with his usual grace and power, dedicated the church, and raised almost the whole indebtedness on the parsonage. The small balance is now in sight.

Our Sunday school has taken a new lease on life. Brother Gresham, the faithful superintendent, has held his place for thirty years, but is alive and on the alert for any new and helpful method. The Sunday school has more than doubled its average attendance. We have a teachers' meeting twice a month, in which the teachers do first-class Bible study and teacher training work. Forty dollars has been raised for the refitting of the pastor's study and the infant class room. In addition to this the Epworth League raised twenty-five dollars for the same purpose.

God has given us a deep hold on the young people. Our League's devotional exercises are spiritual feasts, so full of power and the spirit of devotion. The charity and help committee is especially active, visiting the sick, carrying flowers to deck their rooms, helping the unfortunate, and making themselves useful in many ways. There are several white men in the jail and work has been started for them, the League and the pastor co-operating. A Junior League has just been organized under the leadership of Mrs. Harbin, and the little folks are taking great interest in their League.

The women of the Church have both the missionary societies well officered and accomplishing good work. The Home Mission Society added $60.00 in furniture to the parsonage shortly after the arrival of the present pastor. Other repairs and additions have been made on the parsonage property.

While all these special works have been accomplished, the regular work of the Church has not been neglected. The pastor's salary has been paid in full to date, and over a third of the Conference collections have been raised. Thirteen members have been received into the Church, three marriages celebrated, four infants baptized, one funeral conducted, and over three hundred pastoral visits made.

We are all very grateful to God for His goodness, very busy trying to improve the opportunities that He has given us, and very prayerful for a great revival of religion among us.

WALTER G. HARBIN.

PLEA FOR A REVIVAL.

To the New Orleans Christian Advocate and its Dear Readers: Why should not this year be one of the best in the history of the Church?

If every preacher will get out of himself, and get in Christ and have Christ in him in the person of the Holy Spirit, and feed the sheep, and the sheep will go out and eat and drink, we will have lambs born into the fold. It has been so long since I saw a new-born sheep that I could be glad indeed to see one young lamb in the flock.

May the Lord bless every preacher of Methodism this year and every member of the Church, and may both preacher and people agonize and pray until the Church shall travail, and bring forth sons and daughters.

Oh, that we all could see the worth of an immortal soul as plainly as we can see other things! Would we not agonize and pray like Jacob of old? Brother Preacher, look at the poor man dying in his sins, and others starving for the want of spiritual food. Warn the sinner of his danger and feed the starving Christian on the precious promises of God, and let the members hold up the preacher's hands. For this kind of work God will open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing on the Church that it will not be able to hold.

Get the preacher happy and he will preach and the people rejoice. Get the members happy and they will pray and pay, and the Church will prosper on every line. May the Lord bless the Church this year and the children of God be greatly increased, is the prayer of your humble servant.

RARE OPPORTUNITY TO WORK WAY IN COLLEGE.

We can give right away a job, until September to carpenters bricklayers and day laborers to help defray expenses in college. Write M. A. Beeson, President, Meridian Male College, Meridian, Miss.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

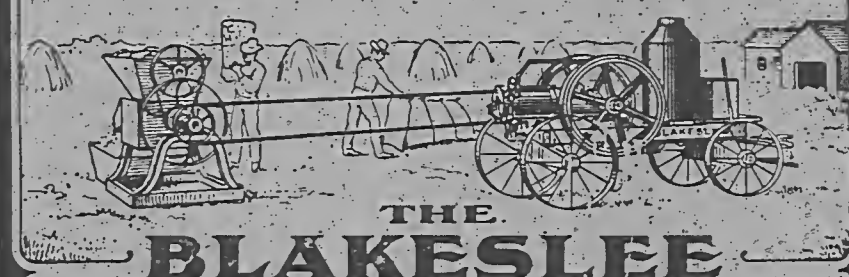
F. O. B. YOUNG'S ISLAND, S. C. My Special Express Rate on Plants is Very Low.

Guarantee I guarantee Plants to give purchaser satisfaction, or will refund the purchase price to any customer who is dissatisfied at end of season. These plants are grown in the open field, on Seacoast of South Carolina, in a climate that is just suited to growing the hardiest plants that can be grown in the United States. These plants can be reset in the interior of the Southern States during the months of January, February, and March. They will stand severe cold without being injured, and will mature a head of Cabbage Two to Three weeks sooner than if you grew your own plants in hot beds and cold frames.



My Largest Customers are the Market Gardeners near the interior towns and cities of the South. Their profit depends upon them having Early Cabbage; for that reason they purchase my plants for their crops.

I also grow a full line of other Plants and Fruit Trees, such as Strawberry, Sweet Potato, Tomato, Egg Plant and Pepper Plants; Apple, Peach, Pear, Plum, Cherry and Apricot Trees, Fig Bushes, and Grape Vines.

Special terms to persons who make up club orders. Write for illustrated catalogue.

COMMITTEE MEETING.

Mississippi Conference Church Extension.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Conference held its annual meeting at the First Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., on March 8, and was in session until noon of that day.

With delightful forethought, Dr. LaPrade had ordered the sexton to prepare the Church for the use of the Committee. When we entered the parlor, just in the rear of the Church, we were greeted with two glowing fires, but, better still, with a hearty welcome by Dr. LaPrade himself.

In a little while Mrs. Galloway came over and called this scribe out to invite us to dine with the Bishop and herself, but, as promises were already out to Dr. LaPrade, the company divided, Bros. Burton and Sullivan dining at the Bishop's, while Bros. Williams, Adams, Grice, Forman and the writer broke bread at the parsonage.

It was the regret of all that Brother Crisler was called away to care for his little boy, whom he had brought to Jackson for medical treatment. It has been a saying of mine that if a Methodist preacher went into Jackson and got out without an invitation to the Bishop's home, it was because he did not meet either the Bishop or Mrs. Galloway.

Now I've got to add to that saying (for at least three years longer). It will read: If a Methodist preacher goes into Jackson, and is not invited to the Brothers Burton, Adams, Sullivan, because he did not meet the Bishop, Mrs. Galloway, Dr. LaPrade or Mrs. LaPrade.

By the way, there are two other Jackson homes where the latch-string is kept on the outside for Methodist preachers—the district and West Jackson parsonages.

Four presiding elders and three pastors were before the Committee representing their claims—Dr. Watkins, Revs. Bus Burton, Adams, Sullivan, Guice and Ward. Our prophecy that the elder's harness would fit Burton admirably we found verified. His head was the same size as when we saw him last as a pastor. He was the same genial, wide-awake Methodist preacher. His account of the progress in the Seashore District was really wonderful to hear, and one-half the applications indorsed are for that district.

The following applications were indorsed and have been forwarded to Dr. Whisner:

Pass Christian, $200; Saucier, $150; Longbeach, $250; Carriere, $500; Fayette, $500; Pinola, $100; South Side Meridian, $500, also a loan of $1,000; Pearl Haven, $400.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MADE PRACTICABLE.

Little has been done up to the present time toward providing the Sunday schools with such helps as would make it generally practicable for the Sunday School Missionary Societies to become an educational force. Many schools can do little in the way of missionary educational work until the proper helps are provided. Sunday school workers will doubtless welcome the effort to supply such helps. The Board of Missions desires to serve the Sunday schools by providing literature and other material for those having the missionary work of the Sunday school in charge.

Several complete sets of helps for public missionary exercises of the Sunday school and for the missionary work of the Primary Department have been provided through the Young People's Department of the Board and are now offered to the Sunday school workers of the Church.

Special attention is called to the helps for the Primary Department which are prepared according to the object-lesson method of the kindergarten and include picture stories, picture cards and a box of Japanese curios; a booklet of suggestions for the teachers of the Primary Department is furnished with each box of curios.

A descriptive catalogue of all these Sunday school missionary helps will be sent free to any address. Order of the Young People's Department, Board of Missions, 346 Public Square, Nashville, Tenn.

NEW AUGUSTA, MISS.

Dear Brother Boswell: Rev. G. R. Ellis, of Seminary, Miss., who visited the holy land in 1904, delivered two lectures at New Augusta March 2-3, to the great delight of those who were fortunate enough to hear him. In his lectures he simply invites his hearers to accompany him and sets before them in a pleasing way what he saw and learned. As he is now on the "Honor Roll" of the Conference, a Superannuate, he can do much good and help his brethren by delivering these lectures. After deducting traveling expenses, he divides the funds received equally, giving our half to aid in missionary or other church work. We hope to have him again at other points in the bounds of the New Augusta charge. Ours is a new and undeveloped section, mainly new comers and transient people constituting the bulk of our population. We are in great need of houses of worship and are hoping to build at some points during the year. Our greatest need, however, is a Scriptural revival. Brethren, pray the Lord in our behalf that the work of the Lord may prosper among us. Yours in Christ,

C. H. ELLIS.

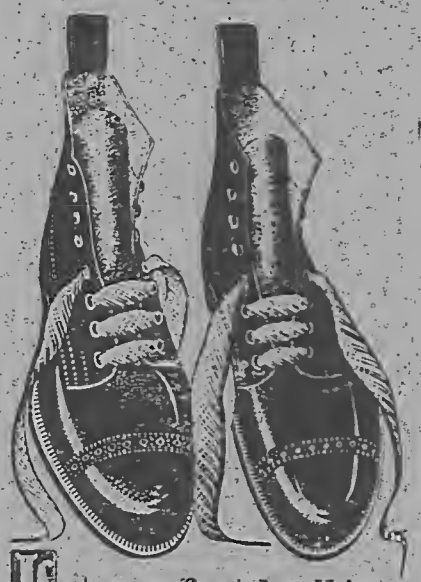
CORNER-STONE LAYING.



The corner-stone of the new First Church now going up on St. Charles Avenue was laid Tuesday, at 4 p.m., March 27, 1906. The ceremonies were impressive, participated in by Bishop Morrison, Rev. H. G. Davis, the presiding elder; Rev. J. E. Wray, the pastor, Rev. H. B. Carre, Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer, and Rev. Theodore Copeland. One of the Stewards, Mr. Speer, read a short history of the Church, giving the locality of the various houses of worship occupied by the congregation, from the beginning up to the present time, together with a list of all the pastors. Mr. W. W. Carre deposited numerous articles in the box, including a Bible, Hymn Book, Discipline, list of officials, newspapers, etc. Bishop Morrison laid the stone, and made the address—a talk full of encouragement to the congregation now undertaking a great work.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

To the Pastors of the Louisiana Annual Conference: All pastors needing Sunday-school literature and supplies for needy Sunday school and mission work throughout the State can obtain same by applying to the Conference Chairman; and having said application endorsed by the presiding elder.

The Sunday School Board is ready to send to all pastors so wishing a full supply of Sunday school Children's Days programmes, should the pastor wish to hold this service. The same may be had on application. The pastor so applying is to hold the service and forward the collection to Rev. A. S. J. Neille, at Lake Providence, La., who is the Conference Treasurer.

Respectfully, JNO. F. FOSTER.

JESUS AND THE SABBATH.

Golden Text: Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. (Ex. xx, 8.)

As far as the world is concerned we have no Sabbath. Works of so-called necessity have so encroached on that day that it is the same as any week-day. So much is this the case that some godly men have formed themselves into an association for the preservation of the Christian Sabbath. The desecration of the holy day began with works of necessity, until now in some sections the Sabbath is given over wholly to amusement, and to money-getting by those who furnish the amusement.

The setting apart of the Sabbath and the making of it a holy day was the first act of God for the benefit of man, after man had been created. It was setting an example to be followed, rather than giving a command to be followed, for God had spent the foregoing six days in creating the world and all that dwell therein. The command came at Sinai, and was given to a people who were journeying to a land of promised rest from servitude, to a people who had been long and cruelly held in abject slavery. They were ready to obey this commandment without a question. Yet when God said, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," he did not stop there, but continued to explain why the day must be observed.

Behold the goodness and mercy of God, in that the command and the reasons for obeying it have been preserved unto us of this day and time, and this, as is all other Scripture, is as applicable to us as it was to the children of Israel. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," because, as God worked six days and rested the seventh, so after six days of labor a rest is needed by man. It is necessary because God created the man and knew his requirements, so he created the Sabbath for those requirements. This commandment of Sabbath-keeping was most rigidly observed by the Israelites at all times, when they were not wholly taken up with idolatry, for when they neglected the first commandment they naturally ignored the third. Their children were to be taught to keep the Sabbath, and the servants were to do no work on that day—even the stranger that happened to stop for a short time was to observe the law, doing no work. There was reason in it all, even to the stranger, for he would wish to know the reason for this strange custom, and when he returned to his own country he would tell of the goodness of the God of Israel, and as he is the God of the whole earth, it may have been the means of making himself known to people who never knew of Moses and the Law.

So, through all the long years until Jesus came, was the observance of the Sabbath a national distinction of the Jewish people, as the observance of the same to-day is peculiarly a Christian custom.

Some of Christ's followers of to-day are over-much worried as to which day we shall keep—the old Seventh day, or the new first day. In Jesus' teaching in the lesson before us he lays particular stress on the spirit of the observance, and not on the letter. He came to fulfill this law, as well as the others. What great import there is in his assertion that he came to fulfill the law! Hitherto the people had relied on the Scribes to interpret the law to them, and their interpretation was strictly of the letter, and not at all of the spirit. But here comes Jesus, speaking to them of the law, "not as the Scribes, but as one having authority."

Peter and James and John and those others who had left all and followed him on that Sabbath morning were hungry when they plucked the ears of corn that were near the pathway and ate the grain. The Pharisees, ever ready to find fault with any who dared to instruct the people, asked, Why do they thus break the commandment of God? Jesus, after relating how David satisfied his hunger, even to eating the bread that was only lawful to be eaten by the priests, tells them that the Sabbath was made for man, and not that man was made for the Sabbath; man had wants and necessities that could be satisfied by the Sabbath, hence it was for man's good that God had set aside this day to be observed as the necessities of man required.

What, then, are we to learn from the teaching of our Lord are our necessities? Once, when the Lord was followed closely by the eager multitude, and his time and that of the disciples was wholly taken up with ministering unto the people in works of love and compassion, it happened that they had no time to stop and nourish their bodies. He said unto them: "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile." However good and praiseworthy the work engaged in, there was a time in the life of everyone when it is necessary to take himself away from the distracting influences of the world, and spend a while in sweet communion with the God of all comfort and love.

Then there is the necessity that we should have a time to teach those around us—the members of our own households, the way of life and truth; a time to attend the services of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ. Sabbath was made for those blessed duties, and man was not made to attend to those duties only on the Sabbath, but as we try to walk in the steps of Jesus and do the work he wants us to do, there is a time when we need rest even from this kind of work—rest for the body, that the mind may have time to dwell upon God and his goodness.

As for our rule for observing the Sabbath, let us follow the precept contained in the words of our Lord when he said: "It is lawful to do well (or good) on the Sabbath."

In this time those who keep the Sabbath are a little band, indeed, and many are the temptations to old and young to follow after the multitude, who regard not the Lord's day as they should.

O for the Sundays of olden time, when every preparation was made on the previous day for keeping holy the Sabbath! Let us have in mind this old-fashioned way of keeping the Sabbath day, and we will have nothing to fear from worldly examples that lead off to forgetfulness and disregard. May God help us to "seek the old paths," where his grace first found us, and where the Holy Spirit is ever present to "show us the things of Christ," who is "Lord also of the Sabbath day."

FROM THE COLPORTER'S DESK.

It was my pleasure to spend last Sunday and Monday in Vaiden, where I preached Sunday morning, talked to the Epworth League in the afternoon, and heard the pastor, Brother Evans, preach at night.

A good supply of the new Methodist Hymnal was placed in the church. Few copies sold to individuals and other profitable colportage work was done.

I enjoyed the kind hospitalities of Brother Evans and his new wife at the parsonage. Though Sister Evans has but recently joined the itinerant band, she is adapting herself well to all its interests and conditions and gives promise of being a useful acquisition. All who know her will welcome her reception at once into full connection. Brothers Shipman, Neblett and A. H. Williams are supplying the church and homes of their charges with the Methodist Hymnal. Let the good work go on until all are thus furnished.

Of Holiness Mission of the Holy Spirit, we produce the following from many testimonials:

The best I ever read on the subject.—Bishop Key.

A very thorough discussion of a very important subject.—Bishop Fitzgerald.

The author presents the Church with the mature fruits of his patient study.—Bishop Granbery.

The book will be of great and growing value to the Church. I will bring it to the attention of my preachers who revise it.—Bishop Joyce.

No book on this subject since "The Tongue of Fire," by William Arthur, has so interested me on this vital theme. It throbs with life and fire and is at the same time a logical argument that seems to me irrefutable.—Mrs. Bourkart.

It helped and instructed me greatly. It is so sound and reasonable and timely that it ought to be in every Methodist library and read by pastors and laity.—Prof. H. M. Hamill, D. D.

The regular price of this book is $1.25, but I am so anxious that every preacher should possess and read it that I will send it post paid for 85 cents per copy, at present. This offer is to laymen also, many of whom will do well to read it.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DAY.

To the Pastors and Leaguers of the North Mississippi Conference: Easter Sunday, or some Sunday as near thereto as practicable, is to be observed as Young People's or Epworth League Day.

Suitable programmes have been arranged for the day, and they may be had of B. P. Jaco, Grenada, Miss. The central office suggests the first Sunday in May, and I urge each pastor and Leaguer to select the most suitable day, and be sure to observe it. If you have no League, observe the day anyway. Have some of your young people to write an essay, make an address, sing a song, or take a collection. Do something. Emphasize the need of consecrated youthhood in the Church. Take a collection, retain half for home use, and send the other half to B. P. Jaco, Grenada, Miss., for Conference League work. Be sure to send representation to the great Mid-Year Conference, to be held at Greenada June 15-17.

T. W. LEWIS,
Chairman.

A CORRECTION.

In the report of the Joint Board of Finance to the last Session of the Mississippi Conference, which is published on page 33 of the Conference Journal, the Sea Shore District is credited with $1,220.10 on an assessment of $1,200.00 for conference claimants.

This is an error. The Sea Shore District paid $1,346.19. Neither the editor nor the publisher of the Journal are responsible for this error, but the Executive Committee of the Board, who prepared this report.

ABBEVILLE, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: This communication would have been sent several weeks ago, but sickness has prevented it. We were never more warmly received than we were by the people of Abbeville on our return for the third year. Congratulations on every hand by day and a "big pounding" at night.

The year opened very auspiciously, indeed. On the first Sunday after Conference I preached to one of the largest congregations ever assembled in our Church here. The congregation entered into our new order of service enthusiastically, and, after the sermon by the pastor, two young men and two boys, children of some of the leading members, joined the Church on profession of faith in Christ. I have baptized and received several since then. I rejoice to believe we are moving onward and upward spiritually. Bright indications for a successful year. Our first quarterly meeting passed off successfully. Our people are charmed with their new Presiding Elder, Brother F. N. Parker. My Stewards determined to raise the pastor's salary $125.

All the interests of the Church are advancing. The Sunday School has doubled in numbers, and much interest is manifested on the part of officers, teachers and pupils. We have one of the most progressive and aggressive W. H. M. Societies in the district, if not in the Conference, conducted by active, energetic officers, who keep things moving. We have an active, energetic, persevering manager of the Juvenile Society, Mrs. Percy Summers, who is inspiring the children with unusual zeal. These societies are doing much to advance the interests of the Church along all lines.

Let me say, in conclusion, I have not forgotten the Advocate. I am trying to reach the proper number to get club rates. R. S. ISBELL.

FOREIGN MISSION COLLECTIONS.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, Treas.: Dear Brother—March 31, the end of our fiscal year, is near at hand. The reports from the Annual Conferences of collections during this year show an increase over the previous year. To make good this increase through our fiscal year, liberal amounts must yet be sent in before its close. Please use every effort to collect the largest possible amount, and remit by the above date. Fraternally yours,

J. D. HAMILTON,
Treasurer B. of M., M. E. Church, So.

To the Preachers in the Mississippi Conference: Dear Brethren—Please help me to comply with this request of Brother Hamilton. A little effort in the few days that remain will put us far in advance of same date last year. May God help us to more than maintain the ground we have gained. Let us all help. Yours truly,

W. L. LINFIELD, Treasurer.

Sister A. D. ROBERSON was born May 1, 1834, in Georgia, and died Jan. 30, 1906, at her home in Tate County, Miss. Her parents moved to Mississippi from Georgia in 1854. She was married to her first husband, J. W. McCall, in October, 1855. He died in 1889, and she was married to Brother S. A. Roberson in 1893, who still survives her. Sister Roberson was not the mother of any children, but she reared several orphan children, who are now devoted Christians and useful members of the Church. Sister Roberson professed religion in girlhood, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She possessed all those noble traits that make up the true wife, matron and useful Christian. She was loved by all who knew her. Her body was laid to rest in the Greenleaf Cemetery on the Cockrum Circuit by loving friends and relatives. She was visited by her pastor about one week before her death. She assured him of her readiness and seemed anxious to depart and be with her Lord. Some pastor's eye will glance over this tearfully in remembrance of her love, kindness and usefulness to all.

HER PASTOR.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, the ever loving and merciful heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom has removed from our midst our beloved sister, MARY MORETON, whose presence we sadly miss, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Methodist Sunday School of Brookhaven, have sustained the loss of one of our most faithful teachers, whose example is worthy of emulation, and a friend whose loyalty made friendship a word of royal tone.

Resolved, That although our hearts are filled with grief at her early death, yet we offer a prayer of thanksgiving for her noble life among us; for though dead she still lives in the power and beauty of her influence.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the loved ones who mourn their loss, and pray that the loving Father may comfort and sustain in this, the hour of their affliction.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Sunday school; that a copy be sent to the bereaved family; and that copies be furnished for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Brookhaven, Miss.

Brother JAMES ROBERT ELLIOTT was born in Yazoo county, Miss., near Benton, the 5th of April, 1851; and died at his home in Silver City, Miss., February 5th, 1906. Was married to Miss Mary May thirty years ago the 16th of last January. To them were born three children, two of whom are living, one son and one daughter. Brother Elliott joined the M. E. Church, South, at Benton, Miss., five years after his marriage, thus making nearly three decades he was identified with the Church militant. During this period of his church life he was called upon to serve as Steward and Sunday School Superintendent at various intervals. He was half this time a Methodist Steward. At the time of his death he was the Sunday School Superintendent at Silver City, where he and his family had moved about three months previous to his death. Although only here a short time, he was here long enough for it to become known that he was a member of the Church and a devout Christian. If we love the Lord and his cause it does not take the Church and the world long to find this out. As I am a new pastor on this work, it was my pleasure to know Brother Elliott only a few days, but I learned to love him as a man of God and as a brother in the Lord. We miss his earnest prayers in the congregation and his faithful work in the Sunday School. Although in feeble health, he was full of energy and zeal for the Master. His motto seems to be in the language of the old song: "Well work till Jesus comes." He died at his post of duty, and went home to receive the reward of the faithful. May the God of all grace comfort the lonely wife and the bereaved children. J. M. ALFORD.

Brother L. W. BAILEY was born May 1, 1836, and died Jan. 25, 1906, near Coldwater, Tate County, Miss. Brother Bailey gave his heart to God in early life, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was a useful man in the Church and in the community in which he lived, and will be greatly missed. He had a stroke of paralysis several years ago, from which he never fully recovered. When the end came he was ready to go—talked with his family about dying and his future prospects of heaven. To him death had no terrors. May his family and other loved ones meet him in heaven. HIS PASTOR.

He was born near Clinton, East Feliciana parish, and was married to Miss Elizabeth Newsom, of Clinton, on Nov. 7, 1880.

To this marriage was born seven children, six of them survive their mother who died on Aug. 25, 1895.

On the 11th day of August, 1897, he was married to Miss Evie L. Jones, of Indian Mound, La., and to them were born four children, three of whom were living at his death, leaving seven surviving children and his wife.

He was converted several years ago under the preaching of Rev. R. W. Tucker and joined the Methodist Church, and ever afterward lived a consecrated Christian life, and did what he could for the advancement of his Church and the Sunday school.

He was sick but a few days, and oh, how hard it was to stand by and see his life ebbing out!

Just a short while before he died he asked a minister at his bedside to pray for him, and in a short time his soul took its flight. The Lord said: Thou good and faithful servant, come up higher in the mansions prepared for you. It was hard to give up my husband who was at all times so good and kind to me, but the Bible tells us that the Lord does all things for the best, and I feel that the Lord has only called him from this world to something better, and all we can do is to bow in humble submision to his divine will and prepare to meet the dear husband and father in the beyond, where there is no more death nor heartaches.

There to be united around the Great White Throne, where we can sing the everlasting praise of the blessed redeemer.

[ANTELOPE'S INSTINCT]

The manner in which she teaches her young to protect herself until they are old and strong enough to join the full-grown bands in their wanderings is an interesting and wonderful instance of Nature's providence. These beautiful creatures live in an open country infested by all kinds of enemies and especially prowled over by the coyote, the gray wolf and the timber wolf, which subsist upon the young of all kinds of animals, yet the mother can easily protect her babies from the fiercest of these marauders. The enemy most dreaded is the soaring eagle.

There is a variety of cactus, a prickly plant which grows in great abundance all over the Western plains, which furnishes her the means for this protection. Horses, cattle, buffalo, and, in fact, all animals know the danger of treading on this plant. It grows in large patches, some four or six inches in height above the ground, and forms a thick mat varying in breadth from the size of the top of a man's hat to many feet. It is in the center of one of these patches that the female antelope prepares a place of safety for her young. The thorns of this cactus, while very poisonous and terribly painful to every other animal, for some reason are almost harmless to the antelope. The cactus may lacerate her legs, making them bleed freely, but neither the stickers nor their poison remain; while other animals seldom bleed, but retain the poisonous stickers in their wounds until they become malignant sores, causing excessive swelling of the limbs and very great and long-continued suffering.

When the antelope has selected her patch of cactus, backing away a few feet, she will make a running jump, bounding high in the air and alighting in the middle of the patch, with all four feet close together, the hoofs pointing downward. Then, springing out again and repeating this operation until she has chopped the roots of the cactus plant to pieces, she loosens and clears a space large enough for standing room. She will then enlarge it by pawing and digging with her sharp hoofs. Here she gives birth to her young in undisturbed security, knowing that she can leave them in comparative safety during the day and return to them at night to give them suck. Should it be in a locality where eagles abound, however, the mother does not venture far away, as the soaring eagle often swoops down on the young, taking them away if she is not there to battle for their lives.—From H. H. Cross' "How the Antelope Protects Its Young," in the "Century."

A CORRECTION.

Crawford, Miss., Mch. 26, 1906.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will you please correct two erors in the communication over my name in last week's Advocate. The first is where I quoted Brother Countiss in reference to the historic Valley Springs District. The quotation mark stops one sentence too soon. It should be at the end of this sentence for it is his. "If we were short one more we should only have the greater love for the remaining seven." The other is "more" between "districts and would," the word more [illegible] used twice in the same sentence when it should be there but once. As it stands, the error is confusing.

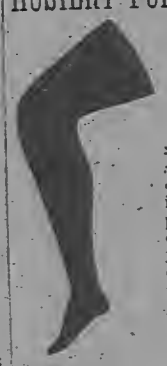
Mr. A. B. Guardeau, Savannah, Ga.



Dear Sir: This is to certify that on August 1st, I went to Verbena, Ala., to hold a series of meetings. Was at this time, and had been for six weeks prior, so feeble I was scarcely able to preach. Mr. F. A. Gulledge of Verbena, with whose family I was stopping, kindly offered me three bottles of Johnson's Chill and Fever Tonic, gratis. I accepted, and began the use of the Tonic at once. Within three days I was much better. In three weeks I had taken the three bottles of Tonic and was fully well. Took no other medicine then nor since, and am in better health and heavier than for the past fifteen years.

Glances at the World.

The German population of Chicago are reported to be greatly agitated over the prospect of having their "personal liberties" curtailed. Such liberties are very dear to them—so dear that they, like many others, are blind to the fact that the indulgence of their liberties is often hurtful to others. It is proposed by the city authorities to withhold special bar permits (permits to sell liquors) in dance halls. A meeting was called to protest against the action. Those who called it were surprised at the turn-out—35,000 persons, it is estimated, having responded. Resolutions were adopted "denouncing the authorities" for their action. Thus we have a foreign-born people in our midst undretaking to control affairs according to the notions which prevail in Germany. The dance halls are mainly for Sunday amusement, and those who run them and patronize them are simply giving us what is called the "Continental Sabbath," a Sabbath in which God is worshiped in the morning, and "the world, the flesh and the devil" gratified in the afternoon and evening. The authorities do well to curtail such liberties.

Chinese commissioners are now visiting America. A banquet was tendered these commissioners in New York. One of the speakers on the occasion was the Hon. Tuan Fong, of the commission. Among other things, Mr. Fong said: "We take pleasure this evening in bearing testimony to the part taken by the American missionaries in promoting the progress of the Chinese people. They have borne the light of Western civilization into every nook and corner of the empire. They have rendered inestimable service to China by the laborious task of translating into the Chinese language religious and scientific works of the East. They help us to bring happiness and comfort to the poor and the suffering by the establishment of hospitals and schools. The awakening of China, which now seems to be at hand, may be traced in no small measure to the hand of the missionary. For this service you will find China not ungrateful." Those who are disposed to think that it is a piece of impertinence for American Christians and others to send missionaries to China should consider well this testimony of a Chinaman before condemning indiscriminately all missionaries. That China should resent any effort of missionaries to change national customs, and to interfere in their courts of law, is but natural, but Mr. Fong clears American missionaries from charges of this kind. It should be borne in mind that there are missionaries and other missionaries. Mr. Tuan Fong is wise enough to discriminate.

A bill has been introduced in the United States Senate and House of Representatives "to establish a laboratory for the study of the criminal, pauper and defective classes." The bill, in part, is as follows: That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a laboratory for the study of the abnormal classes, and the work shall include not only laboratory investigations, but also the collection of sociological and pathological data, especially such as may be found in institutions for the criminal, pauper and defective classes, and generally in hospitals and other institutions. Said laboratory and work shall be in charge of a director, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $4,8,000 per annum. He shall make a report once a year, directed to the Secretary of the Interior, which, with the approval of that officer, shall be published. The scope of this proposed department is very fully set forth by Mr. Arthur McDonald, a member of the Harvard Club, and is indorsed by scientific and medical associations, legal and religious associations, and by many American and European specialists. It is said also to have the indorsement of President Roosevelt. he "cranks" are named among the abnormal classes, and are declared to be most dangerous. If the Department can reach and cure all the "cranks," it will be worth all it costs the Government to keep it up.

The movement in certain quarters for the suppression of profanity is timely. Profanity is all too common, and not a few persons of high degree are guilty. The editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian not long since was shocked to hear one of the honorable judges of an important Court in our city give vent in a public conveyance to exceedingly profane language. It was a public outrage. It would seem that none but the lowest kind of creatures would be guilty; but it extends further. And we are informed that it is not an uncommon thing to hear profane language on the stage, uttered in the presence of people of the respectable classes. There are numbers of plays in which profanity and indecency largely prevail. After witnessing a play of this character in Toledo, Ohio, not long ago, the Federation of Catholic Societies of the city passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That we, the Lucas County Federation of Catholic Societies, do hereby express our deep regret, disguse and indignation at the performance of a play the subject matter of which is unfit for clean and chaste minds, and that we sincerely hope that all well-intentioned people of the city will help so to treat this outrageous attempt at defiling the stage that the managers of our local theatres will never dare to invite our Toledo public to such salacious exhibitions, feeling convinced that, as William Winter, the dramatic critic, has put "Sapho" and "Camille" among the putrid plays that disgrace our stage, all good citizens of whatever belief will withhold their patronage from such plays and theatres." Swearing on the streets is nothing new or strange, and too often indulged in by officers, as well as others. It appears to have become so common and offensive in St. Louis as to call for discipline. Recently the Police Commissioners issued an order prohibiting policemen from swearing while on duty. One of them so forgot as to violate the order and was fined $40. If such discipline were applied to all who thus offend against good taste, as well as against good morals, it would soon end public profanity. It is to be hoped that the evil will be checked. And we see no reason why bad language should be tolerated as a laugh-maker on the stage. Those who occupy the stage have no moral right to take advantage of their position to disgust decent people, or to take the name of God in vain.

THE ADVOCATE OF MARCH 22.

I have read the Advocate of March 22 with a deal of interest. Brother Huggins says some sensible things on the salvation of infants; but his idea that infants must be regenerated to take away depravity leads him into a difficulty, from which I can see no escape. If regeneration removes depravity, the children of regenerated parents would not be depraved. Children are depraved only in the sense of deprivation or loss, weakness through the effect of the fall. It does seem, from the parable of our Master, that the piece of silver was as much the property of the woman before it was lost as it was after it was found. So with the lost sheep. The prodigal son was as much his father's child before he went away as he was after his return to his father's house.

I fully indorse Brother Sherard's idea of great central hospitals.

I am in full sympathy with Brother Babb on the subject of large districts. They are all formed from a city standpoint. They are not adapted to the country. No use of grieving after spilt milk, but I do think, as Brother Babb says, that "we made a step backward at our last Conference, when we gave up the Holly Springs District." It was not only historic, but at the crossing of long lined railroads, in the center of a large hill country, from which has been coming many of our most useful preachers and laymen. These hills have been largely supplied by young preachers of limited experience, and our Church has been represented at our Sunday quarterly meetings by our presiding elders. To these week-day Quarterly Conferences they do not go, as a rule; and this will be a serious loss to our cause in the coming generation. There is but one argument in support of large districts, and that is the support of the presiding elder, and a man can travel a district of twelve appointments for 25 per cent less than he can travel one of twenty-four appointments. I have not seen the time in forty years' travel that I had not rather pay the P. E. one-fourth or one-third more to have him four regular Sundays than to have my Quarterly Conferences in the week. Everything is now tending to centers and cities, and we are not passing out into the highways and hedges, as we should, for when we lose this influx to our Church from these hills and hollows, our glory is departed.

J. W. HOXNOLL.

Hill House, Miss., March 24.

We see always what we are looking for, and if our mind has become trained to look for trouble and difficulty and all dark and dreary things, we find just what we seek. On the other hand, it is quite as easy to form the habit of always looking for beauty, for good, for happiness, for gladness, and here, too, we shall find precisely what we seek.—J. R. Miller.

SOUTHERN EPISCOPAL, NEW ORLEANS METHODISM.

FROM A LAYMAN'S STANDPOINT.

An eminent diving states what he conceives to be the current estimate of Southern Episcopal Methodists, of their seat in New Orleans, that this city is "the mired wheel of Southern Methodism." If movement means extrication from rut or mire, then the wheel is no longer mired.

However views may differ as to some late exterior aspects of change in New Orleans Southern Methodism, it is certain that its status has been most notably transitional, sensational, next to spectacular.

Within a period of two or three years several of the most conspicuous and revered landmarks of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have perished as once endeared monuments, and are only a sad or embittered memory to some of their former members. To such, and most especially, to the cursory glance of sinister or unconcerned observance, it seems an incontestable demonstration of the most noted decadence that no less than four church edifices have passed out of the hands of the Church — Burgundy, Parker Memorial, Dryades Street and Carondelet Street. In this bare view there is a plausibility of decadence and a fond (maybe tender) fallaciousness in this self deception, and self-condolence solaces itself in lament for its apparent bereavements. It is not to be harshly stigmatized, however erring it may be—this fond self-immolation—on the altar of grief.

On the other hand, the promoters and leading adherents of this instauration point with great satisfaction to the commending and commanding features of the new regime. They say Burgundy and Moreau Churches—antiquated and outworn—are to be superseded by one church, more eligibly situated, better financially sustained, with the enheartenments and moral forces of a larger membership, under the ministry of Rev. H. N. Harrison, a late accession to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Financial arrangements have been made for the erection of this new Burgundy Street Church.

As to the Parker Memorial Church, there is proof of most impressive betterments, in a very handsome structure, where worship is now held, on Nashville Avenue, in place of the cramped and cheap structure on the out-of-the-way locality of the late structure. This Church is in a very flourishing condition under its new pastor, Rev. S. J. Parrish. It would be most unjust to fail to state that this condition is due, in large measure, to its two preceding pastors, Rev. K. W. Dodson and Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

Dryades Street Church is sold and demolished. It is understood that its membership contemplate erecting a church on Jackson Avenue, if the Felicity Street Church will join them there in a coalescence of congregation and a parity of ownership; but, in any event, they will build, having the money by sale of the old church. At present, both these churches are in occupancy of Felicity Street Church, and in a temporary consolidation of membership. Felicity is a church of recent structure and handsome architecture, and has just been extensively modernized in some of its features, under the pastorate of its present minister, E. P. Craddock.

Carondelet Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been sold to the Scottish Rite Masons; and what is a solstice for it is to be the consecration on St. Charles Avenue, between Calliope and Terpsichore Streets. Distant readers may refer to Lee Statue and its circle. It is a little east, a block above this circle. Nearby, neara block away, will be the Carnegie Library to which this renowned library founder has donated $250,000 as a gift to the city, the city to furnish the location. Very opposite will be the Athenaeum, a very ancient and revered building belonging to the Jews.

The new edifice is to be entitled the First Methodist Church. It is to cost $250,000, including cost of site, and is designed to give great prestige and eclat to the Methodist Church, South, in New Orleans, and to vie with the most imposing cathedrals in this city.

The movement to build this new church and sell Carondelet originated with Rev. H. C. Davis, then, and until his becoming Presiding Elder of the New Orleans District, its pastor.

A resolution to that effect was introduced and passed in a Quarterly Conference of his church, at his suggestion, in 1901. Steps were quietly taken to promote the matter, and it culminated under Rev. J. E. Wray, who succeeded Dr. Davis as pastor.

It is quite certain that the consummation of the scheme of a new church, as a successor of Carondelet, owes much to the cooperation of Bishop H. C. Morrison. This divine had been invited by Rev. H. C. Davis early in his pastorate of Carondelet Street Church to assist in a revival there. The Bishop preached quite a series of sermons, impressed his audiences with his ability and power, and made strong and influential friendships. The move to secure him as a resident Bishop, and to offer him a residence for his life as a partial consideration, originated with Dr. H. C. Davis, and was cooperated in by other ministers of the city. In a reception tendered the Bishop this scheme was broached to him, and its commendations could not be declined. Accordingly, a very handsome residence was purchased on Henry Clay Avenue, and the Bishop is now a resident of New Orleans. It goes without saying that the movement in favor of the new church, as a successor of Carondelet, has his heartiest sympathy and most effective cooperation.

This Church was greatly furthered under Dr. Davis and quickened by his methods. To mention only two or three salient points:—he added between three and four hundred to its membership; finding the Church without a parsonage, he induced his official board to buy one on Prytania Street, now the residence of the pastor, Rev. J. E. Wray. The salary of the pastor at Carondelet upon the advent of Dr. Davis was $1,500 per annum, the first year, and no parsonage; the second year, $1,800 and a parsonage; the salary now is $2,000, with the parsonage.

Aside from the once raw, and yet sore, question of one or two features of the policy of the M. E. Church, South, in New Orleans, it is quite certain that in this city, and in this district, there are some large and blessed activities—indisputable signs of progress, above challenge and criticism. Thus the church in Algiers has been overhauled; Carrollton is to have a new parsonage; a motion has been passed to move the old church at Covington to a new location, and to improve and enlarge it; a new church has been built at Pearl River; at Slidell, a beautiful one; a hand-

[illegible] Norwoods, and one at Greenwood. [illegible] recent meeting of the District Stewards Dr. Davis had plans for purchasing a district par[illegible] this city belonging to the M. E. Church, South, and [illegible] for the use of the Presiding Elder of the district. He has been authorized to [illegible] the money. Some money is already [illegible] and he hopes to have enough to pay for the property this year. This year. A move is on foot for a new church between Canal Street and Toledano Avenues. A property has been secured, and some money already subscribed therefor.

The Doctor is addressing himself to seeking a site for the next General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, for this city—its sittings to be held in the then completed First Methodist Church, now being built on St. Charles Avenue, which would prove an impressive object lesson of the force and status of the M. E. Church, South, in New Orleans, for this "perilous edge" and battle-field of vital Christianity in the Southwest.

Surely, the above summary shows the M. E. Church, South, to be very vital in the area in question.

Finally, Dr. Davis is endeavoring to inaugurate a plan to build a memorial church to the late Bishop John C. Keener. Bishop Morrison is in hearty sympathy with these plans. This movement will prove unspeakably grateful, and even healing, to the innumerable friends and admirers of this venerable and revered Collossus of his Church, whose august and commanding individuality of character, and his breadth, vigor and massiveness of intellect gave such power and lustre to the M. E. Church, South.

It is impossible to conceive a worthier sanction for a memorial to a mortal — and a liberal response, that may be expected to almost belt the earth, will rear a monument such as love and admiration and the artistic cunning may devise.

Little need to him of any tribute, before or after death. It is rather for us below, by such, to elevate ourselves and to inspire and perpetuate an admiration and emulation of his consecrated and inestimable worth.

JOTTINGS FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Macon, though an old and a somewhat sedate town, is cursed with some grave forms of wickedness, which the good citizens have been endeavoring to overthrow. Methodists take pride in the aggressive captaincy of Rev. W. L. Duren in this important undertaking. A man of positive convictions and fearless courage, he attacks sin wherever he finds it.

Crawford Street, Vicksburg, is prospering stoutly under the sagacious leadership of Dr. Hollomon, who is alert to every interest of his large and growing membership. A new parsonage is projected and will soon be realized, it is thought. It is to be erected alongside of the handsome Church, and to be in keeping therewith must itself be a costly structure, and those in charge of the enterprise are arranging that this propriety be observed. The Sunday School is blessed with a vigorous Superintendent, of considerable experience in a large city school, and much is being accomplished toward increasing both its constituency and its efficiency.

Brandon is a city set upon a hill, but is very effectually hid from the vision of those who pass by the station on the trains. To see the sights of the historic old town, which came near being the State Capital, one must ride a full mile over the hills and through the pines. Depending upon the company one has, this may or may not be a fascinating experience, for the scenery could scarcely be called picturesque. With Brother Moore, the clever pastor of the Methodist Church, it was exceedingly pleasant for the scribe, with the skies fair, and just enough breezes stirring to impart an exhilaration to the drive. Brandon is perhaps full grown, and no great progress may be looked for there, but the pastor is popular and respected and is endeavoring to develop fully such opportunities as are afforded.

If the Rev. O. L. Savage should fall from grace, which his simplicity of faith, purity of life and singleness of aim alike preclude, he would make a first-rate real estate promoter. Such bragging as he did do on New Albany! If he preaches so eloquently as he descibes the marvellous growth of his town, small wonder that they are planning to enlarge their church, so that they may seat the crowds. And, as if to make exhibit of all his claims, he drove the writer around that his own eyes might behold the expansion. And it was there—mills, factories, shops, dwellings going up all around as if by magic. A people busy with an enlarging commerce and in danger of being absorbed therewith and a floating population attached by the various enterprises combine to make the pastorate difficult. But Brother Savage is equal to the demand. One, to look at him, might fancy him lazy, but not so. He is active and diligent in the work in which he delights, and an optimist with it. His labors might be somewhat judged by the fact that he has already added 64 to the membership since Conference, an attestation to his labors of which any pastor may be proud. And his folks love him and he loves them, for he is big of heart as well as body.

"A QUESTION."

Dear Advocate: Brother D. W. Babb writes a good article in favor of small presiding elders' districts, and I have no desire to create controversy, but I believe most thoroughly in the wisdom of large districts, even in our own territory.

Brother Babb wants to know if large districts are best to develop the church and save souls? The question cannot be answered categorically without considering the whole question. If there was no pastor, of course small districts would be best; or, if the presiding elder were an evangelist, and not an administrative officer, small districts will still be best. But he is in charge of the whole district, as its administrative officer, to preach and to look after all the interests of the Church. If we cling to the old theory that each pastoral charge needs two pastors, then, by all means, let us have small districts, and let the presiding elder give much time to each charge.

Now, I propose a brief discussion of the proposition that large districts are best:—

First—In the first place, the presiding eldership is a peculiar office, growing out of the genius of our Church government. It is needed to carry forward our work, and hence what I shall say about it is not intended to discredit it at all.

Second—The presence of the presiding elder is not needed in many of our charges on Sunday. We had just as well face the fact that in many of our strong stations the people prefer to hear their own pastor, although he may not be the equal of the presiding elder in pulpit ability. The presiding elder can give his Sunday mornings to the country churches, and go in town and preach at night, or give the entire day to weaker and smaller churches, and hold the Quarterly Conference for the stronger charge in the middle of the week. A mid-week quarterly meeting in the country, especially in the busy farming season, is usually unsatisfactory, and my suggestion is for the presiding elder always to give a Sunday to such charges and the mid-week services to the strong churches.

Third—It is not the purpose of large districts to pay the presiding elders larger salaries, as I understand it; but, if we can secure the same ends by having seven districts that we did when we had nine, by all means let us save the expense of the two additional men. Consider this fact: Here is a growing town church that pays its pastor $1,000, and the presiding elder $160. The Presbyterians have a bright young man, fresh from college, and they raise his salary to $1,200. The Methodists want to raise their pastor's salary to $1,200, but there is the salary of the presiding elder, $160, which they must pay, and they leave the pastor's salary at the same old figure. Now, if the size of the districts is decreased, that same Methodist Church will have to pay the presiding elder $200 or more, and the pastor is put at a disadvantage by the limitations of the smaller salary.

Fourth—Let it be remembered that the presiding elder's office is primarily administrative; that the pastor is on the ground to do the work of the Church, preaching, visiting and building up the kingdom of Christ. Someone has said that it costs more to administer the affairs of the Methodist Church than any other church in the world. We support our Bishops and presiding elders to do this work, but it is the pastor who is responsible for the work of the pastoral charge.

Many of our leading laymen feel that the necessity for the presiding elder's presence in our strong, well-organized churches is not as great as it once was. No one esteems the presiding elder more than I do, for I was a piece of one once myself; but I believe he can do us as efficient service with twenty-five appointments as he can with fifteen.

A FRIEND OF MISSIONS.

Recently a woman, who wishes her name withheld, sent to the Treasurer $500 for the education and city mission endowment fund on the annuity plan. This plan prevents possible litigation about money that is left by will to the Home Mission Society. According to its provisions, the donor receives during her lifetime as good a rate of interest as could be had on any other investment. She also has the assurance that when she goes home to heaven the Society has what she wanted to give.

STOCK COMPANY.

Mrs. Johnson, of the Dallas Training School, reminds us that she has not sold all her stock yet. The shares are $1 each—no limit to the number of shares each stockholder may own. Dividends will be invested for the betterment of humanity. Do not delay, but send for a share in the Stock Company that was organized to raise the means to build and equip a home, school and church for those for whom Christ died. In the twelve years of its existence the Dallas Home has been the means of saving and training 800 girls, and putting into Christian homes 425 infants. These results are marvelous, but it is believed, with a larger plant and better equipment, much more could be accomplished.

The object of the Training School is to save, train and educate for useful living unfortunate girls, who otherwise might drift as hopeless outcasts into the slough of despond, and become a menace to the home and humanity.

MRS. JOHN B. PARKER,
Conf. Supt. of Press Work.

The Fourteenth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Louisiana Conference, will be held in First Church, Baton Rouge, May 5-8, 1906. The opening session will be held Saturday morning, nine o'clock, May 5. Railroad rates will be secured if there are fifty delegates holding certificates of having paid full fare going. Send names of delegates and visitors to Mrs. Mary R. Goodale, 402 Fifth Street, Baton Rouge.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

The North Mississippi Home Mission Societies heartily indorse Hon. J. H. Sherard's memorial to be presented to the General Conference. We are much interested in hospital work. We believe the influence of the Church will be greater when she makes provision for suffering humanity. If this plan is adopted by the General Conference, we pledge our hearty co-operation—will not only assist in building a hospital to be located at a convenient point, but will endeavor to support as many free beds as we can afford.

By the time these hospitals are completed we will have many nurse deaconesses to take charge of them, as the control of their training and placing was assigned to the Woman's Board by the General Conference that created the order.

The touching picture portrayed by Mr. Sherard's pen of a Methodist minister in the charity ward of a Catholic hospital strikes a responsive chord in every true woman's heart, and we long to remove the reproach which rests upon our Church and the womanhood of our denomination by making provision for those who suffer.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The year's record has been written. The opportunities and possibilities have passed. May our mistakes be our teachers. May our failures be our warnings. May our successes be our inspiration.

Reports have been received from the following district secretaries: Brookhaven, Forest, Jackson, Sea Shore and Vicksburg.

The following auxiliaries failed to send in their reports to their respective secretaries: Jackson District—Camden, Madison and Mt. Carmel. Forest District—Paulding, Juvenile Societies of Newton, Hickory and Carthage. Brookhaven District—Summit and McComb City. Sea Shore District—Logtown and Ocean Springs. Vicksburg District—Burtonton, Carlisle and Rolling Fork.

The report from the Secretary of the Meridian District was not received; consequently no society in that district was represented in the report.

The Natchez Secretary asked the auxiliaries of that district to forward reports to me, but only two complied with her request—Jefferson Street, Natchez, and Barlow.

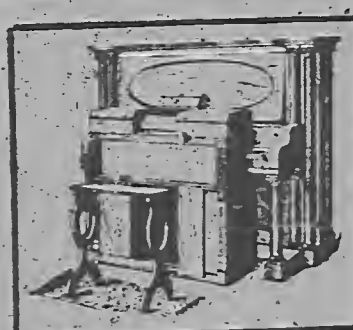
Societies Organized this quarter: Forest District, 1; Jackson District, 3.

New members added this quarter: Brookhaven District, 5; Forest District, 14; Jackson District, 55; Sea Shore District, 48; Vicksburg District, 15; Jefferson St., Natchez, 5.

With two such large, well-organized districts as Meridian and Natchez out, my report is necessarily meager, but from the reports in hand, it is as follows:

Adult auxiliaries, 45; adult members, 902; number of adult auxiliaries this quarter, 3; number of adult members added this quarter, 119; number of young people's and juvenile societies, 10; number of young people's and juvenile members, 267; number of young people and juvenile societies organized, 3; number of young people and juvenile members this quarter, 37; total members, adult and juvenile, 1,169; subscribers to Woman's Missionary Advocate, 290; subscribers to Little Worker, 145.

Specials Reported this Quarter:



Bible Women—Clara Chrisman, located in China, supported by Wesson Auxiliary, amount sent for support to date, $45.50; Florence West, located in Korea, supported by Capitol St. Auxiliary, amount sent $60; Mary Powell, located in Mexico, supported by Yazoo City Auxiliary, amount sent $60; Nannie G. Harris, located in China, supported by Mrs. A. E. Wyatt, Natchez, amount sent $60; Emma Elizabeth Reed, located in China, supported by the Natchez Auxiliary, amount sent $60; Mary Anderson, located in China, supported by First Church, Jackson, amount sent, $60; Day School, located in Mexico, supported by Main Street, Hattiesburg, amount sent to date $18.60.

The Treasurer's report will soon be published, in order that you may know the financial record of the year. Let us pledge ourselves for more earnest work.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will you kindly allow me an humble place in the Advocate for a word on two or three points of reasonable interest to me, whatever they may be to others?

First—I wish to give my full endorsement to what Brother T. W. Lewis has said in the Advocate concerning the work and value of professional evangelists in our protracted meetings. I think his views are the prevailing ones amongst our preachers and people. So emphatic is this the case, that most pastors have ceased to invite the help of the advertised evangelist, and most people, especially amongst the more intelligent and thoughtful classes, prefer a more effective and less expensive assistance in their meetings. So, progress is made by eliminating the professional evangelist, while we cultivate and secure a thorough Scriptural evangelism in the effective ministry of the preacher in charge, which is the supreme object to be attained—towards which all our movements should converge. Let everything be put out of the way that in the least hinders or trammels the work of the preacher in charge. His legitimate service is the axle on which the whole of organized Methodism turns. Every other specialty in the system is subsidiary to this. Take out the preacher in charge and the whole fabric will tumble to pieces. This is the vital exponential factor which we must train, strengthen and develop in order to conserve and proportionately increase the power of this great catholic evangelism. Nothing else can achieve these ends and vindicate the polity of itinerant Methodism.

Second—I earnestly desire that the General Conference shall let the licensing of preachers remain in the District Conference. Why seek a change? Cannot an earnest, worthy man who feels called of God to preach, get a recommendation from his Quarterly Conference and be properly licensed in the District Conference? What is to hinder? Has the District Conference held the qualifications for license too high? Certainly not higher than the lowest honorable pretense to preach should have; nor higher than befits a common school grade of intelligence amongst the people. Make this change, and the old objections will arise with increased reason, and a return to the order now existing will be sought with commanding emphasis. We surely need the local preacher. He is recognized amongst us and his labor valued. The door of the ministry is open to his admission and proper employment. Let him take his place in good faith, as the Discipline directs, work in harmony with the preacher in charge and do all he can to advance the work of the charge, and he will find engagement for all his talents and his grace; and will reap a rich harvest of spiritual growth, and of profitable service to his fellowmen, which will be an ample reward for his consecrated labors. So shall our whole ministry be a powerful unity moving in close and harmonious order to the conquest of the world for Christ. O, let it be so! Germane to this matter is the retention of paragraph 120. Let the preacher in charge be trusted for a wise discretion and have means of defense against impertinent, officious, mischievous intruders. This paragraph is the only authoritative expression of what essentially, inherently belongs to the preacher in charge.

There is some risk, doubtless, in contesting with the clear eye and facile pen of the noble Gilderoy; but I cannot quite agree with him that we are in any measure lacking in men for all the Bishops we need and more. The Church has always had men at hand and will always have, to fill any place needing a man. After a selection is made, others equally as competent are seen left out. No man may possess the seven qualifications named by Dr. Rankin in the highest degree, but several may have many of them in various degrees. It does not require a star preacher to make a Bishop. Not all the Bishops have been great preachers in the popular sense, nor have they all possessed the seven qualifications in the highest degree; but they have all spent their lives and filled their offices with unstarnished fidelity and credit, so as to be unchallenged examples of godliness to the Church, and by their faithful administration of affairs to add to the advantage and strength of the cause. But many able and learned preachers, working as preachers in charge, as presiding elders, as editors, as secretaries, etc., are doing the same thing. Somewhere among these noble workers is a man of devout, unimpeached loyalty and devotion to his Lord and His Church, who is peer of the ablest and best in pulpit and in print, a man of great heart as well as great mind. His searching analysis and convincing logic goes to the roots of things and lays them open in beautiful forms and colors portrayed in the simplest, plainest diction that leaves the mind under a sense that these are "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn" in the energetic, profound and practical exposition of holy Scripture. His great learning and vigorous intellectual grasp as well as his genial, sympathetic temper and his modest spiritual excellence enable him to confront the giants of multiform infidel science and criticism with that "sword of the Spirit" which cleaves the helmet of every antagonist. Why not make him Bishop, and also another man of less prominence and learning, but of equal piety and judgment. We need not ascend to the stars or to the tops of the mountains to find men for Bishops. They are here in the valley in the toilsome labors of itinerant pastorates, and there we shall leave them, changing their official functions, not their ministerial characters. After all we need not trouble ourselves greatly about this and other matters, for we may trust the Holy Spirit to guide our brethren of the General Conference to the best selections for the good of the Church. "The good of the Church" is a matter of such complex variety of elements, which need to be adjusted and readjusted in so many varied forms, that none but the divine mind can know completely, absolutely, the what, the when and the how of the matter. We may be sure that there will be infirmity and mistake on the human side of the action. A living Church under the benediction of the "Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God and the Communion of the Holy Ghost," cannot fail of the great Gospel end of bringing all lands to "know God and Jesus Christ whom He hath Sent."

FROM REV. DR. R. S. TRIPPETT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am just in hand a letter from Mrs. F. L. Faulk, daughter of Brother Trippett, inclosing one which was dated Dec. 5, 1905, and was sent to me in your care, but was not delivered, though directed correctly to 512 Camp Street. After some months it was sent to the London Dead Letter Office, and from there returned to Mrs. Faulk on March 6. This explains why no letter from Brother Trippett was read at our last Conference. In her last letter to me Mrs. Faulk says: "This is the first time father says that he sent a letter to the care of the editor, that was unclaimed." She also says: "Father is improving in health, for which he is thankful to the Almighty." I give below the letter that should have been read to the Conference.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

51 Spring Garden,
Doncaster, England, Dec. 8, 1905.

Rev. Dr. J. T. Sawyer: Much Esteemed Friend—Owing to the loss of sight and other infirmities, my father is unable to send his customary letter to the Bishop and members of the Louisiana Annual Conference. Enclosed you will find a certificate of his Christian character from the Rev. J. Kernick, Superintendent and Minister of the Priory Place Wesleyan Church. In 1843-44-45 father was in charge of Good Hope Chapel, Algiers, under Rev. Dr. Winans, P. E., as a local preacher. It is sixty years ago this December since he was admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference, which was held in the Poydras Street Church, in New Orleans, viz., in December, 1845, presided over by the Rev. Bishop Soule, which Conference then embraced a good portion of the State of Mississippi and the whole of the State of Louisiana. Father does not know of any minister now living who was present at that Conference but himself. In 1846 there was no Conference held; but in January, 1847, was organized the Louisiana Conference at Opelousas, Rev. Bishop Soule presiding. And he knows of only two ministers now living who were present at that Conference, and they are his old friend and brother, the Rev. R. J. Harp, and himself.

Brother Sawyer, father would be grateful to you if you would present his claims to the Conference and the Joint Board of Finance, and send any appropriation they make to him by bill of exchange on England, and pay for his Christian Advocate and postage.

Thanking the members of the Conference, and yourself, for your continued kindness and brotherly love, father wishes me to say that he is still living by faith in the Son of God, and his prospects for eternity brighten every day. He asks the Conference to be continued in his present relation as a superannuate minister of the Louisiana Conference. Father's health is pretty good at this time, and he is now in the 84th year of his age. To God be all the glory. Hoping that you will have a very pleasant Conference and a happy and prosperous New Year, and again thanking you for your continued kindness to father's interests, I remain yours very respectfully,

A CHEERFUL HOME.

A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day. One surly glance casts a gloom over the household, while a smile, like a gleam of sunshine, may light up the darkest and weariest hours. Like unexpected flowers which spring up along our path, full of freshness, fragrance, and beauty, do kind words and gentle acts and sweet dispositions make glad the home where peace and blessing dwell. No matter how humble the abode, if it be thus garnished with grace and sweetened with kindness and smiles, the heart will turn lovingly toward it from all the tumult of the world, it will be the dearest spot beneath the circuit of the sun.

And the influences of home perpetuate themselves. The gentle grace of the mother lives in the daughter long after her head is pillowed in the dust of death, and the fatherly kindness finds its echo in the nobility and courtesy of sons, who come to wear his mantle and to fill his place; while on the other hand, from an unhappy, misgoverned, and disordered home, go forth persons who shall make other homes miserable, and perpetuate the sourness and sadness, the contentions and strifes and railings which have made their own early lives so wretched and distorted.

Toward the cheerful home the children gather as clouds and as doves to their windows, while from the home which is the abode of discontent and strife and trouble they fly forth as vultures to rend their prey.

The class of men who disturb and distress the world are not those born and nurtured amid the hallowed influences of Christian homes; but rather those whose early life has been a scene of trouble and vexation—who have started wrong in the pilgrimage, and whose course is one of disaster to themselves, and trouble to those around them.—Friends' Intelligencer.

FOR MOTHER'S SAKE.

Ann Adams stood in the kitchen doorway looking westward, where the sunset glowed in red and gold. She was waiting for the proper time to put supper on the table. Suddenly she remembered how a year before she had come down the road and seen "mother" standing just as she now stood—and oh, how little and frail and lonely mother had looked! Tears rolled down Ann's cheeks, for now mother had gone away, beyond sunset glories, to "the land that lies very far off."

Everybody had called Ann a model daughter. Mother had said so, and Ann had thought so herself, but now she remembered very much that had been left undone that might have made the little mother happy. Ann ran into the bedroom, and sinking by the bed, hid her face against the gay patchwork quilt. Often she had seen mother kneeling there alone. Presently the clock gave a whirr, and struck loudly. Ann sprang up, set the supper on the table, and rang a bell at the back door. Two stalwart shirt-sleeved men came from a large shop, and, with some small ceremony of washing and combing, seated themselves at the table and began promptly reaching for the bread and meat.

"Stop a minute," said Ann, firmly. "I'm going to have a blessing at this table."

"Who'll ask it?" demanded her brother George.

"I will," said Ann. "I've been thinking to-day how badly we treated mother."

"Treated mother badly!" cried her brother James. "Are you crazy, Ann? Anyone who treated her badly would not have stayed here. Badly! Why, didn't we work night and day, George and I, to keep mother nicely, and build this house, and furnish it pretty for her, and get her good gowns and white caps and silk aprons, and had her sit with her hands in her lap just like a lady?"

"Yes," chimed in George, "and didn't we say we would not marry, so mother might feel she was head of the house and all in it, and no one to interfere, after all her troubles? And, Ann, you yourself gave up a good chance to marry because you said mother needed you, and she shouldn't be beholden to strangers to wait on her! I say we were good children."

"Yes, all that is true. Mother thought so, and often, when she believed I was asleep, I heard her telling God how good we were, and asking Him to bless each of us by name."

"Oh, you're precious late telling us of it!" said James.

"I began with myself," said Ann. "I did do all you say, but didn't I go with people that make mock of religion, and stay out to dances till two o'clock Sunday morning, and have all kinds of noisy, idle company Sunday? And if, instead of wearying mother that way, I'd been religious and read the Bible and sung hymns to her, wouldn't it have made poor mother happier? If you boys had got less silk aprons and tufted chairs, and had got a buggy and gone to church with her at the village Sundays, wouldn't she have been happier? If you'd had a grace at table, and read a chapter nights, and taken a religious paper for her, wouldn't she have been happier? That was the way to treat mother, and we didn't do it. We left mother lonely in her religion; we didn't give her comfort when she most cared for it; and I say, now I think of it, we didn't do well by mother."

"You women see into such things more," said George, "and you ought to have told us this while mother was here to profit. It is too late to be religious for her now."

"It is not too late to try to do as she would like us to do," said Ann, "and help get her prayers answered. I know you boys got most of your rough talk and ways knocking about, earning every penny you could scrape to keep mother and us little girls out of the poorhouse. Mother often reminded God that He had promised a blessing to good, dutiful children, and I reckon you boys will get it. But now I say to you, mother was a mild, meek woman, and didn't drive you boys to your duty, but I'm tougher stuff, and we'll have a blessing, and go to church, and read the Bible, and try to be like Christian folk."

"Will it make us any better?" asked George.

"It will be doing all we can, and I'm sure that God will take hold of our hearts, and make them different," said Ann. "Supper's almost cold, but I'm going to begin on this blessing."—Michigan Christian Advocate.

HOW TO MAKE TIME FLY.

Bertie was very cross and miserable because he had to do his lessons. He had thrown his books pettishly on the table and had ruffled his hair in a fit of temper, and had stamped upon the floor and had done other foolish things, and now he was standing at the window looking out moodily upon the lawn. How slowly the time went by! Tick, tick, tick! What a slow, stupid old clock it was. Why did it not go faster? It seemed ages since ten o'clock, and yet it was only eleven now! Another hour and a half before lunch.

His father entered the room and looked at him sadly. "Tired of doing nothing, Bertie?" said he. "Come out on the lawn with me, and I will show you something."

They walked out together, and Bertie's father showed him the birds darting hither and thither, the sparrows and starlings in the eaves, and the rooks high up in the great trees, and the robins among the hedges. Then he asked Bertie to listen to Tom, the stable boy, whistling and singing merrily as he went about his work.

"Do you know why they are so happy, Bertie," he asked.

Bertie shook his head.

"It is because they are busy doing something. The birds are building their nests. Tom is doing his duty in the stable. It is God's law that we cannot be happy unless we are at honest work. Now try it for one hour, and see how the time slips by."

Bertie's face brightened. He felt interested to see how the experiment would succeed. He went in and set himself to learn the second and third declensions in Latin, walking to and fro as he did so. By the time he had accomplished his task he looked up expecting to see that half the time had gone. He could hardly believe his own eyes. The hand of the clock pointed to half-past twelve! He had been so busy that he had not even heard it strike the hour.—Sunday School Advocate.

Good works have no sin-killing or justifying power. To trust them as such is a delusion and a snare. Hence, though good men show their faith by works, they never depend on them to obtain favor with God.

* * *

How one can maintain faith in the religion of Christ and yet deny his virgin birth and bodily resurrection, two great miracles, we do not understand. Whatever else a man may be in the way of piety and benevolence, if he denies these two things, he cannot be a Christian.

* * *

Grace and good conscience will enable a man to bear any kind of persecution whether inflicted by wicked men or short-sighted and ill-formed Christians, who see no good in anybody except themselves. Let no true man be discouraged, for so persecuted were the Lord's prophets of old.

* * *

The tradesman or manufacturer who makes twenty-five per cent. profit on his goods, and keeps his employees on starvation wages has about as much religion as the farmer who makes twenty bales of cotton a year and gives the Lord only ten dollars. Uncle Simon Peter Richardson said the man had none.

* * *

Next to the wreck of men through the use of liquor is the wreck of men at gambling. In one season it is affirmed that "stealings in and about New York city amounting to over $3,000,000 were traced directly to race gambling." Yet men who interfere to save young lives from "bookmakers," dive-keepers and other money snatchers are branded as fanatics and enemies of personal liberty.

* * *

It is false and dangerous theology that leads a man to believe that once converted he is forever safe, whatever may be his business ethics. He may think it no harm to overcharge some customers or under-weigh goods, to make up losses on other customers, but this practice is as much a violation of the rules of common honesty as if he had secretly filched from his neighbor's pocket.

WHAT KIND OF TEACHERS SHALL WE HAVE?

The Correspondence School has undertaken to supply our Annual Conferences with university lecturers, thus virtually bringing university training within reach of all the preachers. True, it is limited, but it gives the preachers who never went through college an opportunity to attend lectures. That is some gain.

The object in view may be all right, but we feel free to say that if our Conferences are to be turned into classes to be lectured as students, the Conferences should have some voice in the selection of teachers. Students generally attend the university of their choice. They do not congregate at a given point and allow the schools and colleges around to send them instructors. The Correspondence School is young—not yet sufficiently established in the confidence of the whole Church as to be able at all times to send the right man to the right place.

There are numbers of men, great and good, in our Church at whose feet we would gladly sit and learn. They are men versed in theology and in the doctrines and polity of our Church. They understand Biblical criticism, and are sound in the faith. There is nothing destructive in what they preach or write. They neither directly, nor in any roundabout way raise doubts in the minds of their hearers or readers as to the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, in whole or in part. They fully accept the supernatural in our religion, even the virgin birth of Christ and his resurrection from the grave. Such men might be profitably engaged to lecture on these and other great themes of the Gospel.

There are other men among us, learned, and well worthy of confidence so far as moral character is concerned, but we would not accept them as teachers. We could no more trust a man as a lecturer for young preachers who denies certain historical parts of the Holy Scriptures than one who denies the supernatural in religion, nor one that ridicules the idea of praying for the coming of the Holy Ghost upon the Church than one who denies the deity of Christ. And we are afraid of the man who is so liberal as to declare that the whole of orthodoxy consists in loving service for our fellow-men.

No matter what a certain class of men say about their personal faith in Christ, if, being critics, they prune and expurgate God's Word until an edition of it printed in long primer type can be carried in the vest-pocket, they are not the men to train our young preachers.

Committees and Boards having charge of important Church interests may do good by securing lecturers, as was the case at the late session of the Louisiana Conference, when Dr. McMurray, of St. Louis, talked on "The Down-Town Church," and Prof. Thos. Carter interested the people on "Wesley and His Work." These were profitable discourses, well worth hearing. We should like to have more of the same sensible kind, but we should regret to see all the afternoons of our Conference sessions taken up by self-appointed teachers with dissertations, philosophical and speculative, breathing the atmosphere of German schoolrooms, rather than that of the Gospel pulpit.

If our university men do not like to hear young preachers in the afternoon, "put up at random," let them remember that they "do not have to," but that others do like it, it has been the making of many preachers, and never did the Church any harm, except when the committee on public worship accidentally put up a higher critic, or one who thought he was.

HACKING AT THE OLIVE BRANCH.

Dr. Spencer, of the Central Christian Advocate, Kansas City, has charged Dr. Winton, of Nashville, with "hacking at the olive branch." If Dr. Spencer meant to say that Dr. Winton was cutting at federation or organic union "irregularly, and without skill or definite purpose," he missed the mark. Dr. Winton simply told some facts, and showed that the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church among the white population of the South was hurtful to fraternity and federation. Dr. Spencer feels sure that Dr. Winton's work will retard the approach of the churches towards each other.

If Dr. Spencer intends his readers to believe that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is the offending party, and that his Church is holding out the olive branch in token of willingness to forgive and to receive the erring one back into the fold, again he is mistaken. The South erred no more than did the North, for, when the separation took place "the South separated from the North in no sense in which the North did not separate from the South." If there ever was anything like "hacking at the olive branch," it was when Dr. Lovick Pierce, with that emblem of peace in his hands, was disdainfully rejected by the Northern General Conference of 1848. There it was hacked from the hands of Dr. Pierce, and the Northern brethren buried it, and kept it underground twenty-two long years. It illy becomes one on that side to charge anybody down South with hacking at it to-day.

If the olive branch means organic union, then let Dr. Winton and everybody else hack away at it until our Northern brethren show some disposition to clear away the obstacles to union which are found in every section of the South. If the purpose of the North is to force organic union upon us with all that such union means with the Methodist Episcopal Church as it is constituted to-day, then the brother who is so grieved over the hacking at the olive branch will never live to see a mixed delegation sit together in a General Conference. Union cannot be considered with the understanding that the difficulties will be removed after union is effected. It would be as great a risk as a good woman takes who marries a bad man with the hope of reforming him. Get the difficulties out of the way first; then meet us like brethren, and see who will hack the olive branch.

METHODISM IN NEW ORLEANS.

An article on "Southern Methodism in New Orleans from a Layman's Standpoint," which will be found in another column, presents a hopeful view of the situation. He gives due credit to all the pastors mentioned, and to others in authority. But in enumerating the churches he failed to name two, the Louisiana Avenue and the Rayne Memorial, both of which are centrally located, and factors to be considered in naming the moral forces of the city. In point of membership, according to the latest statistics in hand, Louisiana Avenue stands fourth, and in payment of salary it stands third. Under the faithful labors of Rev. John C. Sligh, the Church is gaining ground. In point of membership Rayne Memorial stands second, and in payment of salary it stands first, and considerably ahead in payments to the Church benevolences. Rayne Memorial prospered greatly under the administration of Dr.

La Prade. Prosperity was continuous under the three years' pastorate of Dr. Wilkinson. The present pastor, Rev. Theo. Copeland, who has been in charge but a few weeks, rejoices in the prospect before him—is preaching to large congregations, and is giving great satisfaction.

Another important fact should be noted, in order to give credit where it properly belongs. Our correspondent states that a parsonage for Carondelet Street Church was purchased during the pastorate of Dr. Davis. That is true. But it was purchased with money collected and placed in bank years ago—at least as far back as the pastorate of Dr. F. N. Parker.

Brother Davis was active and remarkably successful in all the work at old Carondelet, and we are sure he will not feel hurt at having attention called to the oversight of our correspondent. He turned over the Church to his successor, Rev. J. E. Wray, in splendid condition, and Brother Wray is still keeping it up, and carrying it forward, not only giving his people preaching of the highest order, but is active in every good word and work. We desire and pray that the hopes of Brother Wray and the prophecy of Bishop Morrison, who is interested in the work, may be fully realized.

A CARD FROM BISHOP HOSS.

My Dear Dr. Boswell: The note which I am about to write gives me great pain. Owing to my visit to the Brazil Mission Conference last summer, and to the prevalence of the yellow fever epidemic last fall, I was unable to give any service to the North Mississippi Conference prior to its session in December. This fact rendered me all the more solicitous to spend some weeks attending district conferences there in the coming month of April, and I promised so to do. But within the past few days I have been summoned to attend an imperative meeting of connectional importance, and feel bound to let nothing stand in the way of my obedience to the call. Besides this, I am still suffering not a little from the spell of the grip which attacked me in the early winter. It will be necessary for me, therefore, to cancel my Mississippi engagements. I have no words to express my regret over the fact, and I beg the brethren concerned not to think for one moment that I am dealing lightly or carelessly with them. The fellowship which I had with them during the Conference was in every way so brotherly that I hold it among the holy memories of my life. For months I have looked forward to meeting them again, and now that the opportunity for doing so has been withdrawn my disappointment is keen beyond measure.

With fraternal regards. E. E. Hoss.

ANOTHER MARTYR.

A heresy trial is on hand in the Episcopal Church. A prominent clergyman in the Diocese of Western New York has been charged with denying the divinity of our Lord, holding to the idea that he "was born of a simple father and mother," and that the common belief of his virgin-birth and bodily resurrection were only legends. He stands charged also with the violation of his ordination vows in that the ministers at the altar of the Church, and according to the ritual, while denying the fundamental doctrines on which the Church is founded. The outside world is all agog, and ready to exploit the matter in a sensational way, and would make believe that the Church, instead of the clergyman, is on trial. The Church has a well-defined creed, and polity, and those who minister in that Church are required to certify their belief, and the question to be settled is not whether the faith of the Episcopal Church is true or false, but is the man charged guilty of departing from the faith of the Church. The Southern Churchman says: "This is the whole sum and substance of the case." Of course the man charged will be acquitted by the secular press before the day of trial, and the Church will be condemned. If, however, the Church Court finds the man guilty, he will be hailed as a hero and martyr.

PERSONAL.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Byhalia, Miss., from his small charge has given us a club of twenty-three new names. He has our thanks.

Rev. S. J. Parrish has been preaching for a week at Carrollton Avenue Church, to the delight and edification of the congregation.

We have received an obituary of a little babe, but the name of the writer is not given. This, of course, will keep us from printing it.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., has brought us under obligation for another good list of subscribers, making in all fifty-three names he has sent, and nine renewals. That is good work.

Rev. W. W. Moore, of Montrose High School, has sent us a fine list of readers, and is working to secure another. We trust he may succeed.

Rev. L. B. Hankins brings us under obligation for a club of twenty subscribers. No wonder he is in good spirits, and is hopeful of a happy and successful year.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine is delightfully situated at Wilson, La., and is well pleased with his charge and the outlook. He has an open field and a fine opportunity in that thriving town.

Rev. R. O. Weir came to the city last Monday for the purpose of meeting his wife, who has been on a visit to friends in Alabama. She arrived in the city on Tuesday morning.

One of our gifted and highly educated preachers gives us this appreciated compliment: "The Advocate is much improved, and it has that high moral tone every true Christian appreciates."

Rev. O. P. Armour, of Aberdeen Circuit, is rejoicing in the blessings of God upon his work, which he says "is advancing on every line." He is doing also some good work for the Advocate.

Rev. N. J. Roberts, our pastor at Lecompte, La., rejoices in the prospect of a successful year's work. He has made some improvements on churches and parsonage, and is planning for a general revival.

Rev. B. P. Fullilove has sent in "more subscribers." He has good congregations, and his hearers are responsive. He is also circulating good books. Altogether, prospects for a good year are bright.

Dr. Tigert, Book Editor, gives out the full statistics for the year 1905, and has furnished them on a printed slip, as we suppose, to all the church papers. We have been kindly remembered with a copy, and will print an abstract next week.

Rev. J. N. Flynn, pastor of our Church at Slate Springs, Miss., has been hindered in his work on account of sickness in his family, but nevertheless he has done something. Among other things he has materially aided the Advocate.

Rev. H. W. May met with a kind reception on entering the pastorate at Waterproof, La., and declares "the outlook is hopeful for a good year." Were it not that way, Brother May would win success in spite of difficulties. He loves his Church and works for it.

A half hour in the company of Rev. Theo. Copeland a few days ago was much enjoyed. He is in the best of spirits, is sowing good Gospel seed, and confidently expects to reap an abundant harvest. We trust he may succeed even beyond his own expectations. His parish is large, but he is a man of great energy.

Rev. J. J. Garner, of West, Miss., has been industriously engaged in working for the Advocate, and has secured thirty new subscribers, and the renewal of nine others. This is remarkably good work, and we thank Brother Garner for the interest he has manifested. We trust our new readers will be pleased and profited.

Rev. J. M. Morse informs us of the death of Rev. M. J. McDonald, a local elder of the Walnut Grove Circuit. He died at the residence of his son at Beech Springs, Miss., in the 84th year of his age. He had been a local preacher sixty-nine years. In all his ministerial life not one word of censure was ever said against him. His last words were: "Bless the Lord, O! my soul." A good man has gone from us.

SARDIS DISTRICT.

Dear Brother Boswell: I have just returned home from the last Quarterly Conference of the first round of the Sardis District. With few exceptions, the churches have paid in full on salaries for the first quarter. More than half have raised the salaries. It is nothing unusual to have penitents at the altar in our Quarterly Conferences. A revival spirit seems to be everywhere over the district. The annex from the Holly Springs District received me with Christian courtesy. They are a fine people, and are now with their own kind. I find but one class of people in the entire district, and that is the best. It is perfectly delightful to be among them. I shall help increase the circulation of your paper throughout the year.

Our District Conference has been postponed on account of not being able to secure the services of Bishop Hoss for the dates published in April.

Your Brother,
H. T. GAINES.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To the members of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference: The usual rate of one and one-third fare plus 25 cents on the certificate plan has been granted all delegates and visitors who attend the meeting of the W. H. M. Society at Collins, May 2-6, by the following railroads, viz.: I. C., Y. and M. V., A. and V., N. O. and N. E., M. and O., L. and N., G. and S. I.

Let me urge all delegates to get the standard certificate. It is not sufficient that you be present. Unless fifty use the certificate, they are worthless to the others, and all must pay full fare. MRS. B. F. LEWIS, Cor. Sec.

PLEASE NOTICE.

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference will convene in Alexandria, April 19-22, opening on the morning of the 19th. We can secure reduced rates if there are fifty in attendance, provided each person present has a certificate that full fare has been paid going. Delegates and visitors from auxiliaries will please send their names as soon as possible to Mrs. Wm. Hill, Alexandria, La.; also to Mrs. E. A. Dicks, 4525 Pryiania St., New Orleans.

MRS. S. A. MONTGOMERY, Pres.
MRS. E. A. DICKS, Cor. Sec.

NOTICE.

The Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference will hold its Twelfth Annual Meeting at Collins, May 2-6. The opening service will be held on the evening of Wednesday, May 2. Every Auxiliary is urged to send delegates, with a written report.

The names of all delegates and visitors to this meeting should be sent promptly to Mrs. R. S. Cross, Collins. Visitors will be cordially entertained in the homes of Collins.

MRS. T. B. HOLLOMAN, Pres.
MRS. C. R. McQUEEN, Rec. Sec.

NOTICE.

To Members of the W. F. S. of the Mississippi Conference: Easter Sunday has been selected by the President as "Scarritt Day" for the Mississippi Conference. I have programmes and leaflets, which can be had upon application. If this day cannot be observed, let the societies take the nearest one to it. The collections from this service are to go to the fund for the scholarship at the Scarritt Bible and Training School.

MRS. A. F. WATKINS, Cor. Sec.

THE RUSTON SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

The first of the series of institutes planned by the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board, March 22-23, was a great success. Twenty-one preacers were in attendance; at least fifteen Sunday schools were represented by one or more lay workers. In addition, we had a constant attendance from the schools of other denominations, white and colored, in Ruston. One colored brother received his certificate of honor for attending all the sessions, six in number.

Dr. and Mrs. Hamill were on hand, and, in their experienced way, packed the limited time of the two days with studies that cannot but be productive of great results in this section.

We thank the Board for the Institute, and for placing it in Ruston.

R. H. WYNN.

NOTICE.

Those expecting to attend the Forest District Conference, to be held at Philadelphia, April 27-29, will confer a favor on me by notifying me what time they expect to arrive. The trains arrive here: Going north, 11:45 a.m. and 4:15 p.m. Going south, 10 a.m. and 3:20 p.m. T. J. O'NEIL, P. C.

MISSIONARY INSTITIUTE.

The Missionary Institute for the Natchez District, Mississippi Conference, will be held in Hamburg, Miss., Wednesday and Thursday, April 18 and 19. The opening sermon will be preached Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock, by the Rev. W. D. Dominick. The Institute will open Wednesday morning at 8:30 o'clock. Let all the preachers be present at the opening service. B. F. JONES, P. E.

COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the North Mississippi Conference met in West Point, Miss., March 6 to review and indorse applications to the Parent Board. The following were indorsed and forwarded: Byhalia, $300; Shuqualak, $300, and a loan of $200; Shannon, $200. V. C. CURTIS, Sec'y.
